"AS A LITTLE CHILD."

*"Thou must be born again!" O thou whose voice
In thunder tones would visit all the earth,
In lightning words would preach this heavenly birth,*

*So men may weep where most they should rejoice,
Go thou to Bethlehem, and see the child
New born, beneath its mother's beaming smile,—
Look at thine own and ponder there the while
It laughs, for life alone exulting wild!*

*That child, it has no memory of wrong;
That child, it fears not coming days of woe;
That child, it knows not that days come and go;
That child knows not that hours are short or long.
Better than thou to care-worn anxious men
That careless child will preach the "to be born again."*

The Doukhobors

THEIR RUSSIAN HISTORY AND THEIR SETTLEMENT IN CANADA

BY JOSEPH ELKINTON

8vo, about 300 pages, profusely illustrated, $2.00. Ready January 20th.

THIS WORK is first of all an account of the author's personal experiences with the Doukhobors during the summer of 1902, when he visited their settlement in Canada, and conferred with their leading men concerning the questions which now confront the body. The stirring scenes of the emigration from Russia to Canada are vividly presented, and are illustrated with pictures taken by William Bellows, while Joseph Elkinton himself took the many pictures of the new Doukhobor-land and its citizens.

As the Russian history of this unique people is essential to a sympathetic comprehension of their characteristics, the author has compiled a painstaking compendium of their history in the land of their origin, including the peculiar institutions by which in a measure they were formed, and which they have largely transplanted to the land of their adoption.

Nearly nine thousand Boers, it is said, are preparing to emigrate to America, and will settle in Colorado, New Mexico and Texas. The representative of this movement is Samuel Pearson, late quartermaster-general of the South African Republic, whose headquarters are in New York.

Public sentiment has been aroused so much of late in Virginia that the House of Delegates passed, by an overwhelming majority, the Cabell child-labor bill, which forbids the employment of any child under twelve years of age, and regulates the employment of children between twelve and fourteen. The bill will doubtless become a law. The age limit fixed upon is very low, but it will do much toward improving the conditions now existing.

It is only forty-eight years since the first transatlantic cable was laid, and at that time the country was enthusiastic over the first success of Cyrus W. Field, mass meetings being held in many places to celebrate the wonderful achievement. The first link of the Pacific cable was completed last week with little more than local interest, and the news of Marconi's success in sending not merely isolated signals, but a message across the Atlantic ocean without artificial conductors, was received in a matter-of-fact way. This change of demonstration on the part of the public cannot be attributed to their lack of interest in scientific development, but to a universal faith in the possibilities of genius.

The scarcity and high price of coal has greatly stimulated the inventive faculty of Americans in the invention of fuel substitutes and of machinery for the making of briquettes from combustible materials now allowed to go to waste. Hundreds of patents have been filed and the development of industry in these directions is to be expected. A combination of the manufacturers of briquette-making machinery in Germany has also been formed, which will soon establish a branch office in New York city. There is no lack of material in this country for this purpose. Western New York, New Jersey, New England, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Oregon and Washington have vast beds of peat; the Dakotas and the Gulf States have deposits of lignite and kindred substances, and the great culm banks in the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania can be utilized.

No poem in recent years has cut down into the quick of a nation's policy more deeply than does Kipling's new poem on England's alliance with Germany to force a debt from Venezuela. It is called "The Rowers," and is as follows:

THE ROWERS.*

The banked oars fell an hundred strong,
And backed and threshed and ground,
But bitter was the rowers' song
As they brought the warboat round.

They had no heart for the rally and roar
That makes the whaleback smoke
When the great blades cleave and hold and leave
As one on the racing stroke.

They sang, "What reckoning do ye keep,
And steer her by what star,
If we come unscathed from the Southern deep
To be wrecked on the Baltic bar?

"Last night ye swore our voyage was done,
But seaward still we go;
And ye tell us now of a secret vow
Ye have made with an open foe:

"That we must lie off a lightless coast
And haul and back and veer
At the will of the breed that have wronged us most,
For a year and a year and a year.

"In sight of peace from the narrow seas,
O'er half the world to run,
With a cheated crew to league anew
With the Goth and the Shameless Hun."

"There was never a shame in Christendie
They laid not to our door;
And ye say we must take the winter sea,
And sail with them once more.

"Look South. The gale is scarce o'er past
That stripped and lay us down
When we stood forth. But they stood fast,
And prayed to see us drown.

"The dead they mocked are scarcely cold;
Our wounds are bleeding yet;
And ye tell us now that our strength is sold
To help them press for a debt.

"Neath all the flags of all mankind
That use upon the seas,
Was there no other fleet to find,
That ye strike hands with these?

"Of Evil times that men could choose
On evil fate to fall,
What brooding judgment let ye loose
To pick the worst of all?"

WHAT MAKES A MAN A CHRISTIAN.

THE first great Christian controversy grew out of the question: Can a man be saved without circumcision? "No, he cannot," answered the Judaizers. "Yes, he can," answers Paul. "Circumcision avails not a whit—but a new creation. Salvation means becoming a new creature in Christ. For this, nothing is necessary except faith and obedience, which produce the fruits of the new life—love, joy, peace, forbearance, gentleness, goodness, faith, kindness, self-control." This is Paul's gospel of freedom in a nutshell. The soul is saved by its attitude toward Christ, and no amount of ceremonial can profit anything. The entire mass of ceremonial of every sort is only a weight and a burden, which Christ has nailed once for all to His cross.

This simple view of religion, which is so clearly and fervidly expressed in the Galatian epistle, was the central theme of the early Friends. They differed from their generation in almost everything, but most of all in this, that they believed in no ceremonial whatever. They went straight back to this simple Pauline idea that salvation is new creation. It takes place directly through faith in Christ and obedience to His will. The Reformation had cut away a lot of ceremonial, but it had left two sacraments which were supposed to be as essential to salvation as circumcision had seemed to be for the Jew. "No," said George Fox, "they are not essential. They can do nothing to free a soul from sin. They do not avail at all. The man who is saved is saved by believing in Christ and by following Him. Everything else is a part of the bondage from which Christ delivered us."

This gospel of spiritual freedom came as a shock to the ears of all ceremonial Christians, and whoever raised his voice for it found a dungeon as his reward. It seemed impossible that religion was so simple and easy. Only obeying Christ! Only walking in the Spirit! Only aiming at a Christlike life! No pomp, no ceremonies, no crutches to lean on!

Steadily, though slowly, the Christian world is moving in this direction. More persons every year realize that Christianity is nothing more nor less than a life of obedience to Christ. Ceremonial counts for less and less. Much interest has recently been aroused by the outspoken words of Dr. R. P. Johnson, a Baptist clergyman of New York city, speaking at the Baptist Church Congress, on the question, "Can there be a Church without Baptism?" He says:

One's answer must depend upon one's views of the efficacy of baptism. I assume that . . . it is essential neither to salvation nor to the highest type of Christian character. To make baptism essential to church membership is to perpetuate a cleavage in the body of Christ along the line of ceremony merely. It would compel us, for the sake of a ceremonial observance, to disregard the fundamental Biblical principle of the right and duty of individual freedom of Scriptural interpretation. The policy of receiving members without baptizing them has been followed by many English Baptist churches.

The New York "Outlook" heartily commends this position, and goes on to say, what is undoubtedly a fact, that neither baptism nor the Lord's Supper was originally a Church ordinance. It declares that not one of the eleven disciples had ever received Christian baptism, and that there is no reason to think that more than four of them had received John's baptism. "The Lord's Supper was," it continues, "a simple festal meal, generally held in private houses, and in memory of the Master." All this indicates that there is a strong and deep movement away from the externals of Christianity toward an appreciation of the heart and spirit of it. We are slowly returning to the lofty position of Paul, that to be a Christian is to "live by the faith of the Son of God."

TWO VALUABLE CONTRIBUTIONS TO FRIENDS' LITERATURE.*

It is not possible to tell the complete history of any one of the American colonies without dealing with the Quakers. After 1656 they began to appear on these shores, and at once they became a part of colonial history. There are few more stirring chapters in our early history than the story of the courage and suffering of these men and women who obeyed the call of the Lord to proclaim the Gospel of spiritual freedom, and who staked their lives in behalf of the sacred principle of toleration. Much has been written on this strange "invasion" of the colonies, but much still remains to be told.

We have before us two excellent contributions on the part Friends played in early colonial history. Albert Cook Myers, in a voluminous book, has told in a fresh and graphic way of the rise of Quakerism in Ireland, and how in a later period these sturdy, much-enduring Irish Friends came over to enjoy the freedom and share the fortunes of Penn's Commonwealth by the Delaware. His book will be of permanent value to all future historians, and it will appeal with especial interest to all families which trace descent to these Quaker immigrants from Ireland, for the book is a storehouse for genealogical research.

That which will interest the general readers most is the story of the rise of Quakerism in Ireland, and especially the valiant part taken by William Edmundson, who is rightly called "the father of Irish Quakerism." After George Fox himself it would be difficult to pick out two men who bore the brunt of the battle more heroically or who did more to spread the new truth than did William Edmundson, the "hero" of this book, and Christopher Holder, the "hero" of the "Holders of Holderness."

To no other one individual was the spread of Quakerism in New England so much due as to this man who suffered every torture which the Puritan ingenuity could devise, who at least twice returned to Massachusetts when the death penalty was threatened him if he returned, and who never knew what it was to be afraid of what man could do when the Lord called him. Few novels contain more marvelous situations, more unexpected deliverances, than one finds in the true history of this father of New England Quakerism—this gifted young man from Holderness. He came over in that remarkable ship, the "Woodhouse," whose captain, Robert Fowler, was directed all the way across the Atlantic by the Lord, "like as He did Noah's ark, wherein He shut up a few righteous persons and landed them safe even at the hill Ararat." This Christopher Holder was the author of the first Declaration of Faith ever issued by any Friend. It is such an interesting document that we shall print it in a future issue of the paper. "The Holders of Holderness" has been prepared as a history of the Holder family in America, but more than half the volume is devoted to the stirring narrative of this noble pioneer, whose cropped ear was the badge of a heroism not to be matched on any battlefield.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We begin to-day a new volume of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. We realize anew, as we have done each year, the great responsibility which rests upon us, as we take up the work and the problems of another year. We earnestly pray that the Head of the Church may bless every meeting in our country and may give grace and power to all our readers. We expect to make this the best volume of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, until some future year sees a still better one, and we hope each laborer in our wide vineyard will take up his tasks and duties in the same spirit—expecting to pass all former goals. Our next week's issue will contain a review of the year's work and its statistics by the editor.

THE death of John Collins, in his 89th year, deserves special notice. He was the oldest graduate of Haverford, and he had been present at most of the great events in the college's history. His father was a famous printer and publisher, having received the royal appointment as printer to his majesty, George III., in 1770. John Collins had considerable talent as a poet and painter, and he frequently contributed poems to THE AMERICAN FRIEND and "Friends' Review." His best service in these later years of his life has been with the school children in Philadelphia and other cities, whom he always succeeded in interesting and entertaining with his peace and temperance talks. He was, too, till the last, an active worker among prisoners, and the sick and afflicted. His life was long and the years of it were filled with the fragrance of good deeds, which sprang out of his living faith in Jesus Christ.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

JERUSALEM.

BY CHARLES COLLINS.

Upon our arrival at the railway station we were escorted by the American Consul and his wife, the dragoman, and two of the kawases of the consulate, to our hotel. As the Arabian horses drew our carriages rapidly towards the city we had some fine views of the hills with their groves of olive and fig trees. In a few minutes, with the Valley of Hinnom immediately below us, we caught a passing glimpse of the Moab Hills beyond the Dead Sea, with their dark blue outlines dimly visible. On our right we saw the neat substantial buildings of the British Ophthalmic Hospital, and on the other side of the road we saw the Montefiore cottages. We now descended into the Valley of Hinnom, passing a large empty reservoir, once called the lower pool of Gihon, now Birket es-Sultan. Above us, with its steep slopes, was Mount Sion, along which ran the city wall, and which is crowned by a partially ruined fortress, which is still often called the Tower of David. Thus approaching by a steep incline we saw the city above us lighted by the autumn afternoon sun and filling our hearts with wonder and admiration as, passing through the Jaffa Gate, we gazed upon the walls and streets of this sacred place. The streets were alive with people wearing the tarbush or fez, and there were numerous camels and donkeys, which are so universal in Asiatic cities, as well as some dogs.

In our walks about the city we have realized the force and truthfulness of the first part of the second verse of the one hundred and twenty-fifth Psalm: "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem."

On three sides—east, south and west—the city is high above deep, precipitous valleys. To the north there is no valley, but the hills gradually ascend. On the east the city has for a boundary the Valley of the Kidron, or Valley of Jehoshaphat; on the south and west is the Valley of Hinnom, or Gehenna, with its olive trees. Until one has seen these valleys, which are from three hundred to four hundred feet deep, and studied them, it is difficult to appreciate their depth and the steepness of their sides and the consequent prominent situation of the city.

The stone in the vicinity of Jerusalem consists of limestone of different degrees of hardness. There is an abundance of soft, white limestone which contains fossils and is frequently striped with bands of flint. It was much used in the ancient buildings of the city. Flint is very abundant. Then there is a harder stone also, which is marked with bands of flint, and lastly a hard, dolomitic limestone, often pink and white, the pink being oftentimes predominant, so as to appear almost red. This stone is then called Santa Croce marble, and many of the modern buildings are made from it. All the buildings are stone, owing to the great scarcity of wood.

The natural water supply of the city is far from abundant, and we have visited a number of reservoirs and cisterns cut out of the rock and sometimes built of masonry. There is only one natural spring, and that is just southeast of the city west of the Kidron Valley. This spring is called by the Christians the "Virgin's Fountain," from a tradition that Mary washed Christ's clothes in its waters when He was an infant. The Moslems call it "Ain Umm ed Deraj" ("Mother of the Steps"), and the Eastern Jews name it "Aaron's (or the priests') Bath." This Virgin's Spring, also called Gihon, is situated beneath what is known as the Ophel Ridge, in a rocky cave (twelve feet deep in the eastern face of the hill), reached by flights of twenty-eight steps. The water now flows intermittently, according to the season and the rainfall, from a few hours to a day, or even two days. This is due to a natural syphon which connects the spring with an underground basin. It is probable that in former times the supply of water was considerably greater, owing possibly to a greater rainfall and the more even distribution of rain before the forests were destroyed and the fewer efforts made to collect or divert all the rain falling on the mountains above, and the consequent sinking of the water into the ground and finding its way to the supplies of the spring. In ancient times the spring is supposed to have risen into an open natural or artificial pool, and thence flowing down as a brook, watered the gardens of the King's Vale, now cultivated by the women of Siloam, or, as the Arabs call it, Silwâm. A probable residue of the water passed down during a large part of the year into a lower pool. From the Virgin's Spring an aqueduct runs south in a rock-cut tunnel, 1708 feet long, 2 feet wide and from 2 to 16 feet high, through the Ophel Ridge to the Pool of Siloam. The Pool of Siloam is a rock-cut reservoir, with masonry retaining walls, measuring 52 feet by 18 feet, having a rock-cut channel leading southeast to a larger pool (the "Old Pool"). The water of Siloam was originally sweet, but it has been fouled and made bitter since the twelfth century. From the reservoir the water runs southward some 450 yards to the Bir Eyyub (Job's, or Joab's, Well), a well 125 feet deep. Northwest of the city, at the head of the Valley of Hinnom, is the rock-cut Mamilla Pool. This is at present almost always dry. Lower down the same valley, opposite the southwest corner of the present walls, is Birket es-Sultan, nearly 600 feet in length. This area was probably never a pool, but was used as a collecting ground for a large rock-cut cistern at the lower end. It is thought that Birket es-Sultan was constructed by the German knights in 1170 A.D., but was repaired by the Sultan Suleiman Ibn Selim 1520-1566 A.D. Inside the western wall of the city is the Patriarch's Pool (the ancient Amygdalon or "Tower Pool"). North of the temple area are the Twin Pools, made by roofing in part of the ancient fosse, and Birket Israel, measuring 360 by 130 feet, built probably after 70 A.D. The Birket Israel has been identified as the site of our Lord's miracle recorded in John 5: 3, but another pool, a little way to the north, has been found to better correspond to the descriptions of the Pool of Bethesda. A short distance to the northeast, outside the city, is the Birket Hamman Sitti Mariam, probably medieval. Another reservoir has been found north of Birket Israel, called the Inner Pool, identified with the site of Bethesda mentioned above. Pilate built three aqueducts. One led from the Pools of Solomon, seven miles to the temple; a second led from the same place to the Birket Mamilla; the third, leading from the north, collected surface drainage, and ran underground to the temple enclosure. In the latter were thirty great reservoirs, with a capacity of 10,000,000 gallons. One of these great underground cisterns is estimated to hold 3,000,000 gallons.*

We have been visiting a number of Oriental cities, but had not until our arrival here seen many of the Eastern Jews. But now daily we pass by or see numbers of these children of Abraham, wearing long curls down their thin cheeks, just in front of their ears. They usually wear black soft felt hats or derbys and long cloaks or coats. Their hair and beards are generally long. Owing to the sacred character of the city, there are numbers of representatives of many of the various religious sects living in Jerusalem, and the city is essentially religious in its character and interests. It is not a commercial center by any means, nor is the immediate neighborhood particularly adapted to agriculture.

There are so many different races of men to be seen, as well as nationalities, that one is constantly entertained by observing the various striking peculiarities. Here and there, in and out of the town, we see Abyssinians, with their faces as black as coal, and even their lips black instead of red, as we so often see in the African race. Contrasted with these we see the bronzed Syrians or Palestinians and Arabs, with skins so dark brown that one is reminded of the American Indian. Very often, in passing about the city, one sees several classes of priests, with their peculiar dress, indicating to what religious order they belong, as, for instance, the Greek, Latin or Roman Catholic, Armenian, Abyssinian and Moslem. The natives, for the most part, seem to regard dirt as cleanliness, or at least appear to disregard the importance of neatness and its attendant benefits. We feel impressed to say that many of them are like overgrown children, who spend hours bargaining and disputing over what appear to us trifles. The native system of education seems to be the cultivation of the memory and not the development of the reasoning powers, with the consequent logical deductions.

Among many interesting and novel sights, one particularly has been brought to our notice, namely, the tremendous weights men carry on their backs about the streets, making pack animals of themselves. The women carry jars full of water and large, circular, shallow baskets, filled with fruit or vegetables, on their heads, walking along steadily with a dignified, graceful poise of the body, and without the use of either hand to steady the article they are thus taking from place to place. The people do not as a rule appear to be in much of a hurry, and spend much time talking, with brief quarrels. The Turkish soldiers and citizens are usually to be seen in the streets, mingling with the population.

The fellahin, that is, the peasants, both men and women, are frequently seen going about with bare arms and feet, and even now, in Twelfth month, when the weather is cold, no change is made. The men wear the keffiyeh, a square of thin cotton or silk, thrown over the head and kept in place by a heavy twisted cord. Instead of woolen trousers, the usual costume is a kind of coat, with long skirts reaching nearly to the ankles, and confined at the waist by a scarf. Over this long coat is worn in cool weather a coarsely-woven kimona-shaped cloak, usually with broad brown-and-white stripes. The Bedouins wear a similar costume. The native peasant women wear on their heads in cool weather a kind of handkerchief or shawl. For a dress they wear a coarse blue skirt and jacket, with short, wide sleeves, and with a coarsely-woven sleeveless coat worn over it. When they do not go barefoot a large, low shoe, with raw-hide sole, is worn without stockings.

The shops or bazaars on Christian's, David and Jew streets are very small, and open directly upon the streets where people passing by can look in and see pretty much everything that goes on. On the Jaffa Road are some good European shops or stores. In the native bazaars one can see the manufacture of shoes, harness, olive wood articles, sweets, metal, mother-of-pearl and amber goods, and other products of the native skill. Nearly all ordinary necessities can be bought very easily in Jerusalem, either in the bazaars or European stores.

The streets are for the most part very narrow, occasionally dark, crooked and steep. Some of the streets, where there is an incline, are paved with stone blocks laid in steps four or five feet apart. Most of the streets have no sidewalks, and are often covered for a short distance by bridges from one house to another. Donkeys, dogs and camels are almost constantly to be seen, the donkeys and camels carrying heavy loads, and the dogs fighting and sleeping in the sun. Large men are often seen riding on donkeys which are so small that one wonders that they are able to carry such loads. The Arabs generally drive them with a stick instead of a bridle.

In the fall one of the most striking features of the hills and fields which surround the city is the great dryness of the land and lack of verdure. Everything almost, except the olive trees and cacti, is very brown and dusty. This gives the hills, which are covered with rocks and stones, a greyish appearance when the sun is shining on them, which changes as the sun sets into a most beautiful purple color. This fades rapidly away as darkness comes on. Nevertheless, when the rain comes, the flowers, such as crocuses and daisies, which we find in large quantities, spring up through the moist earth and show their delicate lavender or white petals. The grass begins to sprout, and everything seems transformed into brightness and freshness.

It was our privilege to be in the city during the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles, which lasts for a week. The people build booths on balconies and roofs, in which the men sleep, making the framework of sticks and using branches, matting and rugs to cover the roofs and form the sides. From the ceilings are hung oranges and lemons in celebration of the ceremony. Where there are yards of sufficient size, tents are put up in place of the booths.

On the 17th of Eleventh month the birthday of the Sultan was celebrated by firing a number of salutes at midday from a small cannon on the Tower of David and by the decoration of buildings with flags. In the evening an illumination was made by burning oil in receptacles, the number of which corresponded to the age of the Sultan.

Many who come here from America for a short time are disappointed in Jerusalem, expecting it to be like a European city, with its luxuries. They find most of the streets narrow and poorly paved, its conveniences limited, its contending sects bigoted. But there is another feeling for those who live here sufficiently long to have a fitting appreciation of the deeper associations of the city and to realize its beauties. When walking about Jerusalem and up and down the Via Dolorosa the thought presents itself that right here the Saviour walked, taught, healed the sick, and the tragedy of His life was finished for the salvation of the world. Perhaps it is not too much to say that no city in the world is so full of historical and sacred interest as this the beloved of our Lord and Master.

Jerusalem.

SOME NOTES FROM THOMAS B. REED'S LETTERS.

A life-long friend of Thomas B. Reed has sent us some extracts from personal letters to show how genuine was that statesman's interest in the cause of Peace. We give them with the writer's own comments:

"He wrote in the last number of the 'North American Review' that 'Europe will force such a union, by the very nature of things, like our own, which will banish armies and wars.'

"On March 10th, 1898, he was writing to me how little credit he had received for his service in the cause of peace from peace societies, while Governor Long, the Secretary of War, was their idol. He said in a note at the end of the letter: 'Does thee remember the book of Jonathan Dymond? I have never forgotten it, and have it yet.' I then began to study what he meant, for I had forgotten it, and I remembered that thirty-eight years before I had given Dymond's 'Essays' to him in college.

"I had written to him in 1898, after President McKinley had made a speech in which he said it was manifest destiny that brought on the Spanish War, that I was glad that Divine Providence was responsible for the war, that I had supposed hitherto that it was the Republican administration, and we were all in fault; that I was greatly relieved that the broad shoulders of divinity had the load. He said, 'No, it is the devil.' He continues: 'There is something better than the fat of rams or even going to meeting regularly.'

"He then gave me an awful picture of war, a most realistic account of battle in the Orient, and said: 'This is Frye's God.' Frye favored the war.

"In January, 1901, I sent him a pamphlet on war. He said: 'I shall read your book on the subject of war, although Jonathan Dymond made up my mind on it a good many years ago.'

"I had asked him how he regarded Webster's attitude on the question of slavery, resulting in the Rebellion, and told him I had changed views on that subject. He says: 'I think you were quite right in your estimate of Webster's situation.' I had taken the ground that if we had been wise, North and South, the slaves should have been bought with public land sales. We all know that at last it became impossible. He says 'the fact that such a settlement, which now begins to appear reasonable, was utterly impossible on account of the opinions of men on both sides, is a tremendous reflection against the common sense of the race.'"

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A PERILOUS RIDE.

BY AMY E. JOHNSON.

"Whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's."
—Romans 14: 8.

One early morning last September, before the mists had cleared away, a man of 70, though much younger in appearance, hurriedly crossed a railroad track, thinking there might be a telegram from home. He scarcely had time to realize the nearness of an incoming express before he was caught up by the cow-catcher, to which he clung with one arm around an iron brace and one leg about another, thus leaving one hand free that he might wave the umbrella as a signal of distress. Fearing he would lose consciousness as the train was increasing its speed, he laid himself down on the pilot in front of the engine. His voice was lost by the noise of the train, and the waving umbrella was passed unnoticed by the trainmen, flagmen and switchmen at the village stations.

On, on, went the express; forty, fifty miles an hour. Will no one see? He said afterward to his devoted wife that a constant communion was passing between himself and his heavenly Father. "Jesus, I trust Thee, I trust Thee. I belong to Thee. Thou wilt care for Thine own. Peace, perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee." While lying on his back he held a prayer meeting, saying to himself, "Whether I live or die I am the Lord's."

When the train halted he climbed down to find some of the trainmen who would care for him; but they refused to believe his story, and ordered him away. By much persuasion they carried him to a drug store, not yet open, and left him on the ground. Our good brother urged upon these trainmen to accept Christ and be ready for any such experience as this. Physicians, nurses and engineers had the Crucified One presented to them, as they afterwards said, from one suffering and bruised in body, but entirely clear in mind, peaceful and full of faith. He wrote several days after the injury: "Our Father is too good to be unkind and too wise to err. God will bring good out of it somehow. Praise the Lord and bless His holy name." With a consciousness of God's presence and a faith that never faltered, he passed on to the other life and was not, for God took him.

Rev. William B. Osborn, missionary to Africa, India and Australia, coadjutor to William Taylor, founder of the Missionary Training School in Brooklyn, simple, plain and unpolished, was the hero of this ride.

BARCLAY JONES.

Barclay Jones was born on a farm near New London, Ind., Fifth month 15th, 1844. He was the fourth child in a family of seven children. His father was Henry Jones, and his mother was Sussanna Pemberton.

His early education was received in a country school house and New London Academy, which was at that time a Friends' school. Later he attended Raisin Valley Seminary, Adrian, Mich. Before completing his course at Adrian he taught school near his home for several months. After leaving Michigan he went to Le Grand, Iowa, and worked three years at the trade of carpenter.

The seventh of Seventh month, 1870, he was married to Rhoda Kendall, according to the Friends' ceremony, in the old Friends' meeting house at Westfield. To them were born six children, of which the following four are still living, H. Orville, C. Hubert, M. Edna and M. Ethel.

After marriage he settled on a farm near Le Grand, Iowa. Here he proved himself a loyal and faithful member of Friends, and on account of his work was, in 1872, recognized as a minister, in which calling he has cheerfully and gladly engaged for more than thirty years. In 1882, having served his meeting several years as official head he removed to Wauke, Iowa, for a new field of labor. From this place, for several winters he went out and preached the gospel to all parts of his adopted State and in adjoining States.

Near the close of the year 1884 he saw that the needs of the Church demanded that he give up all business relations for the work of the Church. Since that time he has been engaged in pastoral work in the following places: Stuart, Iowa; West Branch, N. Y.; Ida Grove, Iowa; Emporia, Kansas; West Branch, Iowa; Spiceland, Ind.; Traverse City, Mich.; New London, Ind.; Westmoreland, N. Y.; Highland Mills, N. Y., and several other places.

In gospel service he has visited with approved credentials from his home meetings, New York, New England, Canada, Ohio, Indiana, Western, Iowa and Kansas Yearly Meetings.

In evangelistic work he has held a large number of meetings in all of these yearly meetings.

All his children are positive Christians. His aim was that they should all have the benefits of a college education.

On First-day evening, Twelfth month 14th, 1902, he preached a powerful sermon in the meeting house at Highland Mills. On the way home he had an attack of heart trouble, and he passed away the day following. The funeral services were held at Highland Mills, N. Y., and at New London, Ind. His remains were placed in the cemetery at New London, near his parents and relatives, and close to the scene of his youth.

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS, OF PHILADELPHIA
YEARLY MEETING.

All communications should be addressed to

ANNA EASTBURN WILLITS, Editor, 343 E. Main Street, Haddonfield, N. J.

The Executive Committee of the Temperance Association of Friends of Philadelphia met on the 22d, with a large attendance and animated session. Nearly four thousand pages of literature were distributed the past month. It was made known that there had been but one licensed hotel in the beautiful suburban town of Bryn Mawr, Pa., for many years, through the unceasing vigilance of the W. C. T. U.

Williamsport, Pa., clergymen are utilizing street car "ads" to fight the liquor evil.

May the New Year bring to us all strength of body, mind and soul, and a willingness of heart to work afresh in the cause of temperance.

Whittier said of Frances E. Willard:

"She knew the power of banded ill;
She felt that love was stronger still,
And organized for doing good
The world's united womanhood."

The crusade light gleamed first over the United States and Canada; then it became a power to the forces of British womanhood; it spread to Iceland, Australia, Germany, India, Syria, Japan until the women of the world are coming to a mighty sisterhood. They are finding out in every nation that intoxicating drinks and happiness do not dwell together. Let us commemorate these beginnings.

The liquor forces of this country are united, and more resolutely than ever before they are combating our principles. They have succeeded in getting the Vermont Legislature to pass a High License Local Option Referendum Bill, to be voted upon January 6th. It remains to be seen whether the purchasable vote in Vermont, combined with that of the ignorant and vicious and uninformed—which vote would naturally be against prohibition—will outnumber the vote of those who believe it the duty of a State to outlaw that which is the prolific source of misery, poverty and crime. The good people of this generation in the commonwealth of Vermont have never before had presented to them a popular "referendum" of equal importance and consequence to this one. That God may give them to see, to say, to do the right thing, is sure to be just now the fervent prayer of the friends of temperance and civic virtue all over the country.

Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, representative of the American Peace Society at The Hague Conference, and a member of the International Peace Bureau and International Law Association addressed the Five Years Meeting of Friends on "The Four Great Problems of the Age." He said:

"There are four great problems that are staring us in the face, and unless they are solved by the Christian Church during the coming century this nation and others cannot hold their own. There are four great evils that consume the substance and the thought and feelings of the world. They are the terrible liquor evil that does more to ruin the homes, blight minds, and cause crime than any one other agency; the industrial problem that has been going on during the last half century, and which has now reached an acute stage; the race problem, which has been going on for all time, and the wars between great nations. Abolish these four giant evils, and with them will go a thousand other minor evils."

"An Old Evil That Will Not Down" was the theme of a sermon delivered by Rev. Dr. Stephen W. Dana in the Walnut Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. Dr. Dana found his text in Isaiah 28: 7: "But they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment."

"The political bearing of the drink habit upon good citizenship and good government is a living question to-day. We are not a nation of drunkards, and those holding highest offices are not intemperate. Only one President of these United States, so far as I can recall, ever disgraced himself or his high office by drunkenness. Yet the saloon, the manufacturer and vender of intoxicating beverages have a tremendous hold on the politics of our country. The political bosses keep in close touch with saloon keepers, and they in turn render effective work on election day. The papers tell us that the leaders of our city are discussing who is to be our next Mayor. It is more than likely that they are meeting behind closed doors on this Lord's day, with wine and liquor flowing freely, deciding this matter, while you and I will have little more to do with it than if dominated by the Czar of Russia. I do not mean to imply that all the bosses are intemperate. Many of them have too much sense for that. They want clear brains, that they may manage those who are befuddled with drink."

The remedy Dr. Dana suggested was work among the children, so that the coming generation might be temperate and fully alive to the evil effects of the drink traffic.

Is alcohol a food? This question was discussed by the Methodist preachers. The occasion of the discussion was a recent report by Prof. W. O. Atwater, of the Agricultural Experiment Station, at Middletown, Conn. Professor Atwater, who also occupies a chair in Wesleyan University, which is a Methodist institution, has said that, under certain circumstances, alcohol does have value as a food. This assertion, right from the citadel of American Methodism, has stirred up the preachers, and at their meeting they showed that they would not permit Professor Atwater to misrepresent the position of the Church on this matter. Two experts were produced to prove that alcohol is not a food, but is injurious to physical and mental health: Dr. Crothers, of Hartford, and Colonel Hartshorn, assistant United States Appraiser. Rev. Dr. Odell made a stirring address, in which he said:

"It is difficult in such a situation to restrain one's self from scathing speech. But, with righteousness on our side, with scientific men of the highest standing sustaining our contention, we can afford to maintain our self-control while we sternly condemn a procedure which gives comfort to evil men, imperils the youth of our parishes and endangers the welfare of our society. Let us set our faces as a flint against the heresies of this professor. Let us publish as widely as possible the exposure of his inaccuracies. Let us teach the whole truth about this dangerous substance, for whose use as an article of diet he permits himself to be placed in the position of an apologist. Let us proclaim from the housetops that he does not represent the attitude of the Methodist Episcopal Church on this question, and that we stand, as our fathers before us stood, for total abstinence from alcoholic beverages."

HOW LONG DO DRUNKARDS LIVE?

More interesting and more remarkable perhaps than any other disclosures made by Dr. Dana are those relating to the capacity of men for drink and the duration of life among habitual inebriates. On the latter point the conclusions reached are that in serious cases the duration of life is about fifteen years, the maximum being over forty years. In general, it is said that hard drinking can rarely be carried on for more than twenty years, and it generally brings the victim to grief at about the age of 40. Referring to persons who drink most heavily and frequently, it is said that it takes ten or fifteen years to bring on dementia or insanity, during which time it may be estimated that each inebriate consumes about 2,000 gallons of intoxicants. A man 55 years old confessed to Dr. Dana that he had been drunk twice a day for three years, making about 2,000 intoxications; another man of 40 had been drunk weekly for twenty years, and a third, aged 43, had been drunk a thousand times in fifteen years. Two thousand "drunks" is set down as the maximum limit in any ordinary inebriate experience. The favorite combination for hard drinkers was found to be beer and whiskey, and beer alone came well up in the scale. Other beverages used by inebriates include cocoa wine, Jamaica ginger, tincture of soap, and a well-known proprietary "bitters."—"Leslie's Weekly."

ANTI-CANTEEN LAW DEFENDED.

Washington, Dec. 10.—The most important action to-day of the National Anti-Saloon League, now holding its annual session here, was the unanimous adoption of an address to the public on the army canteen question, in which the charge is made that high army officials have persistently pursued a course extremely unfavorable to the Anti-canteen law of Congress, and pledging the association to do its utmost to defeat any attempt to repeal the law until it has had a full and fair trial.

The League points out that "Congress at its last session appropriated $500,000 to build, equip and maintain suitable buildings at army posts for the recreation and sociability of the men, and also increased the rations of the men five cents per day, thereby enabling them to secure delicacies and other comforts without depending therefor upon the profits of an army saloon; because of the shortness of time, these appropriations have not as yet, except in a very limited degree, been utilized by the army."

The claim is made that the records of court-martials and of the Hospital Corps show the beneficent effect of the existing law. The address declares that the League "will not cease this agitation until the public and those who control the army understand that liquor selling in the army canteen is a question of national morality, and not alone one of military regulation, and that the issue is whether a handful of officers can safely defy the expressed moral sentiment of the nation, or that they can successfully convince the people that a saloon is a temperance society when conducted in the army."

DRINKING AMONG RUSSIAN PEASANTRY.

In the general moral progress of the peasantry the Russian Drink Monopoly, which now embraces all European Russia, is a very important factor. The Monopoly has decreased the number of drink shops by about six-sevenths, but it has failed to decrease consumption, and has led to increased street drinking, secret distilling, secret selling and other abuses. In its immediate purpose it has hitherto failed. But one of the accompanying measures is likely to play a very beneficial part in Russian social development. That is, the institution of Board of Guardians of Public Sobriety. The function of these boards is to create counter-attractions to drink, and each board has a branch and a district representative, so that there are now in Russia about 20,000 persons whose chief duty it is to fight the drink evil. The boards have established all over the country thousands of tea houses, cheap dining rooms, temperance inns and shelters for workingmen, and they have built or subsidized hundreds of "People's Theaters" and lecture halls. In these halls—and sometimes in the open air—lectures are given upon the evils of drink, upon hygiene, history, literature and domestic economy. The boards also occupy themselves with the free distribution of pamphlets against drink, and in favor of wholesome living.—R. E. C. Long, in the "Pilgrim."

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

Phil. 4: 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Rejoice in the Lord alwa Phil. 4: 4.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, First mo. 5.—Christian living. Phil. 4: 1-13.

Third-day, First mo. 6.—Paul's hope. Phil. 1: 12-26.

Fourth-day, First mo. 7.—Pressing forward. Phil. 3: 7-16.

Fifth-day, First mo. 8.—Strength in Christ. Col. 1: 3-17.

Sixth-day, First mo. 9.—Christ is all. Col. 3: 1-11.

Seventh-day, First mo. 10.—Practical holiness. Rom. 12: 1-21.

First-day, First mo. 11.—Bearing burdens. Gal. 6: 1-10.

In the last lesson we had an incident in the story of the beginnings of the church at Philippi; in the present we have a few sentences from Paul's letter to this church. The whole epistle should be read at a sitting; for only thus can the real spirit and tenor of the letter be gained to the best advantage. The circumstances under which the letter was written are as follows: Paul was a prisoner at Rome, and the members of the church at Philippi had sent, by the hands of Epaphroditus, certain gifts which would be of service to their beloved and honored founder. This was not the first time they had "ministered to his necessities"; three times before they had done it (see Phil. 4: 16; 2 Cor. 11: 9). While their messenger was at Rome he was taken sick, and his friends were very uneasy about him (Phil. 2: 26-30), and Paul wrote this letter and sent Epaphroditus himself back to Philippi to thank them for their loving care and to tell them of the recovery of their messenger, making him the bearer of the epistle. Paul was closely united to the Philippian Church; there is less reproof in the epistle than in any of the others, and he uses more terms of endearment than elsewhere. This church was remarkable for the prominent place taken in it by women. Lydia, Euodia, Syntache, and doubtless others (see verses 2, 3 of the lesson), all held without question influential positions. The date of the epistle was some time between A.D. 60 and 62, or about eleven years after Paul's first visit. So far as known, Paul's last visit to Philippi is noted in Acts 20: 6. The time of his visit was possibly two years after the sending of the epistle.

1. "Therefore." Bearing in mind what has just been said—the living together as fellow-citizens of the kingdom of God. "So." Referring to what has been said in the previous paragraph. "Stand fast." A favorite exhortation of Paul (see 1 Cor. 16: 13; Gal. 5: 1; Phil. 1: 27; 1 Thess. 3: 8; 2 Thess. 2: 15). "In the Lord." Their strength must be in Him.

2. "Euodia." R. V. She and her companion are not named elsewhere. "The same mind." Harmonious, not discordant.

3. "Yokefellow." Whom does Paul mean? Someone he does not care to mention? Or is it someone then so well known that it was not needful to mention his name? The correct answer can only be conjectured. Barnabas, Luke, Silas, Timotheus, the chief presbyter of Philippi; Epaphroditus himself, have all been suggested. Epaphroditus is, on the whole, the most likely. It has been ingeniously suggested that Paul did not intend this verse to be in the letter, that the words were an aside to Epaphroditus, and he, or whoever was the amanuensis, put them down, thinking them a part of the epistle. Still others think that the Greek word should not be translated, but be taken as a proper name, and that it should read, "I beseech thee also, true Synzygus." There is much to be said in favor of this view. "These women for they labored with me." R. V. Paul refers specially to the women just mentioned. "Whose names are in the book of life." Even though they are not mentioned by Paul.

4. "Rejoice." Paul wishes to emphasize the duty and privilege of the Christian to rejoice.

"Let your forbearance be known unto all men." R. V. Do not stand up for your rights,—it is the opposite of self-seeking. "The Lord is at hand." There seems little doubt that Paul believed that the end of all things was near—a belief which was largely held by the early Church.

6. "In nothing be anxious but in everything," etc. This is the true meaning of this oft-quoted passage. "Careful," when the Authorized Version was made, meant "full of care." Compare Matt. 6: 25, 34, R. V. "Everything." Paul means just what he says—all the concerns of life. "Prayer" refers rather to the frame of mind, and "supplication" to the act of prayer. Compare Eph. 6: 18; 1 Tim. 2: 1; 5: 5. "With thanksgiving." True prayer is always accompanied by thanksgiving. Compare Rom. 1: 21; 2 Cor. 1: 11; Col. 2: 7.

7. "Peace of God." The peace which comes from God, which He gives. "Passest all understanding." This can mean (1) "surpassing every device or counsel of man," or (2) "surpassing all power of conception;" the former is probably the better. "shall keep." "Guard." Stand sentinel over.

8. "Finally." The closing exhortation. "Whatsoever things are true," etc. In this beautiful exhortation the words appear to be arranged in a descending scale—the first four describe the character of the actions themselves; the fifth and sixth point to the moral approbation, which they conciliate, while the seventh and eighth are thrown in as an afterthought, that no motive may be omitted. "True," not "veracious," but essentially, and in the widest sense, true. "Honest." Honorable. R. V. To be venerated for character. "Just." Righteous in act and in word. "Pure." Pure from faults. "Lovely." This word is not used elsewhere in the New Testament. It means "pleasing." Compare Ecclesiasticus 20: 13. "A wise man by his words maketh himself beloved." "Of good report." Not "well-spoken of," but rather "attractive," or "with good will to others," "winning," always in the good sense. "Any virtue," etc. The exact meaning is not very clear. Possibly it may mean, as suggested above, "If I have omitted anything." Paul does not use the word elsewhere, and he may refer to the heathen ideas of virtue, in which most of those to whom he was writing were brought up—"Whatever value may reside in your old heathen conception of virtue, whatever consideration is due to the praise of men." "Think." Dwell upon, "meditate upon."

9. He appeals to the example of his own life and teaching.

10. "But I rejoice . . . at length ye have revived your thought for me; wherein ye did indeed take thought." R. V. As if to say, "I do not mean that you relaxed your care, but the opportunity was lacking."

11-13. These beautiful verses give an insight into the apostle's life and his source of strength, which needs little comment—his words speak for themselves. "I am instructed." Far clearer in R. V., "I have learned the secret"—I have been initiated into the true secret of real living. "In." In the abiding presence and strength of Christ.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Truth is the highest thing that men may keep."
2. "Whatsoever things are true."
3. Have you learned Paul's secret?

TOPIC FOR FIRST MONTH ELEVENTH.

"BRINGING OTHERS TO CHRIST."

John 1: 40-45; 4: 6-10; Mark 5: 19, 20.

Second-day, First mo. 5.—By consistent living. 1 Tim. 4: 12-16.

Third-day, First mo. 6.—By ready sympathy. 1 Pet. 3: 8-12.

Fourth-day, First mo. 7.—By moral courage. Acts 4: 13-20.

Fifth-day, First mo. 8.—By personal appeals. Acts 26: 25-29.

Sixth-day, First mo. 9.—By prayer and faith. Mark 7: 25-30.

Seventh-day, First mo. 10. By enthusiasm. Mark 2: 1-4.

Two things stand out clearly in our accounts of those who brought others to Christ during His earthly ministry: one is the little that they were able to say concerning the Man, and the other is the prominence of their own impressions. There is no questioning the necessity for the expositor and the exegete, but Andrew and Philip, the Gerasene maniac and the Samaritan woman did not wait to ponder and search through the history and the philosophic bearings of the doctrine of Christ; though Philip was able to teach as well as to witness. What all these did do, and what every one can do who has himself truly been to Jesus, may be described as testifying—bearing witness to a profound personal impression.

The hunger of heart that these waiting Hebrews experienced found its satisfaction in the Messiah recognized in the person of this wandering teacher: the maniac had "great things" in the way of deliverance of which he could speak; while the Samaritan woman's sinful life was flashed before her in such wise as to reach and not repel her. Thus fitted to testify of that which they had seen and heard, they went about it as simply and directly as we talk of the ordinary affairs of life, and yet with a power that brought men to see for themselves the One who could make men and women speak thus concerning Him. It is good to know the beautiful thoughts and the wonderful facts that have come into the lives of others, but the equipment for bringing men to Jesus is, above all things else, the power to testify.

If the series of topics given as the titles of the daily readings for the past week could be before the minds of every church member, not only for these few days, but continually, Decision Day would doubtless come more than once a year, and the ingathering would more nearly reach the standard set by Him who said, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto myself."

Nineteen years ago, in the Episcopal Church of this country, was organized the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, its members being expected to obey two rules: First, "To pray daily for the spread of Christ's kingdom among men"; second, "To make an earnest effort each week to bring at least one young man within the hearing of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as set forth in the services of the Church and in young men's Bible classes." Some 1,200 branches and more than 10,000 members are marks of the success of the movement in the United States, while Canada and the lands beyond the seas have a part as well. They report "daily prayer, personal influence, invitations to church services, showing cordial attention to men in attendance, providing mission services, conducting Bible classes, bringing back the negligent, and trying in all relations of life, business, social or religious, to extend a wholesome manly influence," as among the means employed by brotherhood men. This all runs so closely along the lines of our endeavors that we may well rejoice in their success, while we seek to profit by their example as we work in our larger field.

Correspondence.

To the Editor: I have been very much impressed since coming here to find such a wide field for usefulness for a Friends' College. Guilford College has just closed a very successful term, in which the attendance of students has been much larger than usual, the health has been good, and the advancement has been satisfactory. I suppose the statistics of North Carolina Yearly Meeting cannot be equaled by any other yearly meeting in the world. Out of a total membership of 5,483 there are 1,728 under twenty-one years of age. This State has long been noted for the production of great men, and almost every meeting of Friends in America is to-day reaping the benefits of the fertility of North Carolina. Not only so, but the State and nation are much richer because of Guilford College and New Garden Boarding School. The Hon. Joseph Cannon was largely educated at Friends' Schools in Indiana, but it should be remembered that he is a native of North Carolina. The Governor of Rhode Island, Dr. Lucius F. C. Garvin, was educated at New Garden Boarding School, and Joseph Moore Dixon, recently elected to Congress from Montana, is a native of North Carolina, and a graduate of Guilford College. At least two members of our present State Legislature are graduates of Guilford College.

It certainly can be seen that the managers and teachers from the first have been faithful and loyal to the trust imposed in them. During the dark days of the Civil War, New Garden Boarding School was the only educational institution in the State that did not close its doors. The term just closed enrolled students from six States and Cuba. A large proportion of these are Friends, but the influence of the college reaches far beyond our own membership.

The South is entering upon a new era in education, as well as a new industrial era, and Friends must be able to meet these new and enlarged ideals with equipments suitable to the demands of the times, or suffer a great loss. Another fact confronts us, but in this case there is every hope that Guilford College will greatly aid in removing the difficulty in the future. The last report gives us fifty-five meetings, forty-six ministers, and twenty-one meetings without ministers. No church has ever yet been built up without a living gospel ministry, and we do not expect to be an exception. Many of these meetings are frequently visited by ministers, but several of our ministers are not active, from old age, isolation and other causes. Guilford College has always had a deep concern in these matters, but has been so cramped from the lack of funds and equipment that its influence has not been so direct as would have been desirable. The crying and growing demand is that the college may be released from this embarrassment, so that the church may exert her full strength upon the rising generation that is looking to us for education and culture. We are in the midst of an immense responsibility, which at present we are unable to bear, and if the blessing passes us by, not only we, but the entire church, will suffer loss. We occupy a peculiar position. We are in a field teeming with young people anxious for education, and geographically out of reach of competition with any other Friends college. This is our opportunity. I have written this in no spirit of boasting, but rather under a deep sense of responsibility, and in the hope that Friends may see our opportunity and their opportunity, our need and their privilege, and help turn the attention of those who are blessed with means to our needs, our opportunity, and our possibility.

Very truly,

THOMAS NEWLIN.

Guilford College, N. C., Twelfth month 24th, 1902.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

A series of meetings was recently held at Fairview, near Brooklyn, Ind., with good results.

We have good reports from John Henry Douglas, who is spending the winter at Long Beach, Cal.

A good time is expected at Lynn, Mass., this week at the Conference of Ministers and Elders of New England Yearly Meeting.

The Worlds' Student Christian Federation has issued a call to observe the second First-day in Second month as a special day of prayer for the students of the world.

At an after meeting following the last mid-week meeting for the fall term of the Earlham College Y. M. C. A., five young men made a stand for Christ. The Lord's blessing has been upon the college associations all the term.

Oscar Moon, from Ludlow, Ohio, has been active in a series of meetings just closed at Chambersburg, near Dayton, Ohio, which resulted, notwithstanding the inclement weather, in three conversions and four accessions to the meeting.

A number of our subscribers who are contemplating putting THE AMERICAN FRIEND for the year 1902—i.e., Volume IX.—into permanent form will be interested to know that an index is being prepared, and will appear as a supplement in the near future.

On the 21st ult. a very pleasant evening was enjoyed by the Ludlow, O., Endeavorers at the home of Joseph Pemberton. The evening was occupied with a short literary program, singing, and the telling of Quaker reminiscences in the "plain language."

The second term of Friends' University opens First month 26th. A number of new courses in literature, mathematics, education, biblical literature and other departments will begin at that time. The entrance of several new students is expected.

By some oversight the name of Louise P. Round was omitted from the list of delegates to the Five Years Meeting from Oregon in the accounts of that meeting in our special issue. Our friend was present, and was a faithful member of the Oregon delegation.

Mead A. Kelsey, pastor of Swansea Meeting, Mass., has organized a class for the study of the life of Christ. The class meets Fifth-day night, forty-five minutes before prayer meeting, and it is found that this plan helps both the interest and attendance of the meeting for prayer.

Fred. T. Coppock, of East Des Moines, Iowa, began meetings at Friendship, Kansas, the 1st ult., continuing one week, and holding eleven sessions in all. Much good work was done. More than thirty took definite steps for a better life, and twenty signified their intention of joining with Friends.

Long life, by reason of added strength, can certainly be numbered with other blessings by Benjamin C. Pritchard, a veteran minister of Emporia, Kan., who is in his 88th year, and by his wife, Rachel Roberts, who has passed her 82d birthday, but who is still active and able for domestic duties.

They have been loving companions for more than sixty-three years.

"Western District Monthly Meeting" has appointed meetings for divine worship to be held in the Meeting House, Twelfth Street, below Market, Philadelphia, on every Fourth-day evening, until and including Fourth month 8th, 1903, except on those evenings when the monthly meeting is held. The dates on which meetings will not be held are First month 21st, Second month 18th, and Third month 18th, 1903. Hour of meeting, 7.45 p.m.

Berkeley Quarterly Meeting, held at San José, Cal., the 5th to 7th ult., was a time of great blessing. The different meetings were well represented. Prof. C. E. Tebbetts was present on the 5th, and gave good counsel and encouragement. On Seventh-day Levi Gregory gave an account of the Five Years Meeting. Much interest was manifested, especially on the subjects of evangelistic and church extension and on the temperance movement.

A union revival meeting lasting four and one-half weeks was held at the Friends' Church at Amboy, Ind. The meeting was led by Oscar Lowry, assisted by B. F. Harris, a singing evangelist, both of the Moody Bible Institute, of Chicago. Many were converted and renewed, twenty of whom have united with Friends. Also thirty-two active and two associate members have joined Friends' Christian Endeavor. The Home Mission Committee has already raised the money to send to each new member a copy of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

The second meeting of the Earlham Club, of Philadelphia, was held recently at the home of Dr. William and Matilda Wildman Evans. Nearly forty old Earlham students were present, and after a social hour and refreshments, short speeches were made by Alonzo Brown, Dr. Don C. Barrett, Frances M. Barrett, Catharine M. Shipley, Esther Pugh, and R. Warren Barrett. The club accepted an invitation from D. C. Barrett and wife to hold the next meeting in Fifth month at their home at Haverford. Old students of Earlham or of Friends' Boarding School living in or near Philadelphia should correspond at once with the secretary, Miss Marian White, 187 Maplewood Avenue, Germantown.

Earlham College is well represented at the University of Pennsylvania this year. Samuel B. Heckman, Assistant Commissioner of Education for Porto Rico is here on leave of absence to do some graduate work in German. T. Ray White is a member of the faculty of the Law School, as lecturer on business law. Elwood Mendenhall and Herbert Clarke are in the School of Medicine. Edward Wildman is assistant instructor in botany in the college. Warren Barrett, who entered the Law School this year, won first place on the University debating team, and led them to victory over Cornell on the 12th inst. Robert Charles is using a leave of absence from the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to do a year's work in civil engineering. He will take the bachelor's degree in this school in Sixth month.

From a letter written by Gilbert Bowles, dated at Tokio, Eleventh month 29th, we glean these words: "From the 5th to the 11th of this month we had special evening evangelistic meetings at the Friends' Meeting. There were ten new believers and twenty-one signed their names, signifying their desire to study the Bible and seek to know the true God and His Son Jesus Christ. But it is impossible to follow up and really teach more than a small per cent. of such seekers, or even of those who profess to find Christ as a Saviour. But there are enough results to prove constantly that God's blessing is upon the work. There is a gradually increasing number of Christians who are really growing and beginning to do really encouraging work." And under date of Twelfth month 1st, he says: "Yesterday afternoon I arranged for one of our best and most earnest Christian young men to have a talk in our home with a young man from a Buddhist University, who came the evening before to ask about God. The young man says he does not yet fully understand, but he wishes to hear more. Health good at the mission, except our little Helen has been unwell for two months with intermittent fever. She is some better now."

The quarterly meeting at New Garden, N. C., was held on the 13th inst., the meeting on ministry and oversight being held at half-past 9 in the morning, and the meeting for worship at 11. Then, after an intermission of an hour, came the meeting for business. Thus nearly the entire day was consumed, and it was believed that the occasion was a highly-favored one. David E. Sampson, from East Bend, was present and gave a very helpful and thoughtful discourse on the gifts bestowed on the Church for the accomplishment of the work which properly belongs to it. There were also in attendance David Farlow, Jr., and Michael A. Farlow, ministers from Southern Quarter. They are making a visit through several of the quarters with minutes of endorsement from their meeting at Marlboro. They are well-known Friends, and their labors are appreciated and helpful. Among those in attendance having no minutes were De Witt Foster and wife, and Nathan Stuart and wife, and Dungan Henley. From the reports made in the quarterly meeting, quite a number of additions to membership have been made since the last yearly meeting, as many as ten having joined New Garden Monthly Meeting. In many places, owing to the large number of young people and the good reputation of old families of Friends, it is comparatively easy to gather in new members.

MARRIED.

DENNIS—HAINES.—At the Friends' Meeting House in Moorestown, N. J., Twelfth month 25th, 1902, Louise Martha Haines and William Varney Dennis, both of Moorestown, N. J.

PARKER.—At her home, near Chattanooga, Tenn., Tenth month 11th, 1902, Martha D. T. Parker, daughter of Thomas S. and Sarah C. Teas, in the 70th year of her age. She was educated at Spiceland Academy and Earlham, Ind. She was deeply interested in all that pertains to good; an active and lifelong member of Friends; anxiously concerned in temperance, and the education and improvement of the colored people. Her life was filled with gentleness, unselfishness, self-sacrifice and devotion to her Saviour.

WIXOM.—At his home in Perry City, N. Y., Eleventh month 20th, 1902, Caleb C. Wixom, aged 65 years, an elder of Perry City Monthly and Scipio Quarterly Meeting, N. Y. He was a lifelong member of Friends, and for years was a valued member of his home meeting, devoting much of his time, means and active service to its interests. By his efforts largely a meeting was recently established in the home village, and a neat and commodious meeting house was erected. He also served as clerk of Scipio Quarterly Meeting for twenty-five years.

AN EMPTY BIRD'S NEST.

BY E. T. LARKIN.

You ask, what do I care
For that bird's nest up there,
All alone this bleak, dull, winter day?
Not a leaf on the tree,
Not a bird, flower or bee,
Not one single, bright thing by the way?

Why, it sings me a song,
That nest, all the day long,
Of the days that were bright to a charm,—

When a mother-bird's breast
Brooded warm o'er her nest,
Keeping wee birdies safe from all harm.

When the elms were all green,
And each leaflet, I ween,
Was as bright as a leaflet could be;
When the flowers were gay,
And the birds sang all day,
Full of life every bird, flower and tree.

And of days yet to come,
Days of fragrance and bloom,
Days of bee and of bird and of flower;
Days of skies all so blue,
Heaven's own lovely hue,
Growing brighter each day and each hour.

So you see why I care
For that bird's nest up there,
All alone this bleak, dull, winter day;
'Tis the story it sings,
And the joy that it brings
To brighten my heart by the way.

WHO WAS TO BLAME?

A baker living in a village not far from Quebec bought the butter he used from a neighboring farmer.

One day he became suspicious that the butter was not of the right weight, and, therefore, decided to satisfy himself as to whether the farmer was honest or not. For several days he weighed the butter, and then found that the rolls of butter which the farmer brought were gradually diminishing in weight. This angered him so that he had the farmer arrested on a charge of fraudulent dealing.

"I presume you have scales?" the judge said, inquiringly.

"Yes, of course, your honor."

"And weights, too, I presume."

"No, sir."

"How, then, do you manage to weigh the butter which you sell?"

"That's easily explained, your honor," replied the farmer.

"When the baker commenced buying his butter from me, I thought I'd get my bread from him and it's the one-pound loaf I've been using as a weight for the butter I sell to him. If the weight of the butter has been wrong he has himself to blame, not me."—"Christian Youth."

There comes a point in every man's history when, if he wishes to be a sanctified vessel, meet for the Master's use, he must decide to drop everything that prevents a holy career and a life of perfect service among the people of God.—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

THE RIGHT THING.

A New Catarrh Cure, which is Rapidly Coming to the Front.

For several years, Eucalyptol Guaiacol and Hydrastin have been recognized as standard remedies for catarrhal troubles, but they have always been given separately and only very recently an ingenious chemist succeeded in combining them, together with other antiseptics, into a pleasant, effective tablet.

Druggists sell the remedy under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and it has met with remarkable success in the cure of nasal catarrh, bronchial and throat catarrh, and in catarrh of the stomach.

Mr. F. N. Benton, whose address is care of Clark House, Troy, N. Y., says: "When I run up against anything that is good I like to tell people of it. I have been troubled with catarrh more or less for some time. Last winter more than ever. Tried several so-called cures, but did not get any benefit from them. About six weeks ago I bought a 50-cent box of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and am glad to say that they have done wonders for me, and I do not hesitate to let all my friends know that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the right thing."

Mr. George J. Casanova, of Hotel Griffon, West Ninth Street, New York City, writes: "I have commenced using Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and already they have given me better results than any catarrh cure I have ever tried."

A leading physician of Pittsburg advises the use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in preference to any other treatment for catarrh of the head, throat or stomach.

He claims they are far superior to inhalers, salves, lotions or powder, and are much more convenient and pleasant to take, and are so harmless that little children take them with benefit, as they contain no opiate, cocaine or any poisonous drugs.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cents for full size package, and they are probably the safest and most reliable cure for any form of catarrh.

Flowers in the home are more than a mere bit of brightness; they indicate a disposition which has in it the love of the beautiful, upon which the great Mother Nature has a hold, one which, no matter how harsh and unprepossessing its manifestations, has still something of beauty in it. Flowers are an inspiration! No one can look at them, and not feel better for their cheerful presence. A home without plants is like a home without children—something of the best of life is missing.—Ex.

Character is not so much a matter of position as of disposition. Adam was placed in a perfect environment, and nearly ruined it. What if we have an inspired Bible but an uninspired Church? It is there that the holy influence is lost. Inspiration inspires. It is simply useless for us to say that the Bible is inspired, if we who profess to believe it do not share its inspiration. When the Holy Ghost is both in the doctrine and in the people who profess it, the mountains of difficulty shall be beaten with a new threshing instrument having teeth, and will fly away like dust upon the mocking wind.—Parker.

The perfect knowledge of God is to be obtained only by the perfectly consecrated life. The human soul is a mirror on which the light of God shines; and only the pure mirror reflects the perfect image. We can have real peace only when we are sure that God is directing and supporting us in all the perplexing experiences of life; and we cannot have that certainty unless our hearts are pure, for it is only the pure heart that can see God. The glorious promise of Christ is that if we confess our sins He is faithful and just, not only to forgive us our sins, but also to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—Louis Albert Banks.

We cannot ask a better point of leverage from which to move our little fragment of the world toward truth and goodness than the point on which we have been placed. All that make saints and heroes of old strong and full of trust is as near to us as it was to them.—Henry Wilder Foote.

OWENS VALLEY, CALIFORNIA

George M. McKinney, of Chicago, general immigration agent and land expert for the Harriman railroad systems, arrived in San Francisco to-day, in the course of a tour of the great country districts of California suitable for general colonization.

"I have come directly from Inyo County," said he, "and I am greatly impressed with Owens Valley, in the eastern part of California. I found hidden away in the mountains up there in Inyo County, 1,000,000 acres in Owens Valley, that is the most desirable land for general colonization purposes that I have thus far seen in California."

A PEERLESS FLORIDA BOOKLET.

The General Passenger Department of the Southern Railway has just issued one of the most strikingly handsome brochures descriptive of "The Southern's Palm Limited" that has ever emanated from a railroad office. "The Southern's Palm Limited" resumes its season on January 12th, between this city and St. Augustine, and the booklet gives a diagram of the cars making up this train, besides showing in very handsome photographs the interior of the same, as well as views of the chief points of interest along the route traversed by that company. The Southern having extended its line into Jacksonville, the route of the "Palm Limited" will be between New York and Washington over the Pennsylvania; between Washington and Jacksonville over the Southern, and between Jacksonville and St. Augustine over the Florida East Coast roads.—"Leonard's Railway News."

Chas. L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, will furnish copy of booklet upon application.

COMMUNION.

Another day of service
Has passed away;
We lay aside the armor
And kneel to pray.
And in the solemn stillness
Can almost hear
The rustle of His garments
Who draweth near!

We wait to catch the whisper
Of love divine,
That bids us boldly enter
That holy shrine—
Where He, the King Eternal,
In grace extends
The scepter of assurance
That mercy lends.

Without is strife and turmoil!
Within is peace!
For at that hallowed portal
All earth-sounds cease;
With footsteps hushed and reverent
We pass within.
Our Father draws the curtain
And shuts us in.

A London dispatch states that agents there are making very large purchases of English coal for prompt shipment to the United States. Definite announcement had been made of the chartering of thirty large tramp steamships in one week to load full cargoes of coal for New York and Boston. They will carry altogether 120,000 tons of coal.

There is a national curfew association that is doing a good work of agitation. Its executive board is striving assiduously to extend the benefits of the curfew system throughout every State of the Union. Copies of the laws designed for the protection of youth from the vices of the streets are being placed in the hands of the governors, and the various ministerial associations are being asked to co-operate with the governors in securing the needed laws.

Two events took place last week which seem to indicate the proper spirit on the part of capitalists endeavoring to meet the needs of their employees. One was the effort of the United States Steel Corporation to establish a system whereby the humblest workman on its rolls may, if he desires, become a permanent stockholder and share in the profits of the corporation, and the other a general pension plan announced by the Standard Oil Company for the benefit of its employees.

Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, and vice-president of the social and economic science section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, sounded a fundamental truth in his address before that body at its meeting in Washington one day last week, when he said, in his address on "The Psychology of the Labor Question," that, in the labor problem, one can ascertain the total number of strikes and the apparent causes, losses, etc., but the real motive of the strike cannot be disclosed by the statistics, and often the psychological point of view must be studied, and the apprehensions and fears of the strikers considered.

At Delhi, India, on New Year's day, within an amphitheater, crowned with gilded cupolas, surrounded by batteries and troops, and hung with rich velvets and purples, the Princes of houses more ancient than the Kingdom of England bowed their knees to the authority of the Westerner, and King Edward VII. of England was formally proclaimed Emperor of India. There may be much truth in the statement that the spectacle of Lord Curzon, mounted on the back of an elephant, was symbolic of "England riding India," yet it is to be hoped that such mutual relations may contribute a larger destiny for both.

It is especially gratifying that England and Germany have readily and graciously accepted the court at The Hague as soon as President Roosevelt's disinclination to serve as arbitrator was fully understood by them, for the general cause of arbitration must gain much more by this conclusion of the negotiations than it could possibly have gained by a reference of the affair to the President of the United States. It may easily follow, also, that the reference to the court of this special case will contribute substantially to the authoritative development of international law in directions where now some uncertainty and disagreement prevail, as, for example, the questions of the rights of governments to resort to diplomatic measures or to actual coercion to collect the claims of their private citizens against the governments of those foreign countries in which they are voluntarily residing.

To say that 1902 was the best year this country has ever experienced, while truthful enough in the main, does not suggest fully the enormous strides which the United States took in the year just closed. Practically every branch of ordinary trade and manufacture showed an increase above the best of previous years, and yet this immense enlargement of output was not sufficient of itself to satisfy the growing, it might even be termed insatiable, demand for all kinds of materials. In many cases the usual foreign outlet for our products was, perforce, neglected by American producers, who confined their efforts to supplying insistent domestic demand, while in others foreign production was called upon to reinforce domestic output, with the result that new currents and channels were created in our foreign trade. Our export trade, therefore, shrunk, while our imports expanded to unprecedented figures.

Industrial unrest was naturally marked, as it always is in times either of prosperity or of depression, and serious disorganization of some of the country's basic industries resulted for a time. In many cases, however, resort to extremes was avoided or rendered unnecessary by liberal recognition by employers of changes in the standard of living, and it is safe to say that two men obtained higher wages or had their working time reduced without resort to strikes for every one who actually quit work.

FRIENDS IN 1902.

THE statistics of our American yearly meetings (including Canada) give us at present a total membership of 93,287, which is 91 more than the reports of the previous year gave. This gain is very small, but it is a gain, while last year we reported a small loss. It will be noticed in the statistics given below that every Eastern yearly meeting in the United States reports a loss, except Philadelphia, which would undoubtedly show a loss if the figures were given. The loss in Baltimore is 14; in New England, 70; in New York, 61; in North Carolina, 289, making a total loss in these four yearly meetings of 434. A gain of 16 in Canada reduces this to 418.

Among the yearly meetings west of the Alleghenies the greatest loss is reported in Western, where the decrease amounts to 719. The only other yearly meeting showing a decrease is Wilmington, where the loss is 26. The largest gain is reported in Iowa Yearly Meeting, which has increased by 466 members; Ohio follows with an increase of 320. The largest proportional increase is in California, where the membership has gone from 1,549 to 1,710.

These figures must not, of course, be taken too seriously. We do not expect spiritual movements and spiritual forces to be tested with any degree of accuracy by numbers. Sometimes in Christian history, as we all know, a loss in numbers has been a gain in power. But, after all, numbers do count, and every true, genuine Friend who is added to our roll is a real gain. There is some ground for rejoicing when we gain, and for regret when we decline, and it is incumbent on any declining yearly meeting to ask what is the matter. The time has come when all the Atlantic Coast yearly meetings must take up seriously the reasons for the somewhat steady loss which the annual reports show. It will not do to sit calmly down and accept the situation as inevitable. It is not inevitable. The truth which Friends along the Atlantic hold is a truth which appeals powerfully to the men and women of our generation as soon as it intelligently and clearly presented and lived out. In every community where there have been generations of Friends they are respected and believed in. Why do they not add to their numbers? For the most part they make no serious attempt to do so. They are not aggressive. They wait for the world to come to them, instead of going to the world. It is a method that will never work. On this method Paul would have built no church, and therefore written no epistles. It is a plan on which George Fox would have gathered no society and would have made no place in history.

It is perfectly true that not everybody can appreciate what it means to be a Friend. We have often enough, and too often, added to our numbers members who had no conception of the great principles of truth for which we exist as a body; but the main trouble lies with us. We lack zeal, and we lack a strong grasp of our own principles. We do not make them clear to others. We have no great message which we are sounding day after day in our towns and cities. We would gladly have our numbers grow, but we do not compel men to face our spiritual issues. Shall we ever do this? Well, if we are to live and prosper, we must do it. The first step is to wake up to our mission and realize what we are in the world for; our very next step is to study the problem of our ministry to see how we can voice ourselves and speak out what is in us. If we can do this—if we can utter our truth with convicting power—we shall add day by day such as are being saved as in the apostolic days.

NOTABLE EVENTS IN OUR PAST YEAR'S LIFE.

THE most notable event among American Friends last year was unquestionably the Five Years Meeting. It takes no prophet to see that Friends have no permanent place in the religious life of this country—or, shall we say, continent?—unless they have spiritual power and unity enough to bind themselves together into a working body. For five years it has been an open question whether we could succeed in preserving the independent standing of the several yearly meetings and at the same time mass all our strength and wisdom for the outreaching work of the Church; whether, without surrendering any of our precious inheritances, we could gain the power which always grows out of union. This first meeting may not prove that the problem is solved for all time, but it was an event of great importance and significance that delegates from all sections of the country could meet and work in such a large spirit of unity and with so little that was narrow and sectional.

The most important event of the Five Years Meeting was the decision to call the entire Christian Church of America together in our capital city to consider plans for dealing with the most urgent moral problem now before us—namely, how can the evil power of the saloon be destroyed? We have no way yet of telling what response the churches will make to this call. The reception of it, however, by the religious and secular press has been uniformly favorable.

During the summer a large and enthusiastic international convention of the Friends' Christian Endeavorers was held at Richmond, at which many young Friends were aroused to a deeper interest in the history and mission of our branch of the Church, and the influence of this conference has already been decidedly felt for good. A movement of some importance has been initiated by the meeting on ministry and oversight of New England Yearly Meeting to increase the efficiency of the ministry. A circulating library, composed of books particularly adapted to help ministers to interpret the gospel to men and women of to-day, has been provided, and an important conference of ministers and elders of that yearly meeting has just been held for a closer look at our present-day problems.

Nearly every one of our educational institutions has had a prosperous and a progressive year. Bryn Mawr College has added more than half a million dollars to its funds. Haverford and Earlham have received liberal donations in money, the former having also received a much-needed assembly hall and the splendid collection of autographs and manuscripts made by Charles Roberts. Guilford and Whittier are both well under way in a laudable effort to raise much-needed endowment funds. The Friends School at Providence has received a handsome gymnasium through the kindness of its old scholars and friends.

In the missionary field the two leading events have been the opening of a new mission station in East Africa by Willis R. Hotchkiss, Arthur Chilson and Edgar Hole, and the destruction by fire of the school buildings in Japan. A change in the working force has been made in Palestine, Mexico and Alaska. At home a much more careful study of missionary methods has been made than ever before, and the work is being more completely organized. The work among the Indians has on the whole been encouraging. The positive results of our evangelistic and church extension work must be considered by itself at a future time. With reverence and thankfulness it must be acknowledged that the hand of God has been with us for good in all our wide field of work, and our only cause for sadness as we close our brief review is that our human faithfulness has not better kept pace with the divine leading.

THE MILITIA BILL.*

FURTHER consideration of the Militia Bill ("House Bill No. 15,345") makes it probable that it will not endanger as seriously as we first supposed the rights of those who have conscientious scruples against bearing arms, since it safeguards all privileges now existing under State regulation. It, however, is important that a direct exclusion clause should be inserted. We call the attention of our readers to the following letter from Richard H. Thomas, which deals with this subject:

"Although the Militia Bill, which was referred to in THE AMERICAN FRIEND of last week, has been passed by the House of Representatives, and has passed in the Senate, with some amendment, to its third reading, there is still hope of securing further amendments to it. Opposition has developed to a degree, promising at least some debate. At this stage it seems best to concentrate our efforts on the important point of securing an addition to Section 2, which contains a list of those who are exempted from militia service, and to do what we can to influence the Senate to include in the exemption all those who, being members of religious bodies whose tenets are opposed to all war, are themselves conscientiously scrupulous as to bearing arms." To ask this is, I think, entirely reasonable. It removes the objection that might be made on the ground of the danger of pretended scrupulousness on the part of persons who wished for other reasons to escape service. The attitude of a religious body against all war is something that can easily be proved either in time of peace or war. Then such an amendment does not excuse any one merely on the ground of his membership, for it requires that he also shall state his own convictions.

As the matter has now gone beyond the committee stage, pressure must be brought to bear upon the individual Senators. Everyone, therefore, who wishes to help to maintain freedom of conscience for himself or for others is again earnestly requested to write promptly to the Senators from his State. In this way an effect may be produced that will be of great blessing to many.

RICHARD HENRY THOMAS,
President of the Peace Association of Friends in America.
1718 John Street, Baltimore, Md.

* [We give Section 2.—EDITOR]: "That the Vice-President of the United States, the officers, judicial and executive, of the Government of the United States, the members and officers of each House of Congress, persons in the military or naval service of the United States, all custom-house officers, with their clerks, postmasters and persons employed by the United States in the transmission of the mail, ferrymen employed at any ferry on a post road, artificers and workmen employed in the armories and arsenals of the United States, pilots, mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States, and all persons who are exempted by the laws of the respective States or Territories shall be exempted from militia duty, without regard to age."

THE COMPLEMENT OF QUAKERISM.*

BY ELLISON R. PURDY.

The writer of Hebrews leads us into a wonderful portrait gallery, where he exhibits the choice characters of Old Testament times, the heroes of faith, men who through faith "subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of the fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens." A splendid array of whom the world was not worthy. But he closes this inspiring account with the impressive words, "And these all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." It is as if he had said, "We, the Christian Church, are the complement of the great forces of faith of the past." Quakerism has its own list of heroes of faith, and they suggest the theme for to-night, "The Complement of Quakerism." There was George Fox, who by faith turned away from the formalism and deadness of his time to Jesus Christ, who, he found, could speak to his condition. By faith he proclaimed the priesthood of believers, by faith he drew men and women away from human priests, away from "steeple-houses," away from empty forms, to the inspeaking Christ. By faith William Penn made the great abnegation, refused to be called a son of England's military glory, but chose rather to suffer affliction with the people called Quakers. By faith he made his holy experiment, setting up a government without the protection of sword and cannon. By faith he made those unique treaties, never sworn to and never broken, and demonstrated the practical application of the gospel principles to the affairs of men. By faith our early evangelists went forth with burning zeal, winning souls by the thousands to that spiritual life which they had discovered. By faith those early Friends, before the missionary societies had been formed, when foreign missions were an undreamed-of dream, carried the gospel to the different parts of the earth. By faith they, centuries before Clark had written "What Jesus Christ would have me to do," or Sheldon had sent that question, "What would Jesus do?" girdling the globe, they had made the teachings of Jesus Christ the standard of living, and by splendid discipline so ordered their lives that they have made the name "Quaker" the synonym of honesty and purity. They were reviled and beaten; they languished in vile prisons; they too were "destitute, afflicted, tormented," of whom the world was not worthy, and they, though history testifies that they obtained a good report, did not see the fulfilment of their mission, nor receive in its fulness the promise, God having provided a blessing for you and me, the blessing of complementing in our generation the work they so nobly began.

It may seem to some a far reach to claim that

* Abstract of address delivered at C. E. Rally during Iowa Yearly Meeting.

Christian Endeavor can have any part in this complement. Dr. Clark, in one of his early books, writes with almost a tone of surprise, that even the Quakers have adopted and adapted the Christian Endeavor Movement. The Friend of fiction, the traditional Quaker, is an old man, with broad-brimmed hat and very calm face, a kind of putty face, such as you see in the pictures that scandalize William Penn, a man who never gets excited, never does a sudden thing, never shows any enthusiasm. Why, to attach Christian Endeavor methods to him is but to produce a monstrosity.

When some students brought to their professor a bug composed of various parts glued together, he said, "Young gentlemen, this is a species of insect called humbug." Perhaps if we were to glue the head of modern enterprise, the wings of Christian enthusiasm and the legs of Christian Endeavor activity to the body of traditional Quakerism, we would produce only a humbug. The Friend whom we honor and whose work we take up is not the combination of certain vagaries, but the embodiment of precious principles. The very title "Christian Endeavor" appeals to us as Friends. Like our own name, it does not exalt some distinctive creed or some form of government. It does not lay emphasis upon that which separates Christians, but upon that fellowship of Jesus Christ which binds all together. Our motto, "Ye are my Friends if ye do whatsoever I command you," walks arm in arm with the root meaning of the word Endeavor, or on duty.

The Christian Endeavor pledge declares the underlying principle of Quakerism by bringing the soul directly to Jesus Christ; for it was the confessed effort of early Friends to bring people to Jesus Christ and leave them there. Nor should it seem to be out of place to suggest that a young people's society should help to perfect Quakerism. The period when a man of 50 was considered too-young for service in the Church, but was to be counted among the children who are to be seen and not heard, was not representative. Those first Quakers were young people, just the ages to form an enthusiastic Christian Endeavor Society, and to you who are to take up their work it may be said, "Let no man despise your youth"—give no man occasion to despise your youth. Young people of Iowa Yearly Meeting, you in your time and place, and according to your measure, are to perfect the work of those noble leaders. You are indebted to them for many of your privileges. They paved the way for your religious liberty. They cleared the forests where you gather the harvests. Through their efforts the message you bear is not so much an unknown tongue to the world. You are the heirs of a blessed heritage, but without you they are utterly helpless. You or some one raised up to take your place must complete their work. When Fox closed his eyes in death millions were yet looking to carnal priests and ceremonies. When, twenty-eight years later, William Penn, amidst perplexities and disappointments, breathed his last, the world went on to the most destructive wars of history, making rapidly the dark record of oath-bound treaties, frequently made and as frequently broken. Lift up your eyes upon the world to-day. Is it not yet carnal? Does it not need to-day that simple, primitive Christianity which is not narrowed by true Quakerism? For its promulgation they of the past need us of the present. How shall we do our part?

I believe we can come to this best by imagining our ideal Quaker as a Christian Endeavorer.

In the first place, he would be true to his pledge. Veracity and fidelity are linked with his name. If the meaning of "Quaker" were to be gathered from the reliability of some of our Endeavorers as measured by their pledge-keeping, would any man call his range by that name? And would it not be fitted only for those "oats" which have been soaked by the gentle August showers? Oh, it is a pity that we cannot be true to our heritage of fidelity! A Quaker's word as good as his bond! What kind of a bond would represent your word as you have kept the pledge? Would your ideal Quaker neglect his Bible, fail to attend the prayer meetings, send no text when kept from the consecration meeting, disregard his obligations to the Church, solemnly vow and then go indifferently and carelessly on?

Your ideal Quaker would be faithful to the trusts conferred upon him. If he were appointed upon a committee he would serve faithfully. It is the bane of our Christian Endeavor work and of our Sunday School work; it weakens our churches, it hampers sadly our yearly meeting work, this lamentable fact that so many Friends fail to perform faithfully the duties of their appointment. We have welcomed the Christian Endeavor movement as a training school for the Church work, but if we fail in our young people, what is the outlook for our Church? We are making much of efforts for spiritual quickening, and well we may; but this should not displace the routine. We cannot safely lay aside the principle of adherence to duty, to be moved only by feeling. Emotion and discipline must co-operate. President Roosevelt recently said in an address, "The first quality of good citizenship is faithfulness in the homely humdrum, every-day duties of life," and again, "There is nothing so little admired in the individual or the nation as hysterics." Well is it for us that the principles of fidelity were woven into the lives of our forefathers. They formed a great balance wheel that carried the Church past the dead point when enthusiasm was well nigh gone. If the habit of meeting going, if the devotion to the duty of leaving the plow and going to mid-week meeting meant so much to our Church at the ebbing tide of church life, what might it mean to us in this, the flood-tide of blessing and opportunity?

The early Friend counted not his time, his property, his reputation, his health, as weighing against his divine call; yea, he counted not his life as dear to him. How is he represented by the Christian Endeavorer who watches the clouds, consults the oracles of expediency and offers repeated sacrifices upon the altar of his laziness?

Your ideal Quaker, were he an Endeavorer, would be quick to seize upon any opportunity to bless the world. They were no idle dreamers, no impractical religious enthusiasts, those early Friends. They saw the needs of men about them; they fed the poor, visited the imprisoned, ministered unto the sick, enthusiastically championed every helpful reform. Our Quaker Endeavorer would lose no opportunity to bring more sunshine, better air, clothes and food, to humanity. If he were on the Flower Committee, he would devise some new way to make his flowers errand doers for the cause he loved; each varying color becoming an angel of blessing. If appointed on the Social Committee, he would seek to displace the hurtful by the helpful. The gloomy "wall-flowers" of some social gatherings are the consequence of the selfishness of the center flowers there. He would "be social for Christ's sake," but would not "for-sake Christ at the social."

Our ideal Quaker would ally himself with the good citizenship movement.

In early times his voice was strong against oppression. Very early he lifted it against human slavery. He would be no hesitating foe to our fearful rum traffic.

The chain of the sweatshop and of the oppressed and down-trodden cheap laborer would ring with his blows. The inmate of the death-trap tenement, the millions who are compelled to work seven days in the week, would find in him a brother and friend.

With all this our ideal Quaker would have a hearty respect for law. No anarchist he! The early Friends avowed their allegiance to the powers that be and declared them to be in authority by the power of God. A 10-year-old boy sufficed as a constable to escort several of them to jail. They would suffer and die for their religious convictions, but they had a hearty respect for law.

Our ideal Quaker would be an active Christian Endeavorer. England's worst jails could not quench his testimony, her edicts and threatenings could not keep him from the place of worship. Certainly it would require no cunning device to get him to the prayer meeting, nor novel expedient to get his mouth open when there.

If we stop here, we neglect the most important point of all. This ideal Quaker, if he were a Christian Endeavorer, would be a young man or a young woman filled and moved by the Spirit of God. On the committee, in the prayer meeting, in the heat of the battle, fighting against sin, patiently persevering in the routine of service, he would walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit. No scheme of Christian service may crowd out his indwelling Christ; no form of reform dim the importance of the new creation; no program of Christian activity relieve him from the constant indwelling, continuous guidance, and ever-welling freshness of the Spirit of God. How can this be? Does not so much organization forbid this? No, for God has ever caused careful and complete method to be compatible with the fulness of the Spirit, just as when, according to the pattern, every stake was driven, every curtain drawn and every line taut, the glory of the filled the tabernacle. But does not the pledge to do certain things debar the freedom of a Holy Ghost Christian? No, because the pledge is no less, certainly no more, than the heart vow of a true Christian.

Our Golden Age is not in the past. Quakerism is not to be expressed in those tablets of stone, the memorials of worthy Friends. It is to be written in the present, in the living epistles that speak for God and speak to their times.

"Henceforth my heart shall sigh no more
For olden time and holier shore.
God's love and blessing then and there,
Are here and now and everywhere."

Shall we be cumberers of the ground, or shall we bear noble fruit in the soil prepared by those who "obtained a good report through faith, but secured not the promise, that they without us should not be made perfect"?

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

ATTITUDE OF FRIENDS TOWARDS THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

BY HARLOW LINDLEY.

In some recent historical investigations I have come across some facts in regard to the attitude of Friends towards the adoption of the United States Constitution which may be of interest to some readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Notwithstanding the fact that Friends had upheld their doctrine of non-resistance during the Revolution, they were regarded as good American citizens at the close of the war. Society more justly estimated their conduct and principles, and acknowledged this by admitting them to the civil and political positions they had formerly occupied. We see this in the attitude assumed and the positions they held at the time when the Federal Constitution was framed.

James Madison wrote to Thomas Jefferson from New York, October 24th, 1787, as to the reception of the new system by the several States: "Pennsylvania will be divided. The city of Philadelphia, the Republican party, the Quakers and most of the Germans espouse the Constitution."

The actual position of the Quakers is given in the "Independent Gazetteer" of January 15th, 1788: "To the People of America:

"The subject now before you, like all other important matters, has excited much passion and created innumerable misrepresentations. Two writers in the Philadelphia papers have most unwarrantably asserted that the Quakers of this State are opposed to the Federal Constitution. That numerous and wealthy society are certainly more universally in favor of it than any other society in this State. It is one of their known principles not to be much concerned in the alterations of governments; wherefore one would naturally suppose it would be difficult to adduce instances to prove their sentiments on the present occasion. It is, however, not impossible, as will be found from the following facts:

"First.—When the last Assembly determined to call a convention, there were seven Quaker members of the House, all of whom attended and voted for the call of a convention, though nineteen members opposed it, and urged that it would be better to leave it to the next House, then soon to be chosen.

"Second.—When some of the members absented themselves the next day, in order to prevent the days of election and meeting of the convention from being fixed by that House of Assembly, the seven Quakers duly attended, and all voted with the majority on the several points that were moved as necessary to arrange and prepare for the business of the convention.

"Third.—Eight Quakers were chosen members of the State convention, and all took their seats. They all voted against postponing the final determination of the Constitution till the spring, which was attempted by the minority.

"Fourth.—The same eight Quakers all voted for the adoption of the proposed Federal Constitution in toto, and for the relegation to Congress of the jurisdiction of ten miles square within the commonwealth for the seat of the Federal Government."—Signed "Undeniable Facts."

The position of Friends in regard to the Constitution is further witnessed by the Centinel Letters published in the "Independent Gazetteer." In letter No. 3, written at Philadelphia November 5th, and published November 8th, 1787, the writer says the action and attitude of the Quakers in regard to the proposed Constitution surprises him very much, and he expresses fear lest they have become indifferent to the sacred rights of conscience so amply secured by the Pennsylvania State Constitution of 1776. He also recognizes the fact that in the State of Pennsylvania they form so considerable a part of the community as must ensure them great weight in the government, and in letter No. 20, written and published a year later, Centinel, in speaking of the junto which has been supporting the Constitution, refers to the fact that they have attached to their party the weighty interests of the Quakers.

This seems sufficient to indicate that the Friends favored the Constitution and that they had regained the confidence of the people so far as to hold important positions in the State.

The attitude of Friends is further seen from the point of view of a religious body, as well as from a political point of view, as above noticed. The happy relations existing between them and the new government, and their sincere and loyal feeling is expressed in an address of "The Religious Society called Quakers, from their yearly meeting for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and the western parts of Maryland and Virginia," to President Washington, which address was presented to him in person by a deputation from the society after his inauguration in 1789. This address was well received by the President, who sent to the society a written reply, in which he said, among other things, "Your principles and conduct are well known to me, and it is doing the people called Quakers no more than justice to say that (except in declining to share with others in the burthens of common defense) there is no denomination among us who are more exemplary and useful citizens. I assure you very especially that, in my opinion, the conscientious scruples of all men should be treated with great delicacy and tenderness; and it is my wish and desire that the laws may always be as extensively accommodated to them as a due regard to the protection and the essential interests of the nation may justify to permit."

Friends must have realized that the new liberty of which they partook was gained through active resistance of others, and that it was henceforth their duty to serve the State in every possible way to the best of their ability, and the evidence seems very conclusive that as a society our forefathers played a very important part in the establishment of that Constitution which has been looked to by the world as a model, and the advantages of which we to-day enjoy.

IN MEMORIAM OF JOHN CARTLAND.

In a quiet Quaker home at Parsonsfield, Me., Eleventh month 30th, 1820, John Cartland's life began. His parents were old-time Friends, bringing up their children in the plain, but firm, doctrines of the Society, receiving their education mostly at home, being taught by a private tutor.

He was one of ten children (six boys and four girls). He was married Tenth month 29th, 1846, to Nancy Milliken, of Parsonsfield. At an early age he took up the care of a widowed mother and small brothers and sisters, the younger being but 5 years when the father died.

The first years of his married life were taken up in caring for these and in rearing a large family of his own.

In 1865 he went on a religious visit to the West and New York; also to North Carolina.

In 1867 the old homestead was sold, and he moved to Windham.

In 1874 he went on his last visit to Canada. About that time and later the home life was frequently broken into by journeyings here and there nearer home, sometimes leaving everything at a moment's notice to attend the Master's calls, and the good tidings of his work and the good he was doing often reaching the ears of his beloved wife and children to gladden their lonely hearts.

He believed in the good old way of the direct leading of God's spirit, and to the last was firm in his convictions of the rightness of Friends' principles.

In his last years, being in feeble health, he could not go much from home, but often had it in his mind to visit certain meetings.

In the last year we have heard one of our ministers say, "I should not have been a preacher of the gospel if it had not been for him," and so, being dead, he yet speaketh.

During his last days he was very patient, and was so glad to go.

He lived to a good old age, and as a shock of grain fully ripe he breathed his last at the age of 82 years.

Some Views on Present Topics.

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH OUR ISOLATED MEMBERSHIP.

Among the new and better things we are doing and expect to do we should not forget our isolated members. Now, more than ever before in the history of American Friends, is our membership widely scattered, and many are isolated from centers of organized local meetings. And, in the wide-awake activity of other denominations, the best of this membership is likely to be cordially invited to co-operate in some sort of religious or secular church work; appropriated, and, soon or late, generally soon, wholly absorbed by some other denomination. Then, again, that part of our isolated membership at present apparently less valuable, drifting hither and thither without anchorage, becomes lost to us, and may, I fear, be lost to the church triumphant. This applies more especially, but not entirely, to our younger members. We need all our membership, old and young, and we should gather up the fragments that nothing be lost. We should husband our resources. A well-directed effort in this matter on the part of parents, relatives and meetings will do the membership at home good and hold the distant isolated ones by the golden chains of Christian love to their mother meeting. In this way we should make our meetings not only centers of greater light and power to illumine and quicken their respective communities, but would be constantly sending out virtue into new fields. When we take care of the distant few the many at home will take better care of themselves. The Good Shepherd left the ninety and nine and went after that which had wandered away.

But how is this to be accomplished? Individuals and meetings rightly concerned about the matter will find the ways and means for reaching the desired end. Some meetings could appoint an individual or a committee adapted for the work to correspond with their isolated friends, and letters received might often be read, in whole or in part, in the meeting to its edification. In this way the meeting will receive moral, financial and spiritual comfort.

In addition, a very potent and important factor toward the desired result might be the weekly visits of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to these isolated members. This will keep them informed as to the doings of the Church, and in other ways edify them. Every absent member needs the special, prayerful, fostering care of the home meeting, even more than those present, and if any should be unable to take the paper themselves, parents or personal friends might be glad to make a Christmas or birthday present of the same. Should these fail, the meetings might attend to the matter and pay the bill. I have said what was on my mind, and here rest my case.

DISCERNMENT OF SPIRITS.

BY ANNA MAY PEMBERTON.

The Apostle Paul, in speaking of the diversity of gifts, mentions discernment of spirits as one of them. John admonishes in his general epistle to "try the spirits, whether they are of God."

In the early Church there were people that had the gift of discernment, but to some extent this teaching seems to have gone out, possibly because some people claimed it that had it not.

The Church is always losing the value of some scriptural truth because some persons or class of persons become extremists in advocating it. I believe no one would call in question the value of such discernment in the working of the Church, whether it comes as a direct revelation from God in our time, or whether it is a result of a well-matured judgment, developed and directed under the divine leadership. In these days of shams and hypocrisy, when deception is practiced, even among Christ's chosen followers, we need a conservative balance and a discernment of right and wrong spirits.

Some persons that profess to have this discernment are led to suspicion people that are truly good and honest in their purpose. Nothing is more hurtful to the Church than this indiscriminate suspicioning of every person that comes into our midst.

But we worship God, not man, and we need to be guarded, that we bow not to some human ideal that seems helpful as long as the cloak of deception can cover it, and then crumbles down, carrying with it members of our own body. The Friends, with their large liberty, are an easy prey to such.

There are people that can hold the attention of an audience and lead the people by some peculiar magnetism, that could not live in a community and hold the confidence of the people, for they are not what they profess.

We need gifted speakers, but most of all we need, in the foreground of the Church, men and women that are in every particular what they claim to be.

Nothing, save the power of the discernment of spirits, that Paul speaks of, will enable us to steer clear on the one hand of wrongly suspicioning people, and on the other of wrongly giving prominence to those that in the end prove a detriment to the Church.

Discernment of spirits is a divine gift, but needs to be exercised under the guidance of the Holy Spirit that has promised to lead in all the workings of the Church.

EXTRACTS OF A LETTER FROM CHINA.

Luh Hoh, Eleventh month 14th, 1902.

Charles W. Lawrence, Chairman of China Committee, New York Yearly Meeting.

My Dear Friend:—Thy most excellent letter, dated Tenth month 5th, 1902, came promptly to hand, and it was a real encouragement to us. We do so much appreciate hearing from those who stand behind this work. I am most happy to comply with thy request to prepare a statement of the condition of things at Luh Hoh. For the sake of completeness I will make a few explanations, which are already known to thee, but which may not be quite so well understood by others who are working and praying for this work. The gospel message was first brought to this city a few years ago by Mr. Saw, a member of the Christian Mission. He so truly loved this people that they were compelled to feel his love. In 1898 Dr. Gaynor and Margaret A. Holme began coming to see the sick and preach the story of the cross. The next year Miss Holme and Mrs. De Vol came here to live. We regret very much that our lot is not larger, but the convenience of a foreign house, after having lived in Chinese quarters, is a luxury. A little over $500 was used in building this house, and we are now laying a walk to the street and building a cook-room, wash-house and coal-house in the back court, using something over fifty dollars more.

When we came over this fall, the need for something in the shape of a hospital seemed urgent. Not having heard from our estimates, we did not feel at liberty to open more work than we could see our way through. We rented a building of three rooms for four months, at five dollars, and fitted up eight beds. We have had the patients do the work as much as possible, but have had to hire a cook. This is doing business on a small scale, to be sure, but if you could look in upon us and see some of the serious cases that have been helped, I am sure no one could despise our small beginning. God has added His blessing, and already He has given us several precious souls. Thus far we have required the patients to pay for their food in advance, and, with a few exceptions, the destitute have been turned away for want of support for free beds.

It is not our thought to re-rent this place at the expiration of the four months. It is quite too small and is inconvenient and too cold. The need is pressing and the opportunity invaluable. For fifty or sixty dollars gold per year a place can be hired which will answer our needs until such time as the Master may see fit to give us a hospital building of our own. During the past few weeks we have opened a new work at Kua P'u, a lively market town about eight miles from here. A chapel has been hired for a year, cleaned and partially fitted up. Our old Bible woman, Mrs. Heü, is stationed here. On market days great crowds of people press their way into the chapel and listen to the story of love as long as one's voice will permit. By this time those who have diseases press through the crowd, and we bind up their sores and do the best we can under the circumstances to help them. This gives us a rest, and then we preach again until time to start back. It is our present purpose that one of us should go down every week. Miss Holme is working very hard every day, doing as much as the hours will hold. There is great need for more of these Spirit-filled, God-commissioned workers. We shall be very glad when Mr. and Mrs. Estes can come over here, which they expect to do as soon as Miss Butler returns. Opportunity for soul-winning out here seems absolutely unlimited, and oh, it is blessed to see those whom Satan has bound for many years, breaking free into the liberty of sons. But there are many trials, real trials, so severe at times that we only find comfort in pouring our souls out to God. Whenever God the Holy Spirit works, the devil becomes active, and let me tell you he is alive to his interests here. There are many Mohammedans in this city, and we have recently been made to feel the power of this masterpiece of the enemy, as an agent for evil and persecution.

If time and space permitted, I should love to tell of our inquirers, giving instances of special trial and special triumphs, for this work is certainly a warfare against principalities and powers of darkness.

The glorious thing about it all is that He who is for us is greater than the enemy. I should like to tell special efforts to reach souls and the various lines of work. We earnestly ask and urge that you remember us in intercessory prayer to God for the outpouring of His Spirit upon us, your fellow laborers, and upon the people in conviction for sin.

In closing, let me add a memorandum of some of our needs. If at present you are unable to send new workers, perhaps some one could spare twelve dollars, the amount required to support a bed in the hospital, or make a contribution toward renting a hospital building, or invest a little money for the distribution of tracts and Christian literature. We need everything for the furnishing of the hospital, such as towels, bedding, old muslin for bandages, etc. Whatever is sent will be received as from Him and for Him.

GEO. F. DE VOL.

A friend of Ralph Waldo Emerson relates the following circumstances which should carry a good lesson: "I was standing with him once at a college exhibition, where a young man had taken the most brilliant honors—a young man in whom we were both interested. It was the first time that I had ever addressed Mr. Emerson. I congratulated him, as I had congratulated myself upon the success of my young friend, and he said: 'Yes; I did not know he was so fine a fellow; and now if only something will fall out amiss—if he should be unpopular with his class, or if his father should fail in business, or if some other misfortune should befall him—all will be well.'"

PAUL AT THESSALONICA AND BEREÄ.

Acts 17: 1-12.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, First mo. 12.—Paul at Thessalonica and Berea. Acts 17: 1-9.
Third-day, First mo. 13.—Paul at Thessalonica and Berea. Acts 17: 10-15.

First-day, First mo. 18.—Scripture opened. Luke 24: 25-32.

The Epistles to the Thessalonians should be read in connection with the lesson. Thessalonica was about 100 miles southwest of Philippi, and at the time of Paul's visit was the most important city of Macedonia, and its capital. It is still a large city and a place of importance. It is now called Salonica.

1. "Now when they." The use of "they" instead of "we" (Acts 16: 11-17) implies that Luke was no longer with Paul, Silas and Timothy. "Amphipolis and Apollonia." Cities on the route to Thessalonica. "Where was a synagogue." This implies that there were none at the two cities named first.

2. "As his custom was." R. V. Paul always went to his countrymen first. "To the Jew first" (Rom. 1: 16) was his motto. "Three Sabbath days." This would make his stay at least something over two weeks, but it was probably very much longer. The incidental references to his stay imply this. See Phil. 4: 16; 1 Thess. 1: 9; 2: 9; 3: 5; Acts 20: 4; 2 Thess. 3: 6-12. "The scriptures." The Old Testament.

3. "Opening." The scriptures. Compare Luke 24: 32. "That it behooved the Christ to suffer." R. V. "A suffering Messiah" was something extremely difficult for the Jews to accept. They expected the Messiah to be a conquering monarch, who would restore the outward kingdom of David. Compare Acts 1: 6. "Alleging" means rather "setting forth by argument." "To rise." The second difficult thing for the Jew to believe was the resurrection.

4. "Believed." Better, "were persuaded," by Paul's arguments. "Consorted." Cast in their lot with. "Some of them" probably means the Jews, while "the devout Greeks" means the "proselytes of the gate," that is, those who attended the synagogue worship, believed in God, lived in many respects as the Jews, but who not fully joined themselves to the Jews by circumcision, etc. Such were free from most of the prejudices of the Jews. Compare Acts 13: 43.

5. "Certain vile fellows of the rabble, and gathering a crowd." A very graphic account. Then, as now, the cities of Southern Europe were afflicted with a lazy and worthless rabble, often augmented by ne'er-do-wells from the country, ready to commit any kind of violence. "Jason." He is not mentioned elsewhere, unless he is the same as the Jason in Rom. 16: 21.

6. "Rulers of the city." The Greek word is "politarch," and is found nowhere else in literature. For a long time it was thought that Luke had made a mistake, but later an inscription was found near or in Thessalonica containing this very word. Thessalonica was a free city, and had home rule; general allegiance to Rome was all that was required. "Turned the world upside down." The "world" means the inhabited earth. News of what Christianity had done doubtless had come from Philippi, and from Asia Minor and Syria.

7. "Whom Jason hath received." Thus making him a partaker. "Contrary to the decrees of Cæsar." The reference is to the decrees of the emperors directed against treason. "Treason was, and still is, a term difficult to define. For a suspicious emperor it was comparatively easy to read treason into almost anything. Analogous instances may be seen to-day in Turkey, Russia and in the German Emperor's wide definition of "lèse majesté." "Another king." This was the charge brought by the Jews against Christ. It was a charge which good magistrates would dismiss readily. To do so might bring them into danger from the Roman authorities. At Thessalonica it might mean, if disregarded, a loss of their highly-prized civic privileges. This is brought out in the account.

9. "Taken security." A safe course for the authorities, but one which to a great extent tied the hands of Paul, as he could do little without endangering his friends and the infant Church.

10. The best thing was to send Paul and Silas away. No mention is made of Timothy. But see verse 14. "By night." To escape the mob and the Jews. See verse 13. It would seem from the epistles to this church that its members were exposed to much persecution. See 2 Thess. 1: 4, 5. "Berea." "Bereæ." R. V. This was a city about 50 miles southwest of Thessalonica, off the direct road to Athens, and hence well fitted for a place of retreat.

11. "More noble." This may be taken as meaning of a better class, or of having a nobler character. They were ready to hear, but wished to convince themselves by examining the scriptures to see how these tallied with Paul's statements. Compare Paul's advice in his epistle, 1 Thess. 5: 21. "Searching" is not the same word as in John 5: 39, but conveys the idea of searching for evidence; it is the word used for examining a witness.

12. "Many of them therefore believed." As a result of Paul's preaching, illustrated and confirmed by daily study of the scriptures. "Of the Greek women of honorable estate." R. V. This is clearer than the A. V. rendering. It means that these women were distinguished for their influence, position and wealth. "Greek" refers to both men and women, and probably means Gentiles, though opinion is divided on this point. The further account, verses 13, 14, should be read.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. It is well to have a custom in regard to many things which pertain to the Christian life. It is very easy to fall out of the custom of going regularly to a place of worship.

2. Preserve an attitude of open mind.

Christian Endeavor.

TOPIC FOR FIRST MONTH EIGHTEENTH.

ENDEAVORERS IN TRAINING FOR CHURCH WORK.

Acts 2: 17, 18; Prov. 2: 1-8; Mark 1: 16-20.

Second-day, First mo. 12.—Through testimony. John 9: 8-17.

Third-day, First mo. 13.—Through prayer. Matt. 7: 7-12.

Fourth-day, First mo. 14.—Through Bible study. 2 Tim. 3: 14-17.

Fifth-day, First mo. 15.—Through giving. 2 Cor. 8: 1-5.

Sixth-day, First mo. 16.—Through serving. Rom. 12: 9-13.

Seventh-day, First mo. 17.—Through obeying. 1 Pet. 3: 5-7.

Endowment and practice are the two qualifications for service. Preparation involves materials, and then the processes by which these materials are developed. The Romans embodied this idea in their military speech when they called their armies exercitus, "the exercised." Men were essential, but they were not an army; drill and discipline must continue through months of faithful practice in order that a lot of men might be molded into a unified organism.

Human capacities of various degrees and kinds have been bestowed upon us all, and the reckoning concerning us will be "according to that we have, and not according to that we have not." But these gifts must come under the influence of grace, of wisdom. All these are endowment; then Christ says, "Follow me," and following Him we become trained in His service.

It is a trite, but none the less true, saying of the school room that the pupil learns to do by doing. In the spiritual world, however, learning is also doing. Nothing is mere drill or rehearsal, and if work be done in such mood, it is neither service nor preparation. It might indeed appear that there is some danger of a wrong impression from the wording of our topic; the Church is at work in the Endeavor Society and through its membership in a no less true and important sense than in the lines of work devolving upon the adult portion of its organization. The Endeavorer will doubtless come into larger fields and more prominent positions as the period of faithful service increases, but it will be because the work of the Church was well and thoroughly done in his earlier years.

In the epistle to the Hebrews we read of "those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern good and evil." These doubtless acted upon their enlightenment or their skill would soon have failed them. Right use develops not mere facility, but power and discrimination, and depth of understanding as well. In all things in Christian experience there is progress and enlargement,—an approach to the pattern of the Perfect Man. In all things also there is a beginning. Christian Endeavor makes provision for us to begin as young people, "doing the next thing." We believe that it is better that we should so begin than that we should wait until habits are formed that are hard to break, and our inexperienced hands must take up the work.

The Church of our fathers' day was without this "beginner's class." Will our larger achievements justify our belief in its worth?

Educational.

CHRISTIAN WORK AND BIBLE STUDY AT PENN COLLEGE.

The fall term closed the 24th ultimo. The Christian Associations have maintained their usual deep interest and large membership. Although there have been fewer professed conversions, the work seems to have been a healthy one. The several weekly meetings have been well attended. The Week of Prayer for Students was fitly observed. Quite a number of the students freely attend both the Sabbath meeting and the Bible School. Not a few are active members of the Christian Endeavor Society. Several attend Friends' West Oskaloosa Meeting, teach in the Bible School and interest themselves in the Christian Endeavor there. Some frequently hold meetings in the jail Sabbath afternoon. Several preach in neighboring churches, of Friends and others, as do some of the professors frequently.

With just a few exceptions, all students have regular weekly Scripture recitations in the college courses under the professors. Yet, in the volunteer Bible classes of the Christian Associations Sabbath morning, there are thirty-six young men in three classes and forty young women in three classes. There are sixteen in the students' mission-study classes, and nine are Student Volunteers.

About the middle of November Arthur Rugh, a traveling secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, labored among the students two days, publicly and privately, with good effect. Quite a number received, it is thought, lasting impressions. Some have a clearer view of their life work; others better understand how to consider the question intelligently and prayerfully.

A little later Virgil G. Hinshaw, of the class of 1900, national traveling secretary of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, addressed an interesting public meeting of the Prohibition Club at the college. Within two years he has visited about 200 colleges and universities, speaking publicly and organizing clubs for the study of the temperance problem. Great good is sure to result from the work.

In the Biblical Department very interesting work is being done in four classes—in Hebrew, the life of Christ, Biblical history and New Testament literature. After New Year's the class in the last subject will begin exegesis in the Epistle to the Colossians.

Here the value of Greek to the student will be realized. Too many Christian students never know how indispensable Greek is to every thorough student of the New Testament. Similarly Old Testament literature and exegesis, using Hebrew, will follow next year. About one-fourth of the 246 students who have taken more or less work in the Biblical Department are ministers of the gospel. Seven have become foreign missionaries, and seven are professors in Friends' colleges.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

We have pleasant greetings from Caleb Jenkins, who is now located in Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Thomas Williams is located at Amboy, Ind., as pastor in the meeting. Some new members have been received recently.

We have a cheerful and joyful message from Joseph Stanley, who at a venerable age is living at Brookhaven, Miss.

Eber G. Spicer, son of J. L. Spicer, is in his final year at Wilmington College, Ohio. He spent the holidays in Cincinnati.

J. L. Spicer, visitor of the Children's Home, Cincinnati, put 150 in new homes, visited 640 and traveled 2,242 miles in his work of the past year.

Endeavorers of Ludlow, Ohio, in company with their pastor, Oscar Moon, spent an evening with Joseph Pemberton in appreciation of his past services as pastor in the meeting.

Brooklyn Friends have been remodeling their meeting house, and have made extensive changes. The house will be re-opened for use on First-day, the 11th, when a large attendance is expected.

William J. Cleaver, who has labored as pastor in the meeting at Farmer's Institute for three years, has moved, with his family, near Carthage, Ind., and is laboring now in Walnut Ridge Meeting.

Charles W. Pritchard, of West Newton, attended Knights-town Monthly Meeting, Indiana, on the 27th ult., with a message of love for the church. On the 28th he had acceptable service at Raysville.

Cincinnati Monthly Meeting made a number of poor families glad with baskets of provisions for Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners.

William H. Taylor, M.D., was made to rejoice on the occasion of his birthday by the gathering of some fifty of his friends. They left some substantial gifts and showed much appreciation of his ministry.

Lynn Grove Monthly Meeting was held at Lynnvile, Ia., Tenth month 4th. Eli G. Parker obtained a minute for gospel service within the limits of Iowa Yearly Meeting and wherever the Lord calls and way opens.

Bertha T. Pinkham and Grace Lamson held a two weeks' meeting in South Marion, Ind., Meeting House with good effect. About 65 in all saved and renewed, the largest part being conversions among young people.

Leannah Hobson, who labored for some time as pastor in Westfield Meeting, Ind., closed a series of meetings at Farmland, Ind., the middle of last month. Her labors were much appreciated by all, and some definite work was done.

Friends in Shawnee Quarterly Meeting, Oklahoma, feel a need for evangelists, pastors and teachers, and extend a hearty invitation to all who may feel called to locate in the meeting. This opening offers cheap homes and good schools in a mild climate among an educated, kind-hearted and sociable people, who will be firm Christians and good Friends if they are brought to Christ and taught our principles.

At Lynn Grove Monthly Meeting, held Eleventh month 1st, 1902, certificates were received for Charles Williams and family from Earlham Monthly Meeting, Ia., and one was issued for William Howerton and family to Oskaloosa Monthly Meeting, Ia.

President J. J. Mills, of Earlham College, continues to improve in health, and, after the holidays, will go with his wife to the South for further recuperation. Their daughter, Gertrude, is a most acceptable member of the faculty of Fairmount Academy.

Susannah R. and Edward M., wife and son of the late Micajah M. Binford, have had their membership transferred from South Eighth Street Monthly Meeting to Hopewell, in Dublin Quarterly Meeting, Indiana, their postoffice address now being Lewisville, Ind.

On Eleventh month 22d, 1902, Elizabeth Larkin, of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, assisted by the pastor, William West, began a series of meetings at West Elkton, O., which continued about three weeks. The preaching was clear and very instructive, and the members were greatly edified.

William Marshall, of Glenwood, Iowa, is now serving as temporary pastor in the meeting at Burr Oak, as the meeting has been in need of such labor since the removal of C. A. Bowles to Cleveland, Ohio. There is a desire in the meeting, however, for some good minister to come and locate in the meeting permanently.

The conference of ministers and elders of New England Yearly Meeting, held at Lynn, opened on the 31st of Twelfth month and continued three days. Personal letters inform us that it has been most successful. Nearly every meeting in New England was represented, and there was a high degree of life and interest manifested.

Lewis I. Hadley labored in a series of meetings at Spice-land, Ind., from the 10th to 24th ult., holding two sessions a day. Every meeting was marked with the presence of the Holy Spirit, and many found Christ in saving and cleansing power. Emma G. Randolph, a minister in the quarterly meeting, located at Kennard, was present one week, and assisted in the singing.

It was stated in the last issue that the vote on the referendum in Vermont would be on the 6th of First month. The published acts of the Legislature, however, state that the vote shall be taken on the first Third-day in Second month, which is the 3d. George W. Morrow, the president of the Anti-Saloon League, spoke at Monkton Ridge, Vt., recently, and said he was more encouraged for the triumph of the cause than ever before. Great efforts are being made all over the State to prevent the acceptance of high license.

Shawnee Quarterly Meeting was held at Valley Queen, Tryon, Okla., from the 19th to 21st ult. On account of sickness and forty miles of bad roads, many of the members did not attend. However, the meetings were all seasons of great blessings. Josiah Butler, yearly meeting superintendent, was present and helped formulate a plan for systematic work. The other visiting Friends were Joseph L. Bean, of Le Grand, Ia.; Elisha Janeway, of Haddam, Kan.; Oliver Beeson and Dr. Fear, of Knightstown Monthly Meeting, Ind., and Christian Hansen, of Tonganoxie, Kan.

The work on Friends' Meeting House and Academy Building at Friendswood, Tex., is steadily moving forward, but for want of funds the progress has been slow. The Friends desire very much to complete the building without going in debt to even the funds held by the yearly meeting for that purpose. The battle seems a long one, but they have now within $200 of enough to get the building where a little delay will not cause loss to it. They are very thankful for the kindly remembrances of friends, and if others can aid them at this time, success is assured. Jesse Miles, Friendswood, Texas, is treasurer, to whom help may be sent.

Charles Wright, from Grose Land, Ind., closed a series of meetings at Leavenworth, Kan., the 24th ult., in which he had been laboring for five weeks. Twenty-nine conversions and renewals are reported, and twenty-one have already united with Friends. Four men were redeemed from the power of strong drink, and one inveterate smoker was induced to give up his tobacco. Leavenworth is the seat of the State Penitentiary, the Soldiers' Home, and many places of iniquity cluster about them and tend to lower the moral and religious tone of the city. The prayers of Christians are asked for in behalf of aggressive Christian work in this place.

South Eighth Street Monthly Meeting, Richmond, Ind., was held Twelfth month 18th, there being a large attendance. The annual reports of the trustees, Library Committee and the Committees on Relief, Correspondence, Pastoral Work, Finance and Open Church, and of the treasurer and pastor, were all presented, and show that there is a remarkable increase of active participation in Christian work on the part of the members. The finances were reported clear for the past year. The meeting house is now kept open daily, there being a reading room well provided with papers and periodicals, and always some of the members present to welcome those who come.

Yonge Street Quarterly Meeting was held in the new meeting house on Carlton Street, in the city of Toronto, Canada, on the 20th and 21st ult. The meeting was well attended and was a time of much spiritual benefit to many who were present. Very instructive and edifying sermons were preached by Robert H. Rogers, the yearly meeting superintendent of Evangelistic Work, and Frank Cornell, pastor at New Market. The absence of our dear lamented friend, Hannah Jane Cody, of New Market, recently deceased, was deeply felt in the meeting. She was well known throughout the yearly meeting, having served the yearly meeting as clerk, and also as clerk of the quarterly meeting. She was clerk of the meeting on ministry and oversight at the time of her death, which recorded a minute of sympathy to her husband and other members of her family.

MARRIED.

NEWBY—STAFFORD.—At the home of William P. Spencers, in Mahaska County, Iowa, on the evening of Twelfth month 24th, 1902, C. H. Newby, of Lynnvill, Ia., and Alice Stafford, formerly of Tonganoxie, Kan. Their home will be in Lynnvill, Iowa.

WHITE—CASTERTON.—At Hesper, Ia., Twelfth month 24th, 1902, Ruddy J. White and Florence B. Casterton, both of Hesper, Ia.

DIED.

GRAVES.—At Highland, Minn., Twelfth month 19th, 1902, Mary Ann Graves, aged 76 years. A member of Highland Monthly Meeting of Friends.

GOVE.—At his home in Weare, N. H., Eleventh month 30th, 1902, John Milton Gove, in his 84th year. A useful member of Friends, who was spared for service many years.

HOLE.—At the home of her grandfather, Edward C. Young, in North Lewisburg, Ohio, Elizabeth Hole, eldest daughter of Charles S. and Hannah W. Hole, in the 14th year of her age.

JOYNER.—Near Woodland, N. C., Fourth month 11th, 1902, Nancy H. Joyner, aged 73 years. She labored in the school room many years, having begun teaching when she was 21. She served in that sphere until she was 70. She was married in her 23d year, and her noble, Christian character was manifest nowhere more than in her home life.

ONG.—At his home, Smithfield, O., Twelfth month 10th, 1902, Mifflin Ong, aged 66 years. He was converted under the ministry of Seth C. Reece, and united with Friends and remained faithful to his profession until death.

OSBORNE.—At her home in Weare, N. H., Ninth month 11th, 1902, Abigail H. Osborne, in her 82d year. She served as an elder in her home meeting.

SAWYER.—At his home in Weare, N. H., Eleventh month 16th, 1902, Lindley M. Sawyer, in his 70th year. He was a valued member of the meeting.

IS DISEASE BENEFICENT?

In a recent address at University College, Liverpool, England, Sir Frederick Treves insisted that we can no longer, after the manner of our forefathers, regard disease as an evil influence distinct from all natural processes and having nothing beneficent in any of its manifestations. Says "The Hospital" (November 1st), in commenting on his remarks:

"The old physicians regarded every symptom of disease as being of necessity wholly noxious and as needing to be stamped out. If the patient vomited, the vomiting must be stopped; if he coughed, the cough must be made to cease; if he failed to take food, he must be made to eat. To the modern physician, however, things appeal in a very different manner. To them there is nothing preternatural about disease. Not only is it the outcome of natural processes, but these processes are themselves, in many cases, marked by a purpose, and that purpose a beneficent one. The time has come when it would rather appear that many of the so-called symptoms of disease are but expressions of a natural effort toward cure; that they are not malign in intent, but have for their end the ridding of the body of the very troubles which they are supposed to represent. Take, for example, tuberculosis. Modern pathology teaches that the so-called symptoms of this disease do but represent a valiant attempt on the part of the body to repair an accident, such accident being the entrance of a parasite into the tissues. Take, again, an inflammation following a septic wound of a finger. The disease, so called, is distressing enough, but the

FED THE PROFESSOR.

This One Had "Dreams More Terrible Than Visions of 'The Comet.'"

You must feed the professors and teachers right or they can't do justice to pupils. They should, of all people, possess a healthy nervous and mental organization. The teacher with weak nerves cannot obtain as good results as the one who has a perfect mental poise.

"It had been for me a most difficult problem," said a professor connected with a prominent college of the South, "how to keep the nerves in proper condition and the brain in good working order. Lack of proper opportunity to take exercise, an irregular diet and improper food brought on a general breakdown in health. I became irritable and restless, and at night would dream of more terrible things than any of Dr. Holmes' visions of 'The Comet.'"

"Upon the suggestion of a friend, who is a busy business man, I commenced to eat Grape-Nuts every day, and found in a short time a great improvement in my health; the food contained just the right kind of nourishment for my body and brain that was lacking. The restlessness disappeared, my stomach ceased to trouble me, mental vigor returned and I am now able to do more and better work than ever before.

"When friends express surprise to find me so well, it is necessary only to mention the merits of Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

manifestations are no mere outcome of a malign purpose. They are well intended, and have for their object the protection of the body from further parasitic invasions and the elimination of such septic matter as may have been already introduced; and so on. Even the much-dreaded peritonitis which to surgeons of the past appeared as the very hand of fate—an impending horror spreading only disaster and death—is now recognized as the operating surgeon's best friend. Times have changed; our views have altered; and we must no longer 'fight' disease in the old manner, nor 'attack' it with the old weapons."

SPIRITUAL POSSIBILITIES.

Behold, the child of twelve, as in the temple court he gladly lingers!

To learn of God is but his vital breath,
The beating pulse of life to heaven aspiring;

A life that knows no death.

He could not be content to grow in wisdom and in stature only;

The quickened soul sought daily food above;

The plant of human life put on its beauty,

And blossomed into love.

And thus in fellowship with human needs
A quiet life pursuing,

The humble paths of earth in which he trod,

Led outward into larger fields of service,
And upward unto God.

That childish life of earnest questioning and ever upward seeking,

Like ours in perfect innocence began;

He trod the paths we tread. Like ours his childhood

Was prophecy of the man.

The seeds we sow to-day with heed or careless hands bear fruit to-morrow;

Thoughts and desires develop into deeds,

Making life's garden beautiful as heaven,
Or overgrown with weeds.

Think not, O soul of mine, that chance or fate forbids thine upward climbing!

Chance may thy earthly hopes or prospects mar,

But all the doors of life which heavenward open,

Forever stand ajar.

And tenderly from out the spirit land a Father's voice is calling:

My child, if thou like Him a son wouldst be,

The gates of glory that to Him were open,

Are open now to thee.

EDWARD WING.

The late Dr. Andrew Bonar once remarked in his own quaint fashion that it was always easy to trace footprints of a person if we walked close behind him, but if we were some distance back we might fail to find them, and accordingly, if we followed close after the Master, we would easily see the way, but if we tried to follow afar off we would find it difficult to know the path of His will.—Selected.

OWENS VALLEY, CALIFORNIA

George M. McKinney, of Chicago, general immigration agent and land expert for the Harriman railroad systems, arrived in San Francisco to-day, in the course of a tour of the great country districts of California suitable for general colonization.

"I have come directly from Inyo County," said he, "and I am greatly impressed with Owens Valley, in the eastern part of California. I found hidden away in the mountains up there in Inyo County, 1,000,000 acres in Owens Valley, that is the most desirable land for general colonization purposes that I have thus far seen in California."

OUR MISSION.

To-day is your day and mine, the only day we have, the day in which we play our part. What our part may signify in the great whole we may not understand; but we are to play it, and now is our time. This we know: it is a part of action, not of whining. It is a part of love, not of cynicism. It is for us to express love in terms of human helpfulness. This we know, for we have learned from sad experience that any other source of life leads towards decay and waste.

PHILADELPHIA, FIRST MONTH 15, 1903.

With a production of 16,329,805 barrels of flour in the year just closed, Minneapolis passed every previous record, the output running 407,905 barrels in excess of the product of 1901, which held the record. To make this quantity of flour the mills consumed each day an average of 190,000 bushels, and for the year a total of 70,400,000 bushels of wheat.

The bubonic plague is becoming a serious thing in some parts of Mexico. In one city alone thirty-six deaths were reported in one day. Speedy efforts are being made to stop the disease, but its spread toward the United States is causing some alarm in Arizona. It is not likely to reach our country, however. All infected ports will be quarantined at once.

In sending the third annual report of the Philippines to the President, Secretary Root urged that $3,000,000 be given to relieve distress in the islands, and this request was heartily recommended by Mr. Roosevelt, who transmitted the report to Congress. It seems that the conditions resulting from the destruction by rinderpest of 90 per cent. of the carabaos, the draft animals of the island, and the consequent failure of the rice crop, followed by an epidemic of cholera, are so serious and distressing as to call for action by Congress beyond that for which the Commission specifically asks.

We cannot help contrasting the liberties of our public press with those of Russia. Some weeks ago a committee of forty journalists and literary men was formed to arrange for a celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the Russian press. It was decided to hold a banquet, to which all journalists and literary men in St. Petersburg were invited, but the Chief of Police of the Department of the Ministry of the Interior informed four of the committee that if the program was carried out they would be expelled from St. Petersburg and ordered to reside in whatever locality the Minister decided.

Senator Hoar, the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, made a memorable speech before that body, one day last week, on the subject of "trust regulation," in which he discussed the effect of the control of vast wealth by individuals, saying that, in such a system, there was much to threaten republican liberty, and the next day the public was made aware of arrangements by which the Reading Railway system was brought into the same "community of ownership" with the Pennsylvania and the Vanderbilt railroads, and by which the control of both the hard and soft coal business of the country lies in the same hands. These events serve to illustrate two powerful forces in our country which are moving in different directions, and we wait with interest to see what the result will be.

It is announced from Washington that the claim of Great Britain and Germany for an "open door" for commerce in the Philippines has been favorably considered by the Administration and the majority leaders in the Senate. This action, it is understood, is in pursuance of the position taken by the American Commissioners in the negotiations resulting in the Treaty of Paris, which provides in the tenth article that the United States shall for ten years from the date of ratification admit Spanish ships and merchandise to the ports of the Philippine Islands on the same terms as ships and merchandise of the United States are admitted.

Reports from China show that internal conditions are very unfavorable for the Celestial Empire. Mail advices from Peking tell of a Mohammedan rising at Chank Chia Cuan, while the Peking correspondent of Jiji Shempo, of Tokio, wires that telegrams have been received at Peking from the commandant at Monkdei that Nan Hofu, who heads the insurrection in Shing Niang, is now the leader of a hundred thousand men, and has obtained possession of the most important points in the neighborhood of Monkdei. The rebellion in Kwang Si also continues to grow. Advices from Hong Kong state that one-half the province of Kwang Si has fallen into the hands of the rebels. General Ma has been killed, and the capital, Kwilein, is in imminent peril.

Henry Phipps, of New York, a former partner of Andrew Carnegie, will establish in Philadelphia an institute for the study, treatment and prevention of tuberculosis, and will endow it with $1,000,000 or more. It will be named the Henry Phipps Institute, and will be located in the center of the city, among the poor, if a suitable site can be obtained. Dr. Lawrence F. Flick, of Philadelphia, who is one of the foremost authorities on this disease in this country, and perhaps in the world, will be the director of the institute. The institute will be made the center of the distribution of knowledge as to the treatment and prevention of tuberculosis in this country, and will be modeled somewhat on the Pasteur Institute of Paris, but will be devoted exclusively to its special line. It will consist of an administration building containing a Finsen light institute, a hydro-therapeutic institute, with baths of every description, including electric, and every device known to science for the study and treatment of tuberculosis.

THE WORK OF LAYMEN.

THE great work which has been done in missionary fields in the past fifty years has largely been done by persons who are usually called "laymen." For the most part those who have obeyed the call have not been trained in theological seminaries; they have received no ordination from their churches. They have come out of the rank and file of the church membership. It has been conclusively proved that the great work of ingathering and teaching can be done by laymen as well as by ministers, for in every foreign field it has been done. Only two things have been required of the missionary—that he shall have a clear call to his work, and that he shall possess gifts and qualifications for doing it well. He is just a mere man with a call to do some definite part of God's work in the world.

This principle, which has been carried out in the missionary field, was the principle which underlay all the spiritual activity in the early Christian Church. Paul stoutly denies that he has ever been ordained by men. He is "called of God to be an apostle." He is "an apostle by the will of God." He claims his right to be called an apostle on the ground that he has "labored more abundantly" than all the other apostles. The great Church at Antioch, where the name "Christians" was first used, and which became the first great center of missionary activity, was founded by unknown laymen (Acts 11: 19-21). In all the New Testament churches, about which we know, there was scope for the activity of all the members who had any kind of gifts. The sharp distinction which sprang up later between clergy and laity came from the old idea of a sacrificing priesthood, who were set apart to perform the religious duties for the unsanctified multitude. This conception is in no respects Christian. It is Jewish and pagan. It belongs to a religious system which recognizes a distant and unrevealed God. If Christ's revelation of God is true, then every believer has direct relations with Him. More than that, every believer has at once some ministry or service to perform. It is impossible for any of us to take our place in His Church as parasites to be passively fed by somebody else. No great Church has ever been built on that basis, or ever can be. There will never be a true Church of Jesus Christ until the members of it realize that they are all called to something. If laymen can do the mighty missionary work of the world, why can they not do the equally important work which is crying to be done in every city and town of America? Too long the idea has prevailed that "divine service" is the business of ministers. It is a mediæval notion which needs to be expelled. Ministers are only specially gifted persons. They form no class above other mortals. They merely have greater responsibilities because they have received much. Their best service and greatest duty is to help others to find their sphere of work and to do it. A Church can no more prosper with drones in it than a bee-hive can. "Every member a worker" should be our motto, and "every Christian a contributor to the work of advancing the kingdom," should be our aim. Our particular denomination is pledged to this principle, but we woefully need more loyal devotion to it. We have too often leveled down, and in our desire to have no separate class of priests, we have come too near having no living oracles of the word at all. Now we need to level up and show what a Church could do with every member a priest, in his sphere interpreting the Christ whom he loves and follows.

WHAT SHALL OUR MINISTERS READ ?

It was "opened" to George Fox that "to be bred at Oxford or Cambridge was not sufficient to fit a man to be a minister of Christ." It takes no "opening" to-day to make any thoughtful person realize that a minister must have something more than book-learning—something more than a trained mind or a full head. He who is to reach and convict the hearts of men must above everything else know how to "depict Christ crucified" before men's eyes, as in the first century Paul did among the hills and in the towns of Galatia. He must have the power of spiritual vision, the sense of eternal realities, the passion for souls, the interior knowledge of Christ, and the power of His resurrection; without which, preaching, even in the most eloquent words, is "like sounding brass or a clanging cymbal." But while all this is true—true as preaching—it remains also true that nobody can long speak to the condition of a present-day audience, or expect to edify a church unless he is acquainted with the intellectual problems which confront his hearers. Nor will his message be likely to increase in power or expand in range unless his mind is being fed with material to draw from. We have all known instances of ministers who had living and fresh openings, and who for a season spoke with power and promise, but who slowly dried up and ceased to minister, because they had nothing to give but the old manna of an earlier day. Others have gone on to the end of their lives stringing together a succession of texts by the law of association, all the time supposing that they were specially inspired, because the texts came without any mental exertion.

If our ministers of the present, and the coming, time are to do their work effectively, they must learn the lesson which the ministry of the past has taught us, namely, that the minister who is to grow in his work must do his best to enter into the thought and the problems of his time. If he is to do that he must read. What, then, shall he specially read? His reading, in the main, must center on the Bible. He must once and for all abandon the hit-or-miss method of reading the Scriptures, and also the topical plan of study. Neither of these ways can possibly lead to a real understanding of the great book. The Bible cannot be grasped or interpreted until it is studied in its historical setting. Let us begin with the New Testament. At every point of the gospel narrative we find Christ dealing with existing situations, and we soon discover that we need to know the historical background. Who were these scribes? What were publicans? How did the Galileans differ from the Judeans? Who were the Herods? What were the Jews expecting? What were the prevailing views on the kingdom of the Messiah? There is hardly a parable or a passage which can be properly understood without some reading outside the Bible. One of the best popular books for such reading is Gilbert's "Student's Life of Jesus," or Edersheim's "Life of Christ."

Then we come to the great message of the Lord. What did He teach? Most of us think we know until somebody asks us. Nobody can afford to ignore what the great teachers of our time have to say on the central ideas of the Master. Some of the best books in this field are: Horton's "Teaching of Jesus"; Gilbert's "Revelation of Jesus"; Peabody's "Jesus Christ and the Social Question." For those who want to go still deeper there is Fairbairn's "Philosophy of the Christian Religion," especially Part II; while for those who want a simple, easy book, nothing is better than Hyde's "Jesus' Way."

It is astonishing how few of our ministers know anything accurately or clearly about Paul. They read his epistles with hardly a dim notion of the writer's problems, or the situation with which in each instance he is dealing. In the past twenty-five years Paul has been rediscovered, and his marvelous mission is the most inspiring thing in Christian history. The best books here for the general reader are: Thatcher's "Apostolic Church"; Bartlett's "Apostolic Age" and McGiffert's "Apostolic Age." It would be well, also, to read Gilbert's "First Interpreters of Jesus." Each epistle should be read through in the Twentieth Century translation.

Next we will turn back to consider the Old Testament, which must forever remain, in large measure, an unknown book until it is studied historically. This means that the interpreter must get back to the point of view of the writer, and to do that he must know somewhere near the date of the book he is dealing with. He must go to his task with an open mind. His studies will undoubtedly force him to question his inherited views. But what he wants in his work is not views, but facts. If science is true, then the traditional interpretation of the Pentateuch is not the correct one. He must have an intelligent understanding of this situation. The best books for him to use here are: Abbott's "Life and Literature of the Ancient Hebrews"; George Adam Smith's "Preaching of the Old Testament"; Gladstone's "Who Wrote the Bible?" Drummond's "Ascent of Man," and Fiske's "Destiny of Man."

It is now generally recognized that the Old Testament cannot be mastered until the work of the prophets is understood. In fact, the Old Testament must be interpreted through the prophets. It is hardly necessary to say that the general reader is almost completely ignorant of this most important part of the Old Testament. He has no idea, or only a vague idea, of what Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel were doing throughout their long lives. He reads their words without any knowledge of their setting. The books which will help him most here are: George Adam Smith's "Isaiah" and "Twelve Prophets"; Robertson Smith's "Prophets of Israel"; Cornill's "Prophets of Israel" and Riehm's "Messianic Prophecy." Every minister should possess the entire series of "Messages of the Bible," edited by Sanders & Kent, two volumes of which are on the Prophets.

For reading on the development of Christian beliefs the best single book is Allen's "Continuity of Christian Thought." On distinctly theological lines the best book is Clarke's "Outlines of Christian Theology." For Friends' history, some of the best books are: Hodgkin's "George Fox"; Beek's "The Friends: Who They Are, and What They Have Done"; Turner's "Quakers"; Stephen's "Quaker Strongholds," and Sharpless's "Quaker Experiment in Government."

The best and most helpful books on the Psychology of Religion are: Coe's "The Spiritual Life," Starbuck's "Psychology of Conversion" and Everett's "Psychological Basis of Religion," and for the trained mind James's "Varieties of Religious Experience."

These are some of the books which may be read with profit. They are all thoroughly modern books, and will give the readers of them a new attitude toward the problems of life. Those who are keen to scent unsoundness of doctrine, and who prefer to live and die by what their mothers taught them than to take new risks will probably find little comfort in such reading. Those, however, who are bold and valiant to search for the truth, even where some error lurks, will find their faith growing stronger as they read.

THE CHRISTIAN'S WEALTH.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The servants of Christ have a different arithmetic from the worldling. He counts his gains by the earthly possessions that he accumulates. The Christian often gains by the losses of earthly things. "He that loses for My sake finds," is an assurance full of good cheer to many a tired and afflicted child of God. Grasping after earthly wealth or honor costs very often a sad loss of grace and godliness. It is not what we take up, but what we are ready to give up, that makes us spiritually rich. Giving up for the sake of our Master honors Him, and adds to our treasures in heaven. Therein is the peculiar glory of the martyrs; they counted not even their lives as dear, so that they might honor their crucified Lord, and glorious will be their reward among the crowned conquerors up yonder.

It is impossible to compute what treasures every faithful Christian may be storing away for that celestial storehouse. There is a constant accumulation. There is a "laying up" day by day. A "book of remembrance" is kept, and God will give to every one as his work shall be. That record on high will read very differently from the assessor's tax-books in this world. Plutus and Midas are assessed in New York or London as millionaires. Up yonder a "certain poor widow" will outshine many of these colossal money-mongers because she put into the Lord's treasury the two mites that were all her living. That box of alabaster which Mary broke over the feet of her beloved Master will not lose its fragrance in heaven. Every act of self-denial for Christ is an investment for heaven. Every word spoken for Him here will echo there. A precious encouragement is this for faithful parents, and Sunday School teachers, and city missionaries, and the whole army of hard toilers in the service of the best of Masters. Do you sometimes get discouraged, my brother, because you do not see more immediate results of your efforts? Don't worry. You are responsible for doing your whole duty; God is responsible for results. His "reward is with Him" to give to every servant according as his work shall be.

It goes without saying that, as they who turn many to righteousness will shine as stars in that celestial firmament, there are some favored servants of Jesus who will come into magnificent inheritances in heaven. We can imagine Robert Raikes surrounded by a multitude of those who were the spiritual trophies of his Sunday Schools, and Spurgeon welcomed by the happy souls whom he led to Jesus, and our own Moody finding his heaven all the more joyous for the number of those whom his untiring labors won to the life everlasting. Consecrated talents will then blaze as crowns of rejoicing. What an inducement is this to every young man and woman who is raising the question: How shall I employ my brains, my culture, or my money, to the best advantage? Even one talent, if not hidden or wasted, shall make some very humble Christian rich and radiant when they come into their heavenly inheritance.

In these days, and especially in our own country, there is an astonishing increase of men of immense wealth; the word "million" is almost as common as the word "thousands" was in the days of my childhood. Haste to be rich is the prevailing mania; yet only a very, very small proportion of all the most eager seekers after wealth will ever attain it. But every one of my readers may become "rich toward God." The secret of it is to get by giving. This is the true paradox in the economy of grace. He that refuses to give his whole heart to Christ is doomed to perish without Christ. He that saves for self only loses; he that loses for Christ's sake is sure to save. Would you secure treasures in heaven? Then learn to give, and give bountifully. God loveth the cheerful giver. This is not to be limited to gifts of the purse; for the offerings of silver and gold are only a part of what our Master has a right to; we must freely give of everything that we have freely received.

If you have the heart to pray, give your prayers; answered prayers will be a part of your heavenly inheritance. You that have acquired wisdom and experience, give your counsels to those who need them. Give your personal labors for Christ and the salvation of souls; no wealthy Christian ought to compound with his Master by drawing a bank check in lieu of personal Christian work. Those who have not much money, or counsel, or Christian work to bestow, can afford the blessing of godly living and a holy example. And so a Christly life may be a constant expenditure; even as the noonday sun overflows his golden urn of radiance, and is none the poorer in warmth and brightness.

Such a life is a constant accumulation of heavenly treasures. It is a laying-out here for Christ, and a laying-up yonder. Every good deed is recorded; Every victory over sin has its crown; every service for our Lord is remembered; for He hath said, "The reward is with Me to give to every one as his work shall be." Labor on, pray on, suffer on, battle on, O faithful servant of the crucified Jesus! Every day will add to your treasures in heaven, and so shall you be made meet to be partakers of the glorious inheritance of the saints in light.

"GOD BLESS OUR INTERRUPTIONS."

BY ELIZABETH PRESTON ALLAN.

An old friend who was once staying with me, in conducting our morning worship, used this singular form of petition: "Lord, bless our interruptions to-day, and use them in Thy service, and for Thy glory." I was amused at the rather odd conceit; but hardly a day has passed since then that I have not had occasion to make my own this serviceable prayer.

I have known men and women who have shown heroism under sharp trial who could by no means stand having their own plan for the day's doings broken in upon. And yet how can we be sure that the chart we draw for ourselves at the beginning of the day is the track over which our Pilot means us to sail between sunrise and sunset?

Of course, there are some interruptions against which it is right and wise that we guard ourselves; people who have engagements to meet, and certain hours set apart in which to prepare the sermon, or the address, or the editorial, must decline to be interrupted, except, as the saying is, "in matters of life and death."

But when we have set these bondfolk off to themselves, there remains a large constituency, of women especially, whose time, however busily occupied, is more or less at their own disposal; they may be eager to finish tucking the petticoat, or putting down the carpet, or studying a Bible lesson, or writing a letter, but it can be put off until to-morrow, and when the interrupter comes, it must be.

And the claim that I want to set up here is: that in many cases the interruption is more important than the petticoat or even the Bible lesson. The Bible lesson, or the pot of preserving, was your own plan; but solemn experience has taught us—is it not so?—that the interruption is sometimes straight from God. I would like to ask the best rememberer among us how often she has said to herself, with a sigh of relief: "My! I was very near missing such and such a chance," when it was sometimes a chance of helping and sometimes of being helped.

I am far from being a good rememberer; I am one of the worst; but even I can recall a long list of "interruptions," some of which I accepted patiently and some fretfully, but all freighted with serious responsibilities and opportunities.

One was a proposal on a busy day (when the weather was bad) to do some visiting of poor people; it meant the rescue of an ill woman and hungry children.

One was a call away from a kettle of jelly (and every housekeeper knows how jelly must be timed), which resulted in getting work for a woman almost in despair; work which tided her over despair and gave her the hope necessary to success.

I only ask you to remember—because I need so much myself to be reminded—that when the doorbell rings and the day's scheme of work falls to pieces, our heavenly Father may be sending you the fulfillment of His promise, "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go."—"Christian Index."

MARTHA ANN TAYLOR.

Martha Ann, daughter of Nathan and Ann Stubbs, was born Tenth month 6th, 1826. Early in life she heard the call of her Redeemer to walk in His footsteps, to which she gave attentive ear, and in 1860, through the guidance of the Holy Spirit, she gave utterance to a few broken sentences in the assembled church, which, like the grain of mustard seed, grew and increased until 1867, when the church recognized in her a handmaid anointed and qualified to stand between the living and the dead, as a minister of the Gospel of Christ.

MARTHA ANN TAYLOR.

She traveled more or less extensively through some of the Eastern and many of the Western States. In 1868 she visited in the love of the Gospel all the members of Friends in Tennessee, and in 1872 she likewise visited all the meetings except one in the State of Iowa; also made an extensive visit to the few Friends in Colorado, and was instrumental in establishing a Friends' meeting in that new State. The cause of the downtrodden and unfortunate lay very near her heart, and inspired her to become a pioneer in temperance reform, to visit the Ohio State Prison and the county jail often, and to solicit funds for the Children's Home and Infirmary. During her ministry she preached at over two hundred funerals.

In 1845 she was united in marriage with Lewis Taylor, and together they traveled the rugged pathway of life for nearly sixty years, mutually sharing the conflicts and joys incident to this life. But the hand of affliction had marked her for its victim, despite the constant vigil and the ministration of kind and tender hands. She peacefully fell asleep in Jesus Fourth month 15th, 1902, aged nearly 76 years.

THE NEW ENGLAND CONFERENCE.

One of the most hopeful features of the revival of Quakerism in New England was the conference of ministers, elders and Christian workers held at Lynn, Mass., Twelfth month 31st to First month 2d, inclusive. The conference was the result of a concern expressed in the ministry and oversight meeting last yearly meeting that we might get together some time during the year to carefully consider the state of our Society in New England, the problems which confront us and the solution of these problems.

The attendance was large, one hundred and thirty-eight delegates registering from all parts of the yearly meeting. There were thirteen young ministers present, and the presence and interest of the young people, and their prominent place on the program, gave promise of a bright future for New England Friends.

The speakers were all from New England Yearly Meeting, except James Wood, of Mt. Kisco, N. Y., and Professor M. W. Jacobus, acting president of Hartford Theological Seminary.

The condition of Friends and their work in New England at the present time were considered. It was found that after a rapid decline in the forepart of the past century we had held our own for the past thirty years and the outlook for the future was encouraging. The work before us should be more intensive than extensive in nature that our building may be substantial in character.

The work of the Bible School as a fundamental agency in the upbuilding of the Church was emphasized. It was shown that sister denominations were strengthened and enlarged through this agency and our own possibilities by the use of this hand-maiden of the Church were brought clearly before us.

In a most lucid manner the position and duties of elders were defined. The most excellent "paper" elder found on the pages of the Uniform Discipline became a living vitalized member of the Church of Jesus Christ, one who is ever helpful in the encouragement of the ministry and who, in the absence of ministers, will faithfully guide the meeting as the Spirit may direct.

The problems which confront us in our work, both in city and country, were found to be largely identical. The introduction of questionable methods in order to attract and amuse was discouraged, and the strength of the simple gospel of Jesus Christ to attract and hold all classes of people was emphasized. Ministering to the social needs of men was, however, considered an important feature of our work. The work of the ministry received a large share of attention, and in some of its aspects was considered in seven of the nine sessions. Its work was shown to be the teaching of God's will and producing knowledge of God's best thought for men and in men. In order to do this men must go to the Bible to learn what God says. Man must know what God is saying to him; he must know himself, know others and what God is doing in His kingdom. Equipment by reading and study both in and outside of educational institutions was strongly emphasized.

In the relation of young people to the ministry the danger of haste is to be guarded against. One should be sure he is called of God and be ready to give the work to which he is called the first place in his life. With this settled conviction he should shape his life accordingly, preparing himself by such means as God places within his power that he may become a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

The sermon in its conception and preparation was treated by one of our young ministers attending Harvard University. The harmony of the views expressed with the doctrines of Friends was very marked.

The sermon must be a message directly from God, inspired for the occasion, conceived and prepared under the direction of the Holy Spirit.

A paper on "Manner of Preaching" emphasized the danger of detracting from a message by creaturely activity and the fact that the less of the man that is in evidence, except as he is hidden behind Christ, the greater will be the effect of the preaching.

The minister of Christ should not only be in touch with his immediate membership, but should be a recognized power in relation to the social and educational problems of the community in which he lives.

The duties of Christian citizenship were presented very clearly as opportunities by which the Church may effectively advance the kingdom of God.

A paper on "How We Got the Bible" showed the result of much research and was so instructive that steps are being taken to have it printed and distributed throughout the Bible Schools of the yearly meeting.

Papers and discussions on various other subjects of vital interest to us as a society revealed the fact that Friends are alive to the needs of the day, and believe that it is possible to meet these needs with the spirit and principles which were manifested by the founder of our Society.

The evangelistic spirit was especially evident throughout the conference and the gospel of Jesus Christ was continually emphasized as the world's great need.

On Sixth-day evening the Lynn local Christian Endeavor Society gave a tea to those who remained. At the rally which followed the president of the Y. M. C. E. Union gave a helpful address, and Dr. Trueblood, in a few words, summed up the meaning of the conference to our young people. He said that it had been an "expression of an opening into larger things," "a discovery or revelation of young people" and had "revealed an extraordinary spirit of harmony and co-operation."

At the closing session of the conference the following resolutions were adopted as a brief consensus of the papers and discussions:

"1. The present state of our Society in New England, though not one for entire satisfaction, shows ample grounds for hopefulness and encouragement in renewed efforts for the future. The rapid decline in our membership begun more than half a century ago, has been checked, and for about thirty years the Church has held its own, and much reconstructive work along various lines has been done.

"The time is ripe for an advance, and there is an evident awakening to greater earnestness and intelligent direction of energy which promise well for the future.

"2. In this progress the work of the Bible School holds a most fundamental place. Not only must we interest our own children in this work at the earliest possible age and hold them there, but both our school and ultimately our Society, must be largely recruited from without. Older Friends also should remain in the Bible School and make it a real source of religious instruction.

"3. The elders, overseers and all members of the Pastoral Committee must gird themselves anew for their duties and privileges in sustaining, encouraging and supplementing the ministry, and especially in the shepherding and instruction of the flock. It is in the spiritual life, energy and devotion of this body that the future of our Church must place its great hope.

"4. The meetings of ministry and oversight throughout the yearly meeting are urged to take up and discuss from month to month the various problems of practical work in their meetings and in the community.

"5. The ministry, in addition to the essentials of a well-considered call, an ever-renewed baptism of the Spirit and an entire consecration to the work, should be strengthened intellectually in every way in order that its authority, leadership and usefulness may be increased rather than lost by the trend of modern thought.

"To this end college and special religious training are urged wherever possible, and prayerful, persistent reading, study and thoughtful observation are recommended to those already in the field. It is hoped that all ministers will make much use of the circulating library just established and located for convenience at Friends School, Providence.

"Inspiration for the message should be prayerfully sought and the soul always kept open toward God for suggestion, while every resource of the mind and character should be used to bring it home to the hearers.

"6. The supremacy of Jesus Christ in all things as the object of all our study and the foundation of all authority both of faith and works was most profoundly and sympathetically presented. And it is hoped that this attitude toward our Lord Jesus Christ may characterize the work of all the meetings and members in our yearly meeting."

My faith is that there is a far greater amount of revelation given to guide each man by the principles laid down in the Bible, by conscience and by Providence, than most men are aware of. It is not the light which is defective; it is an eye to see it.—Norman Macleod.

LESSON IV.

FIRST MONTH 25, 1903.

PAUL'S COUNSEL TO THE THESSALONIANS.

1 Thess. 5: 14-28.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Hold fast that which is good. 1 Thess. 5: 21.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, First mo. 19.—The coming of Christ. 1 Thess. 5: 1-11.

Third-day, First mo. 20.—Paul's counsel to the Thessalonians. 1 Thess. 5: 12-28.

Fourth-day, First mo. 21.—Possibilities of grace. Eph. 3: 14-21.

Fifth-day, First mo. 22.—The stature of Christ. Eph. 4: 11-16.

Sixth-day, First mo. 23.—The mind of Christ. Phil. 2: 1-13.

Seventh-day, First mo. 24.—Death to self. Col. 3: 5-17.

First-day, First mo. 25.—Be ye holy. 1 Pet. 1: 13-16.

The Epistles to the Thessalonians are interesting as being the earliest of Paul's writings which have come down to us; possibly they are the first written of any of the books of the New Testament as we now have them. They were composed not very long after Paul's visit to Thessalonica, as described in the last lesson—probably within a few months. They were written from Corinth, probably some time in the year 52 or 53 A.D. They deal particularly with the doctrine of the second coming of Christ. It is evident that the believers had misunderstood or exaggerated Paul's words regarding this doctrine, and had fallen into errors regarding it. Some felt that those who died before He came would miss the blessing; others, that because He was coming so soon (as they believed) it was not worth while to work or do anything. Both of these errors Paul corrects. All through the Epistles there is a warm and affectionate appreciation of the love and care which the Thessalonians had for the writer. Incidentally we may infer that a large number of the believers had been Pagans (1 Thess. 1: 9, 10). The lesson is from the hortatory part of the First Epistle. It would be well to read both Epistles at one session.

14. "And we exhort you." Revised Version. The Apostle is not beginning a new subject, but continuing a remark. (See preceding verses.) "Admonish the disorderly, encourage the fainthearted." Revised Version. The word "unruly" of the Authorized Version has changed its meaning. The word in the original means those who are out of order. It is a military term. He is very likely referring to those described in 2 Thess. 3: 11. "Weak." Not the weak in body, but in soul, in faith. Compare Acts 20: 35. "Patient." Better, "long suffering." "To all." Not simply to the classes enumerated, but to all persons.

15. "Evil for evil." A warning against anything which savors of revenge or retaliation. Compare Rom. 12: 19-21; 1 Peter 2: 18-25; Matt. 5: 38-48. "Follow after." Revised Version. Make the good of others your aim. That is, seek not to injure others, but to be beneficial to them. This is not only for your fellow Christians, but for everybody.

16-18. "Rejoice alway." This was Paul's constant injunction, as it was his practice. Compare Phil. 4: 43; Rom. 5: 3-5; 2 Cor. 12: 10. "Pray without ceasing." This injunction has given rise to a good deal of unnecessary comment. What the apostle evidently means is, "maintain at all times the spirit of prayer." Eph. 6: 18; Col. 4: 2. "In everything give thanks." Have the spirit of thanksgiving. (Phil. 4: 6.) "For this is the will of God in Christ Jesus to you-ward." Revised Version. It is the will of God that you should have this spirit of prayer, of rejoicing and of thanksgiving, and it is possible through Jesus Christ. Compare Rom. 5: 3-5, 19-22. These verses form part of one sentence and should be taken in close connection. "Quench not the spirit." Rather the manifestations of the spirit. That is, do not smother or reject the intimations and leadings of the spirit in yourself or any one else. The power we all have of resisting and quenching the fire of the Holy Spirit is a strange power, but without it we could not be free agents. It is a terrible responsibility. Compare Acts 7: 51. "Despise not prophecies." Despise not the messages—the "forth speakings"—which come through God's messengers. Paul generally, if not always, means by prophecy words spoken under the immediate inspiration or prompting of the Spirit. Doubtless then as now these messages sometimes come in a way and form which offend the taste or pre-conceived ideas of some of the hearers. "Prove all things." On the other hand, do not accept everything, but use your judgment, your intelligence, your common-sense. Compare 1 Cor. 12: 3; 1 Jno. 4: 1-3. "Hold fast to that which is good." This word "good" is not the same word as in verse 15. This means rather the "excellent," the morally good, the morally and spiritually "beautiful." "Abstain from every form of evil." Revised Version. This translation is undoubtedly the correct one. It is much stronger than that given in the Authorized Version, and cannot be mistaken. The contrast is between good and evil.

23. Paul has in the preceding verses told the Thessalonians what they should do. He now prays to God that He will use His power to give them that which must come from Him alone. "Sanctify." Make you holy. "Wholly." Unto full completeness. Compare Phil. 2: 12, 13. "Your spirit," etc. As if to say, "In full integrity may your spirit and soul and body, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, be preserved."

24. "Faithful," etc. The fact of the call implies the possibility of accomplishment, and God will fulfill His promises. (1 Cor. 1: 9; 2 Tim. 2: 13.)

25. "Pray for us." With all his power and spiritual experience Paul felt the need of human sympathy and the prayers of his brethren in Christ. Compare 2 Thess. 3: 1, 2; Eph. 6: 19; Col. 4: 3, 4; Rom. 15: 30.

26. "Salute all the brethren with a holy kiss." Revised Version. The kiss as a mark of affection was almost universal in the early Christian Church. It is common in the countries of Southern Europe to-day. It is not suited to the more phlegmatic, reserved Teutonic races. In these early days it was the custom for the men to kiss the men and the women the women. Compare Rom. 16: 16; 1 Cor. 16: 20; 2 Cor. 13: 12; 1 Peter 5: 14.

27. "I adjure you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the brethren." Revised Version. Why Paul should have used such very strong language can only be conjectured. The word "all" is emphatic. There was to be no distinction.

28. The usual benediction in a simple form, and doubtless written with his own hand.

TOPIC FOR FIRST MONTH TWENTY-FIFTH.

AN EVENING WITH CHINESE MISSIONS.

Acts 17: 24-31.

Second-day, First mo. 19.—Christ died for all. Rom. 5: 17-21.

Third-day, First mo. 20.—Hearing and believing. Rom. 10: 11-15.

Fourth-day, First mo. 21.—The fruitful word. Isa. 55: 10-13.

Fifth-day, First mo. 22.—Some early missionaries. Acts 13: 1-3.

Seventh-day, First mo. 24.—Missions and prayer. Isa. 62: 6-9.

The immensity of China's population is almost appalling. One-sixth larger in area than the United States, her people outnumber our own five fold. And among her four hundred millions there is but one missionary worker for every 400,000 Chinese. Less than a hundred years of missionary effort have given about 80,000 Protestant Christians, among whom are as devoted spirits and as zealous teachers and preachers as the world has known. One has said that the pressure of the multitudinous dead of this oldest nation and of the multitudinous living of this greatest nation has impressed each individual Chinaman as the mountain heights impress the forming granite beneath.

Steadfastness is a marked characteristic of Chinese Christians, and the Boxer massacres but proved once again that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." Their slayers cannot keep silence, but in the streets and market places of cities, where missionaries had never been they can but speak of the astonishing calmness and bravery of those who were more ready to die than to renounce their faith; so that even by His enemies Christ is preached. The old man who asked that he might have time to put on his best garment in which to go to meet his King, and the young girl who, when summoned to die, dressed in her holiday robes, and then said, "I am ready," did not and could not die without being known and read as true epistles of a living gospel.

One of the most wonderful results in a land where a wife is less carefully sheltered by her husband than a water buffalo, as being of less value, is the achievements of women who find Jesus no more a respecter of sex than of race. Mrs. F. Howard Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, tells of a woman, who came to her seemingly heartless in her coldness and indifference. She had been allowed to keep alive but two of her eight daughters—enough to crush any mother's heart, we would say. But this woman became

Mrs. Taylor's attendant, and, after four months, was with her when she was trying to tell a large room full of women about Christ. The woman saw that Mrs. Taylor was weary, too weary to speak, and said to her, "Put your head on my shoulder and rest, and I will tell them all that you want to say." "Then," said Mrs. Taylor, "she leaned forward and took up that story, and a sudden silence fell upon the room. I looked at her. Her face was full of a wonderful love and a wonderful light. She told those women of Gethsemane, and of the cross; and as she told it the story of the cross never seemed to me so real before. The tears were rolling down her face, and those women were so moved that they were weeping all over that room. That woman went right on after that, preaching in the power of the Holy Spirit."

The president of Peking University says that of the twenty-eight students graduated in ten years, twenty have entered the Church to preach or teach the gospel, some supporting themselves, others accepting as support one-tenth, or even one-twentieth, what they were offered in business positions. Does not their self-sacrificing zeal stir us, as their great needs calls to us, to be faithful in our stewardship?

WORD FROM SYRIA.

Ras el Metn, Syria, Twelfth month 15th, 1902.

Dear Friend, M. W. Haines:

During the past few weeks my thoughts have often been with thee and other dear friends in Philadelphia, for it was this time last year that I had the great pleasure of being in your midst. How very often my thoughts have gone back to those days, and how I treasure the remembrance of the kindness and sympathy I received from all. . . . I have often been cheered while feeling depressed and worn out since returning to this land to forget our present surroundings and visit Philadelphia in thought. As it is getting near the end of the year, I thought thou might wish to hear from me a short account of the Girls' School, in which Friends take such a warm interest. I am truly sorry that I have not written to thee more often, but I can assure thee it is not that I forget, but it is so difficult to get time except at night, and then it is only strong coffee that keeps my brain active while I answer business letters, etc., and I am so much from home in distant villages getting back at 10 or 11 o'clock. . . . In addition to my usual work, a fellow-worker, W. H. Clark, has gone home to England through ill-health, and I have to do a large part of his work in addition to my own. This has made the pressure greater. . . . Thou wilt be glad to hear that the Girls' School is making good progress. We opened after the summer holidays with a good attendance, but we had great misgivings in our hearts as to how the school work was to go on. Our committee in London had arranged a year ago that a small fee should be charged for every child in our schools, that is, the boys to pay one shilling each per year, and the girls half that amount, that is, sixpence, each. This is a very trifling sum, but quite as much as the parents can pay. During our absence E. Munnings, who was in charge, tried to carry out the instructions of the committee in this matter, but all the children left, and so the payment of fees was allowed to stand over until our return, and, as it was the middle of the school year when we got back, we allowed it to stand over until the beginning of the school year, the 1st of Tenth month. We care much more for the principle, which is that the people should begin to make some sacrifice, if need be, in doing something toward helping themselves, than for the actual amount obtained, which is very small. We consider ourselves here with a "call" only for a time, and our object is to help the people get on their feet; once they are able to stand, we hope to leave them to carry on the work, and we shall go elsewhere, wherever the Master will send us. Everything must have a beginning. The desired end may be, and is, far distant. The beginning has been made. I explained to the children the object of the small fee charged, and we awaited the result. Some came, and a number stayed away for a time—but when we take anything up the people have always found there is no going back. The Sheiks came to me and made fine speeches, to which I made suitable replies, but I said, "Your children must pay according to the rule." They said, "Yes, they will all pay; we might have known that thou would carry thy point. Thou art fitted to be an ambassador." This compliment closed the affair. The children all returned, and we consider that a very great step in advance has been made. Of course, some orphan children are admitted free. As I have said, we are thinking more of the principle than the amount. I have had a considerable amount of trouble in some of the villages through this new rule—and have had many deputations and much talking; indeed I entirely lost my voice for some days—nature's revenge—but it has all passed; everywhere we have succeeded in establishing the principle of the payment of fees without reducing the number of children, except a very small percentage of the tiny mites. This year we have had again Amesel Badr as first teacher in the Girls' School here. She was with us two years as second teacher. She is a fine young woman and a devoted Christian. She left to complete her education in the American Seminary in Beirût; we are glad to have her again. She is throwing herself so whole-heartedly into the work, and we are looking forward with confidence to the annual examination in the spring. I think I told thee that the temperance physiology book is being taught in all the schools. The girls, too, are studying it. We do so much want to have another book translated of the same series, that is, an advanced book for the children to go on with the study of temperance from the physiological point of view. That will come in time. The book on "Kindness to Animals" is in the hands of the translator, and I hope may soon be ready for the printer. I am very hopeful that the subject of cruelty to animals will receive more attention than hitherto. The new Pasha to the Lebanon arrived from Constantinople about two months ago on an appointment for five years. He—Mussafer Pasha—is a great lover of animals, and told me while speaking with him on the subject that he was ready to do all in his power to help our cause. My great Danish dog, Roderick Dhu, the companion of my travels day and night, was introduced to the great official fresh from the Sultan, and the Pasha stroked and petted him, a thing which Roderick Dhu usually resents from a stranger, but in this case he seemed to understand the situation, accepted the petting, and then lay down at the Pasha's feet on the carpet, to the amusement of every one present.

We are negotiating still on the proposed site of our intended Boys' School rooms. I hope that progress is being made, but my ardent temperament longs to see the stones rising one above another, but patience, I am often told, is a very necessary discipline, and I dare say it is; but I find that it is generally those who live far away from the scene of action and need who have most patience, and probably if they were on the spot they would realize more that time is short, but I must "let patience have her perfect work" and not fret—and yet I long to see a roof over our boys.

Our meetings are growing larger and I am hoping fresh interest is being kindled in many hearts. We have great opportunities for telling out the message—and we know that "His word shall not return unto Him void."

We have had an unusually large number of accidents this year, and a good deal of time has been taken up in attending to the sick and wounded. One poor man was thrown off a mule and had his head badly broken. It was simply ghastly. I did all I could for him and assisted him twice daily for eight days and dressed his head, but concussion of the brain set in and carried him off. The last word I ever heard him utter was a curse. It was altogether a sad case, but we can only leave him in our Heavenly Father's hands. Another man, a mason, building the wall of a deep well underground, the foundation gave way, and the wall fell; his head was badly wounded. As usual, they came for me. Whenever any one arrives pale, out of breath, I know at a glance something has happened, and I get my little basket with the necessaries, and I am off at once. The poor mason was grateful for our help, and, after six weeks' treatment and almost daily visitation, he is now at work again. He has become quite attached to us and now regularly attends our meetings for worship. I could go on to multiply instances, but space forbids. Carbolic acid, cotton, wool and quinine are my principal stays in this work. I might add forceps, for I need to use them almost every day. The £4 grant from West Chester Friends is quite invaluable to me in this clinic work. Please convey to them my heartfelt thanks. I am badly in want of more dental instruments, especially for back teeth, but I do not feel I can use any of the above grant for this object; it is needed for medicine. Should thee meet any one at any time with any spare forceps, etc., please remember me trying to extract back teeth, sometimes as firm as rocks, with forceps for front teeth—yet the teeth come out, but generally I have in such case to lance the gum. Do I shock thee? It is nothing to the work of the blacksmith!! This branch of the work has grown enormously. Tea, lately become popular in Syria, is playing sad havoc with the lovely white teeth of the Arab.*

The American box I have just seen through the custom house. It has not yet arrived here. I hope to write later about the distribution of the things, meantime please convey our grateful thanks to the Box Committee and the kind Friends who have contributed the things, and especially the prize books, which will be greatly appreciated by the children.

I am now working at the revision of the third part of Barclay's "Apology" in Arabic. I am hoping it may soon be ready for the publishers, but I will tell thee later about it. . . .

Thou wilt be interested to hear that I saw Theophilus Waldemeier a couple of days ago. He was looking strong and well and very bright and happy. I greatly love the dear old man, and their place (Asfureyeh) is on my way to Beyrouth, and I often drop in and visit them. . . . My dear wife and two little boys are very well indeed, but we could do with a little more leisure—that we will get in heaven.

. . . With many grateful thanks to the many kind Friends who help on our work here in so many ways, we send greeting, and, with very kind regards, I am,
Sincerely thy friend,

DANIEL OLIVER.

BEAUTIFUL ANSWERS.

A Persian pupil of the Abbé Sicord gave the following extraordinary answers:

"What is gratitude?"

"Gratitude is the memory of the heart."

"What is hope?"

"Hope is the blossom of happiness."

"What is the difference between hope and desire?"

"Desire is a tree in leaf; hope is a tree in flower; and enjoyment is a tree in fruit."

"What is eternity?"

"A day without yesterday or to-morrow; a line that has no end."

"What is time?"

"A line that has two ends; a path which begins in the cradle and ends in the tomb."

"What is God?"

"The necessary Being, the Sun of eternity, the Merchant of nature, the Eye of justice, the Watch-maker of the universe, the Soul of the world."

* Since the above letter was received three sets of dentists' forceps and a valuable "Manual on Dental Surgery" have been kindly donated by Dr. L. Foster Jack, of No. 1533 Locust Street, Philadelphia, to be sent to D. Oliver.

The power to prevail in prayer depends primarily upon the revelation of the Father, the mediation of the Son, the inspiration of the Spirit. The Father must be revealed to the praying soul, otherwise there is no desire and yearning to pray. But the confronting of God's holiness would make prayer impossible but for the mediation of the Son; and even then we need the inspiration of the Spirit, for we know not what we should pray for as we ought.—G. Campbell Morgan.

Of Reed's many epigrams, the two most famous ones are: "A statesman is a successful politician who is dead." "The Senate is a place that good Representatives go to when they die." Speaking of his early days in the House, Mr. Reed said he felt "like a fly in a bowl of molasses; there was plenty of sweetness, but no light."

Christianity would separate itself from other peoples, in order that it might raise other peoples to a higher platform. Its elevation increases its leverage.—Joseph Parker.

LOST SIGHT OF

A Most Important Aid to Education.

An important point often overlooked by parents in bringing up children is the use of proper food as an aid to education.

Children make wonderful progress when scientifically fed.

A little woman in East Brentwood, N. H., says of her girlhood days, "I was never very rugged and cold lunches and hearty evening meals and improper food soon began to work serious havoc.

"Then came a period of self-boarding while away at college, and it is now easy to see where, in the haste to acquire knowledge the true knowledge of proper and nourishing food was neglected. The result, as may be imagined, was indigestion, dyspepsia and constipation. Then followed a weary time of dieting, and, one after another, physicians were consulted, till hope of permanent cure was abandoned. Then, two years after leaving school, I entered a new home as a bride and having grown wiser through experience, I resolved to use food in accordance with hygienic principles. This was also necessary as I could not eat anything at all rich.

"We commenced to use Grape-Nuts, and soon became convinced that it was the most nutritious food we could obtain. I noticed an immediate improvement in my health, my indigestion became less marked and eventually left me for good.

"It is now two years that we have eaten Grape-Nuts regularly, and I was never as well in my life as now. I have gained ten pounds in weight and can eat, without causing the slightest distress, the richest kind of food as well as anyone, the dyspepsia is entirely gone and constipation never troubles me.

"This may not interest others, but it is of great interest to us, for it is our firm belief that my present good health is due solely to the constant use of Grape-Nuts, and we feel that we have great reason to be thankful to the maker of such a perfect and delicious food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE TEST OF LIFE.

Life's more than breath and the quick round of blood;
It is a great spirit and a busy heart.
The coward and the small in soul scarce do live.
We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths,
In feeling, not in figures on a dial,
We should count time by heart throbs.
He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

DRAINING A SEA.

Chimerical schemes for the flooding of the desert of Sahara have often been discussed, but a far more interesting and useful engineering feat of just the opposite kind is about to be accomplished by that most practical of peoples, the Dutch. "Leslies Monthly" recently gave the first thorough account of the proposed scheme for pumping dry and turning into arable pasture land the Zuyder Zee, that inland sea which covers over 1,400 square miles in the heart of Holland. This undertaking, which will take many more than twenty years to accomplish, should result in providing homes for 50,000 people and in adding greatly to the wealth and prosperity of Holland. As an example of interior expansion this undertaking is unique in history, and no more stupendous engineering feat has ever been planned.

THE MODERN FATHER.

"Did you call on her father this morning?"

"Yes, I did, and my head is whirling yet."

"Didn't use violence, did he?"

"Violence! I guess not. I got into his office all right. I had written asking for an appointment, and he at once pulled his watch on me and said, 'I can give you just seven minutes. Talk fast.' Well, that rattled me so that I could only stammer. 'You want to marry my daughter, don't you?' he abruptly asked. I said I did. 'Anything else?' he roared. 'That's all,' I hastily said. He made a hurried memorandum. 'Did you put your request in writing?' I told him I hadn't done so. 'How irregular,' he snarled, and made another memorandum. 'When?' he yelled. 'When Miss Amy is ready,' I replied. 'She says June,' he snorted and made another memorandum. 'Where do you want to go on your wedding journey?' he cried. 'Wherever Amy wants to go,' I murmured. 'She's going abroad,' he said, and worked away at another memorandum. 'One first-class suite on steamship Adriatic, June 25. I'll order it to-day. Anything else?' he growled. 'No, thank you, sir,' I said. Then he put out a clammy hand. 'Glad to know you,' he said. 'Come in again some time when I'm not so busy. That's all. See you in June, I suppose. Good day.' And I found myself gasping outside the door."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Often our trials act as a thorn hedge to keep us in the good pasture; but our prosperity is a gap through which we go astray.—Spurgeon.

THE RIGHT THING.

A New Catarrh Cure, which is Rapidly Coming to the Front.

For several years, Eucalyptol Guaiacol and Hydrastin have been recognized as standard remedies for catarrhal troubles, but they have always been given separately and only very recently an ingenious chemist succeeded in combining them, together with other antiseptics, into a pleasant, effective tablet.

Druggists sell the remedy under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and it has met with remarkable success in the cure of nasal catarrh, bronchial and throat catarrh, and in catarrh of the stomach.

Mr. F. N. Benton, whose address is care of Clark House, Troy, N. Y., says: "When I run up against anything that is good I like to tell people of it. I have been troubled with catarrh more or less for some time. Last winter more than ever. Tried several so-called cures, but did not get any benefit from them. About six weeks ago I bought a 50-cent box of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and am glad to say that they have done wonders for me, and I do not hesitate to let all my friends know that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the right thing."

Mr. George J. Casanova, of Hotel Griffon, West Ninth Street, New York City, writes: "I have commenced using Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and already they have given me better results than any catarrh cure I have ever tried."

A leading physician of Pittsburgh advises the use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in preference to any other treatment for catarrh of the head, throat or stomach.

He claims they are far superior to inhalers, salves, lotions or powder, and are much more convenient and pleasant to take, and are so harmless that little children take them with benefit, as they contain no opiate, cocaine or any poisonous drugs.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cents for full size package, and they are probably the safest and most reliable cure for any form of catarrh.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Eliza Williams has just closed a very successful revival meeting at Shannon, Barton County, Kan. Many hearts were blessed, and a number joined with Friends.

Susie Fox is engaged in evangelistic work in Sterling Quarterly Meeting, Kan. She is now at Hillsdale, near Hargrave, Kan. The Lord is blessing her work. The attendance is good, and a deep conviction is upon many.

The name of Mary I. Hussey should have been included in the list recently published of former Earlham students now attending the University of Pennsylvania. She is doing advanced work in Assyriology with Dr. Hilprecht.

William J. Sayers visited Allen's Neck Meeting, Mass., from the 4th to 6th inst., and was present at four meetings for worship. He also held Bible readings the afternoon of Second- and Third-days. The meeting was greatly blessed, and there was one conversion.

W. Irving Kelsey has concluded arrangements with the Foreign Missionary Board of Indiana Yearly Meeting to return to Victoria, Mexico, where he served the board seven years, succeeding Samuel Purdie. He expects to start soon with his wife and four children. At present they are stopping near Richmond, Ind.

James W. Pierce, of Hopewell Monthly Meeting, Ind., recently concluded a series of meetings at New Salem Meeting, near Greentown, Ind. He was assisted in his efforts by the local minister, George Bragg, and the meeting was awakened to a lively sense of their duty to the church and the community.

Many of the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will remember with pleasure the visit Daniel Oliver, of Ras el Metn, Syria, paid to Friends in this country last spring, and we feel sure that his interesting letter to M. W. Haines, the corresponding secretary of the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia, which we publish this week, will be appreciated by them, as it is of general interest.

The Friends' new meeting house at Keith, Okla., is nearly completed. This is one of the four meetings for worship in Liberty Monthly Meeting. The Lord is blessing the work this year in many ways, among which is the efficient ministry of Susie E. Allen. Perry Hadley, superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in Kansas Yearly Meeting, was present New Year's Eve and spoke to a large audience. Anna K. Newton, of Friends' University, also spoke.

The annual meeting of the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia will be held in the Committee Room of Twelfth Street Meeting House, on Fifth-day, the 22d of First month, 1903, at 4 p.m. Carolena Wood, of Mt. Kisco, N. Y., will speak on "The Purpose and Method of Our Work." It is expected that full accounts of the recent disaster by fire will be presented. JULIA COPE COLLINS, Rec. Sec.

Olive Branch Monthly Meeting was held at Walnut Corner, Jay County, Ind., First month 3d. J. O. Binford, yearly meeting superintendent, was in attendance, and visited Winona, Pennville and Olive Branch on First-day. The certificates of membership of Ira G. Carter, a minister who has recently located in the meeting, and family were received and accepted. Francis J. Wright and Rosa West were appointed clerks at the former meeting. Series of meetings have been held at White Oak, Poling and Glenwood, all in Jay County, Ind.

We are extremely sorry to report the death of our dear friend Julia Estes, wife of Wilbur Estes. She was a graduate of Oak Grove Seminary, and from early life she was an earnest, joyous Christian. She felt the call, as did her husband, to go to China, and there, amid the trials and dangers which are still fresh in memory, they have been doing their Master's work. Now one has been taken and the other left. Our deep sympathy goes to the husband in his loss, and we rejoice in the clear assurance that the departed missionary has arrived at home.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Knightstown, Ind., Friends' Meeting has arranged for a most interesting lecture course for this winter. Five speakers have been engaged, two of whom have already delivered their addresses. P. W. Raidabaugh, on Eleventh month 23d, delivered a very helpful address on "How to Study the Bible." Twelfth month 10th Esther Frame expounded the gospel on the theme, "Shall Women Preach?" Every hearer was both edified and delighted with these lectures. The next number will be an address by Albert J. Brown, of Indianapolis. This series of lectures is most helpful in establishing young Friends in the principles and doctrines of the Church. The Christian Endeavor also used a unique method in observing the Week of Prayer by appointing three leaders for each evening meeting. These were held daily throughout the week.

Our missionaries in Cuba are certainly living the right meaning into Christmas time. Sylvester Jones writes: "We are still campaigning in Cuba as hard as ever, and results are showing, too. The day before Christmas we had some Christmas exercises. The children all did well. A collection amounting to about $9.00 was taken for the poor of the city. The next day the Bible School divided into three groups, and eleven homes were visited. In these homes songs were sung, Christmas recitations given, the Bible read and prayers offered. Suitable gifts were distributed to help the needy. Among those visited were five blind people. One place where help was taken, the mother, sick with consumption, had been left a widow and the children made orphans on that same Christmas morning. It made one feel very near to heaven to watch the tears of joy falling from blind eyes and to see the beds of pain brightened with smiling countenances made happy by hearing the story of the Christ child that came to save from sin and pain. There is more joy in preaching to this hungry people than in making millions of money by neglecting it."

MARRIED.

BENEDICT—WEAVER.—At the home of the bride, Upperville, N. Y., Twelfth month 24th, 1902, Emma J. Weaver, daughter of Charles R. and Rebecca W. Weaver (the latter deceased), to Lewis N. Benedict, of Rome, N. Y. The bride is a member of Smyrna Monthly Meeting.

DIED.

ELLIOTT.—At Dublin, Ind., Twelfth month 9th, 1902, Emily Davis Elliott, widow of the late Solomon Elliott. This dear friend was much interested in temperance, Bible Schools and missions, working with other denominations before the Friends' Church had organizations of its own in these lines of work. Her interest in missions was beautifully manifested in the disposition of her estate, the bulk of which she bequeathed to the Board of Foreign Missions of Indiana Yearly Meeting, to be used in Mexico and Cuba.

HOLE.—At the home of her parents at North Lewisburg, Champaign County, Ohio, Elizabeth Hole, daughter of Charles E. and Hannah W. Hole, Twelfth month 22d, 1902, aged 13 years. She was a bright Christian girl of great promise of helpfulness to the church and home.

PRETLOW.—At Pretlow, Southampton County, Va., Seventh month 26th, 1902, Julia Caroline Pretlow, daughter of Thomas and Jane W. Pretlow, in her 78th year. She was a consistent member of Black Creek Meeting for a number of years.

SLOCUM.—At her home, New Bedford, Mass., Twelfth month 4th, Phebe B. Slocum, widow of Peleg Slocum, in her 75th year. She was a birthright member of Friends, but felt little interest in the things of God until 40 years old, when she had a remarkable visitation of the Holy Spirit, and embraced the simple truth as it is in Jesus. From that hour her whole life was changed, and her time, talents and means were all devoted to the service of God.

"Children," said the teacher, while instructing the class in composition, "you should not attempt any flights of fancy, but simply be yourselves and write what is in you. Do not imitate any other person's writings or draw inspiration from outside sources." As a result of this advice, Johnny Wise turned in the following composition: "We should not attempt any flights of fancy, but rite what is in us. In me there is my stummick, lungs, hart, liver, two apples, one piece of pie, one stick candy and my dinner."

George Francis Train, in "My Life in Many States and Foreign Lands," published by the Appletons, says: "Another thing I learned about the Chinaman was that he is the most honest tradesman in the world, and the most careful about debts. The Chinese New Year is the season when the Chinaman wipes off the slate and begins life over again, with a clean record. He pays up all debts, and starts even with the world. I learned that on this anniversary the Chinaman will sell everything he possesses, even his liberty, his person, his life itself, to settle his debts, so that he may face the new year with a clean conscience and a pure heart, as well as with no bills hanging over him."

Hans Jensen, a Dane, appeared before a Kansas judge to take out naturalization papers. "Hans," said the judge, "are you satisfied with the general conditions of the country? Does this government suit you?" "Yas, yas," replied the Dane, "only I would like to see more rain." "Swear him!" exclaimed the judge. "I see that he already has the Kansas idea."

George M. McKinney, of Chicago, general immigration agent and land expert for the Harriman railroad systems, arrived in San Francisco to-day, in the course of a tour of the great country districts of California suitable for general colonization.

"I have come directly from Inyo County," said he, "and I am greatly impressed with Owens Valley, in the eastern part of California. I found hidden away in the mountains up there in Inyo County, 1,000,000 acres in Owens Valley, that is the most desirable land for general colonization purposes that I have thus far seen in California."

EXTRA VALUES IN MEN'S SHIRTS

Men's Shirts and Night Shirts are important features of the January Sale. We mention four numbers that will illustrate as well as a hundred the sort of values we are offering these days—values that would be difficult if not impossible to match outside of this department:

MEN'S NEGLIGE SHIRTS—of fancy pattern, in new patterns; some with attached collars, others with neckbands for white collars; good value at 37½c.—the special sale price is 29c. each.

MEN'S MADRAS SHIRTS—in spring patterns of fancy madras; attached collars or with neckbands for white collars; styles usually found in 75c. and $1.00 shirts—special here at 45c. each.

MEN'S UNLAUNDERED WHITE SHIRTS—made of "Fruit of the Loom" muslin; full size and made exceptionally well, with many points of finish usually found only in the more expensive shirts; priced at less than cost to make—3 for $1.00.

MEN'S NIGHT SHIRTS—made of good muslin and trimmed with silk; full size and roomy; with or without collar—special at 42c. each.

Events and Comments.

It is now quite certain that the Senate will pass the Cuban Reciprocity treaty. All the Republican members favor the move and many of the Democrats.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs merits congratulations because of its favorable report upon the treaty providing for an international tribunal of arbitration among the republics of this hemisphere. The treaty is modeled on The Hague convention, and it is hoped the Senate will ratify it.

The Australian wheat crop, whose harvest is now at hand, is a failure, and the commonwealth will have to import a considerable quantity of breadstuffs. That country seems to be almost continuously afflicted with great droughts, which spread destruction over the pastoral and planting industries. But in spite of these discouraging circumstances the colonies continue to grow.

It seems almost certain that the North pole will receive callers before many months. An expedition for Arctic exploration, exclusively under French control, is to be made by Jean Charcot, under the patronage of the Academy of Science and the Ministry of Public Instruction. A ship for the voyage is now under construction at Saint Malo. The party will leave France Fifth month 15th for Spitzbergen, and thence will start for Franz Josef Land.

D. K. Bryson, a dentist of Pittsburg, Pa., is the inventor of a mechanism designed to utilize the force of ocean waves. A demonstrating plant will be erected at Atlantic City this year. Ten buoys will be located out from the shore, the first at a depth of about eight feet, and the others at regular intervals. These buoys, as they are thrown about and tossed upward by the waves, will send 150 horse-power from breakers of about three feet; with a six-foot wave twice this power will be obtained.

The Paris-Lyons-Mediterranean Railway is to introduce an automobile system next Sixth month, to take the place of locomotives. The automobiles, which are about the size of the ordinary French railway carriages, will be joined in trains of three, carrying 120 passengers, at a speed of 100 kilometers, or about 42 miles, an hour. The new cars will be provided with lavatories and other conveniences, and the abolishing of smoke and cinders is regarded as one of the great advantages to be gained.

The Western Union Telegraph Company has won the first decisive battle in its struggle with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The United States Circuit Court for the District of New Jersey filed a decision in its favor and permanently restraining the Pennsylvania Railroad from interfering with the telegraph company's lines along the road.

One of the largest publishing houses in New York city is seriously considering a material reduction in its output of novels; in fact, the rejection of everything of that character except the very highest grade. For many years this house has been one of the foremost producers of novels of the "popular" sort, but its proprietors now believe that it will be more profitable for them to confine themselves largely to the making of more solid and "heavier" books.

The recent senatorial elections in France encourage the enforcement of the new law against the religious orders. The Senate is at present more radical and less reactionary than at any time since the rise of the present republic. France is now so completely dominated by the radicals that the monarchists are impossible as a political party. This is gratifying, because, when reaction comes again, it will not endanger republican institutions. There has also been a disposition on the part of the public press of the country during the past few weeks to foster better feeling toward their Anglo-Saxon neighbors.

The Appellate Court at Chicago, recently, in a sweeping decision, sustained the injunction issued against eight board of trade members, who were charged with having operated a "corner." The contention against the "cornering" of the market is also sustained. The court holds that under the laws of the State dealers cannot be forced to settle trades upon the basis of an artificial value created by the "cornering" of a market, and that margins deposits in banks or elsewhere are within the jurisdiction of the courts in that they affect the right to property.

It is not likely that any French coal will be shipped to the United States as a result of the action of Congress last week in placing coal on the free list for one year. The French mines are unable to meet the demand of the home market. However, the statement of Representative Allen, that a few hours' delay in the approval of the bill would mean $2,000 more duty for Portland, Me., alone, on Canadian coal, and the report that over sixty British steamers have been chartered to load with coal, indicate that some relief will come from these sources.

THE CHURCHES IN THE UNITED STATES IN 1902.*

THERE has been during the past year a net gain in the churches of the United States of 403,743 members. There are 1,261 more local churches and 720 more ministers than were reported one year ago. The order of the leading denominations is as follows: The Roman Catholics come first, with a huge membership, 9,401,798, having gained during the year 120,624. Next follow the Methodists, of whom there are 17 kinds, with a membership of 6,084,755 persons, having gained during the year 98,184. The Baptists come next, with 13 kinds, reporting a total membership of 4,629,487, and a gain of 48,654. Then comes a large drop. The Lutherans, 22 kinds, hold the fourth place, with 1,745,588. They have gained 49,320 in the year. The Presbyterians and Disciples of Christ are the only other denominations which pass the million mark. There are 12 kinds of Presbyterians, and altogether they number 1,635,016, having gained 30,001 members during the year. The Disciples of Christ enroll 1,207,377, with a gain of 27,836. There are at the present time 28,546,028 persons enrolled in the Christian Churches of this country. There is a total of 193,546 churches throughout the land with 146,812 recorded or ordained ministers. These figures are very encouraging, and they will perhaps help us to realize that, spite of discouraging signs, the churches are making sure and steady gains. It has been a quiet, unostentatious year in the Christian world. No great upheaval has occurred, no great revival, such as we knew in the memorable days of Moody and Sankey, has swept the country, and yet the Christian Churches have made a gain of almost half a million members. But that is not all. More than ever before in the history of the world men of wealth have been pouring their means into the treasury of the Church so that its great expansive work can go on gaining. The Methodists have just completed their $20,000,000 fund which overflowed more than a million dollars beyond what they expected. Of this amount they have raised $8,000,000 for their educational institutions and $9,000,000 for church debts. In the church at large great benefactions are reported, though as usual the greatest sums have not gone for distinctly religious work. The sums reported for charities aggregate the enormous total of $36,519,894, while education follows close after with the receipt of $28,150,803 from private donors; $4,869,700 has been given, in gifts of $10,000 or more, to the churches for distinct church work.

Thus we have given a few figures which perhaps will help us to see what an important element in our modern society the Christian Church is, and how large its forces are. But we are not satisfied to stop with this brief survey of the past. It may not be out of place to end with a note of prophecy. We believe that much greater things are just ahead of us in the religious life and work of America. Slowly but certainly the Christian people of this country—now more than twenty-eight million strong—are coming to realize that Christianity means knowing and following Christ, and not going through with unvital performances. This spirit is catching, and we are on the verge of a great spiritual awakening which will be different from any that has yet come. The remarkable interest in the Bible which may be found in every walk of life is the best possible preparation for this deeper wave of religious life. Everywhere men are thinking on religious subjects. All serious persons see that the real cure for our bald materialism and mammon worship is a return to Christ and His gospel. In most churches there is a marked improvement in the way of interpreting Christ. The ministry is less artificial and builds more on the known facts of the spiritual life. As this tendency increases the working men will eventually see the true power of the religion of Christ, and the leaven will spread. But no such change comes without prayer and effort. Those of us who see hopeful signs must not trust vainly to appearances. We must all the more gird our loins and trim our lamps. We must watch and pray and faint not.

THE ENGLISH EDUCATION BILL.

NOT for years have the party lines in England been so sharply drawn between churchmen and non-conformists—i.e., between the State-Church and the other religious denominations, among which Friends hold an important place. This situation has grown out of the passage of a new Education Bill. The existing system of public education was established in 1870, and in very many respects the system is inadequate and behind that of Germany, France and America, as most English educators admit. There was unquestionably a need for a more modern and broad-minded school system. The reorganization which has come through this new bill must be a surprise to all thoughtful students of education, while it has aroused the opposition of dissenting religious bodies more than has any other measure within our memory. As Friends have been among the most active opponents of the bill, our readers will be interested to know what the issue is.

It provides that all the old school boards outside of London shall be abolished, and local educational authorities are to be appointed by the County Councils. But in the case of "voluntary"—i.e., Church schools—the real management is in the hands of committees appointed by the Church. These schools—and there are thirteen thousand which are in the hands of the Church—are to be recipients of government grants of money. The taxpayers will have only a minority control over these schools. The selection of teachers and the plan of religious training will be in the hands of the Established Church, while the nonconformist's money goes to support a school to which from conscience he could not send his sons. Of course the dissenting denominations are free to open schools of their own, but if they live in the neighborhood of a Church school their school tax will go to support the latter.

James Bryce, historian and member of Parliament, says there are five things against the bill. It is against constitutional principles; it is against justice; it is against economy; it is against common sense, and finally it is against education. Our friend, J. Rendel Harris, is one of the leading spirits in the opposition which is finding voice all over England against this measure.

Andrew Carnegie maintains that the home is more important than the library to the working classes. And he is right. The need for more comfortable homes among them is urgent and pressing. Where a man has a cheery and pleasant home, and wife and children are a joy and attraction to him, the bar loses his hold upon him, and he is saved from many a weakening and ensnaring association. The reason so many men take to the saloon or other evil resorts is that they have no home ties to act as a cementing and a drawing magnet. As a rule, the wife and mother has much to do in holding husband and son true and firm to the sweet, loving and helpful fireside. Our girls should be trained more and more for household duties. Drunkenness and vice cannot be restrained and overcome as they should be until those who are to have the care and responsibility of the family are prepared fully for the position. Much can be done in this respect in our cities and town through the Church and the mission halls. But mothers generally must give constant heed to preparing their daughters for their life-work in this sphere.—Exchange.

Sin, atonement, repentance, prayer, the work of the Holy Spirit.

HISTORICAL NOTES OF FRIENDS.*

BY WM. H. COFFIN.

George Fox died in 1690. A great wave of emigration followed William Penn in his settlement of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia Yearly Meeting was set up in 1681, and in less than fifty years had 40,000 members. Beginning with 1700, Friends were the only organized body of Dissenters in Southern Virginia and the Carolinas. Emigration began to turn South soon after this time to the meetings set up near the coast by Fox and William Edmondson, and then to the inland counties of North Carolina. Large meetings were built up, such as Cane Creek, New Garden, Deep River and many others in North Carolina, and Bush River and others in South Carolina, and a few in Georgia. A large emigration from the island of Nantucket came in 1771 of Macys, Swains, Coffins, Starbucks, Folgers, Gardners, Barnards, Bunkers, Wickershams, Dixons and others, who mostly settled in Guilford County, N. C. From all these meetings came a great part of the ancestors of those who afterward removed to the middle West, as their well-known names appear on the records. The war of the Revolution checked emigration South. Many able, devoted ministers from England, Pennsylvania and other meetings were continuously at work visiting meetings in America, especially South—such men as Thomas Story, Thomas Chalkley, the Fothergills, John Woolman, Richard Jordan, John Richardson, Samuel Bownas and very many others whose journals we have. Thomas Story and Samuel Bownas each separately traveled over 1,000 miles on horseback in one visit to the Southern meetings, many times camping in the woods, and we have frequent mention of the great number of conversions and accessions to the Church, as well as the growth by emigration, as the results of these and other ministers' labors well up to the Revolutionary War. Bowden says, "It is questionable whether in the history of the Society there has been any portion of the Church, more highly favored with the labors of faithful ministers than were the early settlers of these provinces." John Woolman commenced his active ministry about 1750. He was the apostle and center of the active opposition to slavery, along with Anthony Benezet and others. Friends at that time held many hundreds of slaves, and Woolman labored for twenty years for their freedom. In 1772 Virginia Yearly Meeting, and a little later North Carolina Yearly Meeting, passed an order for the disownment of all Friends who still refused to manumit their slaves; but few, however, remained.

William Hunt, of Guilford County, N. C., was a noted minister of his day, and died in England while there on a religious visit. His son Nathan Hunt was one of the ablest ministers of his day. He also traveled much, and died an old man at his home in North Carolina in 1853. He was the father of Ase-nath Clark and the grandfather of her son, Dr. Dougan Clark, both of whom were able, spiritual ministers down to recent years. Jeremiah Hubbard, whom some living among the old people yet recollect, was a contemporary of Nathan Hunt, and was considered one of the most learned and eloquent of his day. He was an educator, traveled much in the ministry and was many years in advance of his generation in the liberality of his views. Many were converted under his stirring and fearless ministry, and many new ministers brought out and recorded. He was one-fourth Cherokee Indian, 6 feet, 6 inches high; long, black hair, and a striking, dignified figure, and the revivalist of his day. His death occurred in Wayne County, Ind., in 1850. Isaac Hammer and William Williams were also noted ministers, who removed to Tennessee about 1800, where quite a body of Friends had settled. William Williams, after many years, removed again to Wayne County, Indiana, where he died. All the territory north of the Ohio River, having been organized and slavery excluded therefrom by the ordinance of 1787, and opened for settlement, Friends, especially from the South, began at once to remove to such a land, so rich in resources. Thomas Bales, a minister of New Garden, N. C., with a few others, removed and settled in 1782. He is said to have been the first white emigrant among Friends to settle in Ohio. He died in 1801 and was buried in a coffin dug out of a log, no lumber then being available. The first considerable emigration after this came from a monthly meeting in Contentnea Quarter, N. C., the members of which removed in a body, taking their certificates and laying down their meeting by consent of the quarter, and settling in Ohio in 1800.

Emigrations followed with increasing volume to the Miami country and its tributaries, and Miami Monthly and Quarterly Meetings were established in 1803. Many Friends came in from Pennsylvania and Virginia, but the most from the Carolinas and Georgia, until all the meetings in South Carolina and Georgia were laid down, and very many in North Carolina and Virginia. Zachary Dix, an able minister of Cane Creek Meeting, N. C., who also was supposed to have prophetic gift, visited Bush River Quarterly Meeting, S. C., in 1803. It was a large meeting of several hundred members, with a large, new meeting house. He got up with the words, "Oh, Bush River, Bush River, how is thy glory become dimmed, and gloomy darkness eclipsed thy day," and predicted a bloody war on account of slavery in the lives of the children then living, and advised Friends to get away from there.

This produced a panic, and in a few years all had sold and gone to the Miami country, Ohio. Such families as Furnas, Spray, Cox, Mills, Wilson, Jay, Wright, Evans, Coates, Hollingsworth, Cook, Jones, Thomas, Miles, Cammack, Lewis and others, many of whom and their children afterward removed to other parts of Ohio and Indiana, and we find their names all over the West. David Hoover, his father and brothers, Friends from Randolph Co., N. C., cut their way through the dense woods from Stillwater, Ohio, to the White Water, in Indiana, in 1805. where Richmond now is. I knew him well, as he lived until 1866, and died on the same land he then entered. Thomas Symours went fifteen miles farther, being the first settler on West Fork, at Milton. A great emigration followed these pioneers, mostly from Randolph and Guilford Counties, N. C., and large meetings of Friends were established all over the best parts of Indiana and Eastern Illinois, all being subject to Indiana Yearly Meeting, which was set up in 1821 at Richmond, Ind., and was the progenitor of all the yearly meetings in the West—Western, Iowa, Wilmington and Kansas—the Pacific Coast Yearly Meetings being set up by Iowa Yearly Meeting.

It might be interesting here to give the names of a few of the pioneer settlers who were the foremost leading men in Ohio and Indiana among Friends in Indiana Yearly Meeting from 1820, or before, to 1850, and some thereafter. Elijah Coffin, who had been clerk of the North Carolina Yearly Meeting, was in 1827 appointed clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting, soon after his removal West, and served continuously for thirty-two years. Then his son, Charles F. Coffin, served twenty-seven years, covering a period of fifty-nine years. No persons had such opportunities as they to know the representative men, even among the pioneer Friends, or of the growth and settlement of meetings. Charles Osborn, who traveled extensively as a minister of the gospel and who was a person of great spiritual power, was the first man in America to publish an anti-slavery paper at Mt. Pleasant, O., in 1816, called "The Philanthropist," in which he advocated the immediate and unconditional abolition of slavery. In after years it was published by Achilles Pugh, of Cincinnati, and destroyed by a mob in the early 40's. Levi Coffin was everywhere known as the president of the Underground Railroad, and 3,000 slaves passed through his hands to permanent liberty.

And then through the early days we found such staunch men in the Church as William Hobbs, George Carter, George Evans, Thomas Evans, Robert Furnas, Jacob Elliott, David Bailly, David Mote, Daniel Wood, Benajah Hiatt, James Hadley, of White Lick, Robert W. Hodgson, Eleazer Bates, Ephraim Morgan, William Crossman, James Hadley, of Fairfield, Joseph Doan, Thomas Arnett, Henry Wilson, Jas. White, Jos. Cox, Daniel Williams, William Talbert, John Maxwell, John Pool and very many others who deserve mention. These were all men universally esteemed as men of strict integrity, good judgment, deep Christian experience, sound in doctrine, well versed in the Holy Scriptures, and many of them able ministers of their day. While slavery was the over-ruling cause of the great emigration of Friends from the South, there were other causes. The land in the Southern States, much of it, had become exhausted from over-cropping, and very many had families growing up. They wished to settle where they could procure rich, fertile lands at government prices.

MORE ABUNDANT LIFE.

F. B. MEYER.

Many thinkers have wondered how best to define the object for which the Son of God came to our world. It has been said that he came to teach; came to institute a new era; came to redeem man from wrath and hell; but, brushing all these aside, our Lord announces his object in these majestic words, "I am come that men might have life, and might have it more abundantly" (John 10: 10).

Centuries ago, Mahomet, the false prophet, after appropriating a good deal from the Old and New Testaments, and adding a great deal that was false and corrupt, established a religion, the influence of which over vast territories is death. But Jesus Christ, in contrast to the blasting influence of Moslemism, brings life wherever he comes, throughout all lands and ages.

Every Christian who truly believes in Jesus Christ, at the moment of regeneration, which is simultaneous with that of faith, receives the gift of life. From that moment he is endowed not only with the physical life of the body, intellectual life of the mind, and the psychological life of the soul, but also with the spiritual life which is eternal and divine. But it is evident that there are some Christian men who have this life in a superabundant degree. We are all exposed to similar sorrows, difficulties and temptations, but how differently different Christians meet the same emergencies! Some are dragged to meet them against their will, crying out all the while as people in a railway train which has left the metals and is rushing to destruction; while other men meet the same difficulties with the answer of life. Contrast the fears of the rheumatic patient being carried up the hills in a Sedan chair, borne by bearers, and a boy leaping from crag to crag, swinging himself upward, meeting the emergencies of the ascent with elastic spirit and buoyant strength, and you have an example of the difference between two kinds of Christian people—one man dragged unwillingly to meet his fate, the other counting that he is being led in triumph in the triumphal procession of Jesus Christ. Oh, that we may go through life, not as dyspeptic, rheumatic patients, but with buoyant, upspringing fountains of vitality, fed from the nature of God! Is not this what we are wanting?

'Tis life of which our nerves are scant,
'Tis life, not death, for which we pant;
More life and fuller that we want.

Men shake their heads and say that this is transcendental and mystical; it is not what we need for the friction and fret of daily life; it is well enough for Sunday, but how would it stand the wear and tear of business? Others say: It is a matter of temperament and heredity. Others again: It is a matter of comfortable and prosperous circumstances. But what did Christ mean when speaking, not of an elect few, but of the whole flock, and looking out to the other sheep of the world, when he said, "I have come that they might have life," and that they might have it in no stunted, allotted, meager measure, but "abundantly"?

In Syria, in those hills through which one travels from Beyrout to Damascus, one perpetually comes across traces of mountain torrents, which in the winter carry destruction in their tempestuous rush into the valleys, but dry up in the summer drought; but as one gets two-thirds of the way toward Damascus, there constantly breaks upon the view the river Abana, of which Naaman spoke, and for quite two hours that river flows beside the railway line, marking a tract of green verdure and beauty amid the desert of mountains. Presently the traveler emerges upon the plain of Damascus, one of the most lovely scenes in the world. In a vast circumference spreads the old and wonderful city, with its crowded streets, set in the engirdling circle of trees, gardens and orchards, with every kind of beautiful and luxuriant vegetation; whilst beyond it, where Paul came in from Jerusalem, and Abraham from Mesopotamia, extends the most dreary desert. The result of the presence of the Abana is manifested in the contrast between that oasis and the vast tract of sand. Surely our life should be the Abana, rushing and leaping from the bowels of the earth in all its fullness, knowing no fear, no stint, but carrying fertility everywhere.

This may be your life if you are willing to learn God's lesson, because the abundant life is only different in quantity and not in quality from that which Jesus Christ has implanted in your soul. Where did you receive that life? At some mother's knee, in some country village, under the teaching of a venerated pastor, or when reading a religious book? Wherever it was, it was the Saviour who gave it to you, and wrapped up in His primal gift the possibility of it becoming abundant; and the failure of your life is that you have not allowed the stream to open out into the lagoon of perfect manifestation. There is not a man in all the world whose life might not become abundant if he would only let God have His way.

First, there must be the surrender of your own life. Christ's life was the perpetual utterance of "No" to himself in his human nature; and even gave back the life which his Father had given him, and went down to death. Sacrifice your self-love; have done with it; turn your back on it; view it from to-day as a criminal on the cross, and then consecrate to God your whole personality, the individuality of your character, the entire range of your natural powers, that He may infill it with Himself.

Next, cultivate faith, obedience, service. The secret of holy and happy living is gathered up in these three words. There are a great many things we cannot understand, but these lie within our reach, and if we hold to them they will bring us through the darkest night beneath which the soul of man ever wrestled, into the perfect day.

(1) Faith. If you cannot see God clearly, look toward the spot from whence His voice comes, as a child instinctively turns in the dark toward the place from which its mother's voice issues; and remember that the mountains which soar the highest in the dark will be the first to catch the glint of the morning beam at dawn. Front the East, though you be in the dark. Follow on to know the Lord. Faith is the motion of the soul Godwards.

(2) Obedience. Every time you obey you pull up the blind and let in more light. Every time you obey you break down the restraining reef, and let more of the sea into the bay of your life. Obey the voice of God in the Book, the voice of God in your heart, the voice of God as He speaks through circumstances and His servants—obey.

(3) Service. Never let a day go by without making the world a brighter, happier place for others, and as you do so, the life abundant will gush out. A friend once told me that whilst he stood in the old forum at Rome, watching the workmen using the pickaxe, one of them happened to strike away some rubbish and debris which had lain for centuries, and as he did so a fountain of water, well known in classic times as the Virgin's Fountain, but which had been imprisoned for centuries, found glad utterance again; the imprisonment was over, the stone was taken away from the sepulcher, and the beautiful fountain gushed into the Italian sunshine.

It may be that to-day such an experience is to be yours, and that some debris which has accumulated upon your heart, choking your life, by the grace of God and by the act of your own choice, shall be put away, so that the life which has been checked and restrained may become abundant, and you may know the fulfillment of our Lord's word, "it shall become in them a well of water, springing up into eternal life."

"DIANA OR CHRIST."

BY WILLIAM J. SAYERS.

It is a common fault that we bring ourselves very seldom to realize the great possibilities of our age. Public speakers have reiterated this so much that they have made a stereotyped phrase of it, nevertheless the fact remains. Whenever I think of that suggestively sad but beautiful painting entitled "Diana or Christ," I cannot but thank God that, although social, political and religious contentions may run high, yet in these days a man is what he makes himself, and no one prevents whatsoever purposes he has from having their influence. In the foreground of this picture stands a Christian maiden, the beauty and holy integrity of whose face appeals to one's highest thoughts. She is standing erect and facing you. On her right sit a group of young girls about her own age, eagerly scanning her face; near her hand is an urn to receive the votive offering for Diana. Close beside her is a stern and cruel-looking officer waiting; behind him is a band of mercenary soldiers ready to do his bidding. Most awful sight of all is the arena, which appears in the distance hungrily awaiting its victim. The motion of her hand to drop her offering to the goddess will save her, but as one looks into that face one sees something written there that bespeaks of the love and spirit of the martyred Christ. With such love she is enabled, even when threatened with the most shameful and torturing death, to look far beyond the mocking faces and see her Lord sitting on the throne beside the great wide sea; also to hear above the horrible din of hateful jeers the music of those who have given their lives for their Saviour's sake, singing the songs of the redeemed.

How can we exalt in praise the conduct of that noble, self-sacrificing maiden, she who stood before judges and a people among whom she could see no sympathizing look, and in such a place and in such a manner give her fresh young life and seemingly pass into utter forgetfulness? She little dreamed that that deed would never die, that twenty-five hundred years would roll by, and to all of us, who are subjects of the King of kings, her sweet face would be one of encouragement and inspiration in the midst of the direst oppression and the most bitter temptation, and her sacrifice would stir up the sublimest thoughts and result in the performance of the noblest deeds.

There are decisions to be made every day of our lives as momentous as this one of the Christian maiden, made centuries ago. And in years to come our choice may have the same influence over other lives as did the young woman's. When such an opportunity comes to you, choose the Christ and reject the Diana; choose the riches of glory, and reject the dross of the world, and thus receive the reward of the faithful.

FIRST QUARTER.

LESSON V.

SECOND MONTH 1, 1908.

PAUL AT ATHENS.

Acts 17: 22-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection.—Acts 17: 18.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, First mo. 26.—The new doctrine. Acts 17: 16-21.
Third-day, First mo. 27.—Paul at Athens. Acts 17: 22-34.
Fourth-day, First mo. 28.—The mighty God. Isa. 40: 9-17.
Fifth-day, First mo. 29.—Incomparable. Isa. 40: 18-26.
Sixth-day, First mo. 30.—The true God. Jer. 10: 1-12.
Seventh-day, First mo. 31.—God is a spirit. Jno. 4: 19-26.
First-day, Second mo. 1.—Judgment by Christ. 2 Cor. 5: 1-10.

We left Paul at Berea. Here he had much success, but the Jews of Thessalonica hearing of this sent emissaries who stirred up the people; so Paul's friends hurried him off to Greece. The coast was reached as soon as possible, and the rest of the journey was by sea to Phalerus, or to Piræus, both sea-ports of Athens. Under ordinary circumstances such a journey would occupy about five or six days if the traveling was by day. Athens at this time contained about 175,000 inhabitants. It had little or no political influence, but was one of the great literary and intellectual centers of the world. It was a university city, and a place of resort for students from various countries. Its architectural and art treasures were still in perfect condition, and its outward beauty as great as at any period of its history. There is, however, no reason to think that any of these things appealed to St. Paul, or that he was acquainted with Greek or Roman history, or took any interest in art. "Any sense of the dignity and beauty of Pagan art was impossible to one who had been trained in the schools of the Rabbis." To him Athens was a city full of idols, and "his spirit was provoked within him." (Acts 17: 16.) As usual, he turned to the Jews and reasoned with them and the "devout persons," but he adopted, so far as we know, a new method and reasoned (discussed) with those who would hear him in the market place (agora). This was wholly in accord with the customs of Athens. Paul seems to have made a decided impression, and he was asked to set forth his doctrine more publicly. They called him a "babbler," literally, a "seed gatherer," which in the Athenian slang meant one who picked up a smattering of things. There are two views regarding the meaning of the word Areopagus—one, that he spoke before the court or council which sat on Mars' Hill; the other, that he spoke on the hill, but not in the hearing of the council. It is clear that whichever may be true, the fact is that he spoke in the hearing of some of the philosophers mentioned in verse 18. There is no evidence that Paul's preaching had much effect in Athens, though he must have been there at least a month. Athens is never mentioned again in the Bible. We know of no Christian Church at Athens in the early days.

22. Paul's whole address so breathes the spirit of conciliation that one cannot believe that the translation "too superstitious" of the Authorized Version, or the "somewhat superstitious" of the Revised Version, can be accurate. That of the American revisers, "very religious," is much better, and far more consonant with the spirit of the address. A Mohammedan may be "religious"—the word has nothing to do with the kind of religion a man may believe in.

23. "As I passed along and observed the objects of your worship, I found also an altar with this inscription, 'To an Unknown God.' What therefore ye worship in ignorance, this set I forth unto you." Revised Version. From Pausanias, a traveler who lived after Paul, but who saw Athens as Paul saw it, we learn that there were several such altars. There is no reason to think that the altar was raised to the God of the Hebrews as some claim.

24. Paul shows the difference between the idols and the Maker of all things.

25. "Neither is he served by men's hands." Revised Version. He does not need the ministering of human hands, because He himself is the Creator of all things.

26. This verse is rather obscure. The idea is that all men are of one common stock, and God governs everything which concerns them. There is no room for self-conceit.

27. The object is that men should seek God. "He is hard to find, not because He withdraws from us, but because we withdraw from Him."

28. "Your own poets." Cleanthes and Aratus. The latter was a native of Cilicia.

29. The argument is, if we are the offspring of God we ought not to think of Him as a stone, or image carved by human skill. Spiritual must come from spiritual.

30. "The times of this ignorance God overlooked." Revised Version. Men did not have the opportunity of gaining correct knowledge of God, and He made allowance for it. "Now." Emphatic. Christ has brought new light. There is a new revelation, and men must change their minds; they can no longer take refuge in ignorance.

31. "Inasmuch as he hath appointed a day," etc. "The reason is not why He commands, but why men should make haste to obey." "Raised him from the dead." The great proof of the reality of Christ's claim to be the Son of God, and that there was immortal life. How far Paul would have developed the doctrine of the Resurrection, had he not been interrupted, it is impossible to say.

32. "Now when they heard of the resurrection of the dead," etc. This was a strange doctrine to set forth before the Athenians of that day. It was contrary to their theories and practice. It is not to be supposed that those of either class named were serious. The latter were more polite, but doubtless that was all. Such a manner was entirely in accord with the Athenian character. The "But" or "Howbeit" of the next verse also implies this.

33. "Departed." From the crowd who had listened to him. See Acts 18: 1.

34. "Dionysius the Areopagite." This shows that he was a member of the council, and therefore a prominent man. Eusebius, the church historian of the fourth century, says that Dionysius afterwards became bishop of Athens and perished as a martyr. Certain writings attributed to Dionysius were circulated in the church, and later than the time of the Reformation were accepted as genuine. There is no doubt, however, that they are spurious.

As at Philippi and Thessalonica, Paul reached the women also. Damaris is not mentioned elsewhere, and as the name is unknown in Greek writings and inscriptions, some think it should be Damalis, which is a name occurring elsewhere. From being named it has been thought she was a woman of position.

There is truth in all theories of the atonement. It is too vast a truth to be comprehended by all theories; its margins reach far beyond them. Live in the atonement, if you want to see how much more we know than we understand.—Amos R. Wells.

God save our faith from that schismatic heart
That snaps at others' creeds its "There we part."
God grant us charity, whose thoughts are sweet,
And ripen difference to, "There we meet!"

Christian Endeavor.

[Communications for this department should be addressed to Lindley D. Clark, 1429 New York Avenue, Washington, D.C.]

TOPIC FOR SECOND MONTH FIRST.

DECIDE TO-DAY.

Heb. 3: 7-13. (Christian Endeavor Day.)

Second-day, First mo. 26.—Double-mindedness dangerous. Jas. 1: 6-8.

Third-day, First mo. 27.—Decision in seeking God. 2 Chron. 15: 10-13.

Fourth-day, First mo. 28.—Decision for service. Luke 9: 57-62.

Fifth-day, First mo. 29.—Decision in obedience. Neh. 10: 28-31.

Sixth-day, First mo. 30.—Decision in loving God. Deut. 6: 4, 5.

Seventh-day, First mo. 31.—Blessings of decision. Josh. 1: 1-7.

Something of our own wills, something of the opportunities God offers—a proffer, a decision—this is the message of the Holy Ghost. We must read the Revised Version to get the correct forms of the verbs, both in Hebrews and in the Psalm there quoted. “If ye shall hear,”—if some message be apprehended, if some observed and appreciated messenger shall cross your path,—“harden not your hearts.”

The Psalmist presents it in the form of an entreaty. “Oh, that ye would hear His voice!” There is no lack of messengers to those who have not become dulled and unobservant; but indecision is decision not to act, and while one tarries the hardening goes on. I remember (then) President Moore once passing around in his geology class at Earlham an odd-looking mass of open limestone, with a question as to its origin. It was a bit of moss that had fallen into a stream of limewater and remained there until the slender, flexible moss stems had become impregnated and encrusted with the mineral deposit and their nature entirely changed. Doubtless the changes in our own lives are often quite unconscious, but it is no less certain that they are constant. Decision and indecision each begets its like. Power and weakness alike increase.

It is said that at the summit of the Great Divide is a spring whose waters flow from either side of the quiet pool—some traversing by circuitous journey the muddy Missouri, the mighty Mississippi, and so reaching the land-locked Gulf; another part courses over the dalles and through the mighty forests of the Columbia and pours itself into earth's greatest sea. A little thing—the flutter of a bird's wing, a breath of air, a fallen twig—may decide which course a drop of water may take, and once upon its course there is no return.

“But,” says some one, “I can turn back.” Perhaps; but will you? The Holy Spirit sets to-day as the day to heed the word, and if to-day is spent in disregard and disobedience, there is certainly less hope of the morrow.

Not only is there grave danger that delay will be fatal, but there is absolute certainty that it will cause loss. Christ came not only that men might have life, but that they might have abundance. The little child has life, but how feeble and frail it is beside the robust man who can face the storms of winter and bear unwearied the burden of the day.

Fruit-bearing is to the glory of God, and the undeveloped immaturity of a wornout fragment of life given to Him cannot glorify Him as does the lifetime spent in His service; the character that has grown and broadened and strengthened in Him with passing years of duty well performed.

A right conception of fact will change “It is never too late to mend” into “It is always too late to mend”; for what one might have been but for the neglected opportunity he can never be. Yet before us all lie other opportunities waiting to be used. What we can do is to strive that none of them escape us because of indecision or hardness of heart.

AN APPEAL FOR DEFINITE, UNITED EFFORT.

May I venture to appeal to my fellow ministers to make much of the coming “Christian Endeavor Day,” Sunday, February 1st? This is the twenty-second anniversary of the founding of the Society, and I believe may be turned to large account for the spiritual welfare of the young all over our country.

I hope I shall not be deemed presumptuous if I earnestly urge all pastors of Christian Endeavor Societies to speak especially to the young people on the morning of the first of February, or at least to have a special Young People's service in the evening, making it a time for earnest consecration on the part of the active members, and of decision for Christ on the part of the associate members and all other young people who are not yet Christians.

Dear brethren, the hearts of many of you are burdened. I am sure, as mine is, with the great desire that this should be a year of large ingathering in all the churches. The most hopeful element whom we can reach is the young men and women, and boys and girls, in our young people's societies. If the harvest is gathered at all, it must be reaped largely in this field. Shall we not all join in a united effort to make this a great day of awakening and decision? The efforts of tens of thousands of pastors, supplemented by millions of young people, can, with God's blessing, bring such an ingathering into our American churches as they have never known.

Hoping and praying that this plan may meet with your approval and receive your hearty co-operation, I am

Faithfully yours,
FRANCIS E. CLARK.

As the Christian Endeavor movement comes to its twenty-second birthday, it finds that there are 62,132 societies of Christian Endeavor of all kinds in the world. Of these something over 44,000 are Young People's; over 16,000 are Junior societies; about 1,400 are Intermediate societies; and the rest, Seniors', Mothers', Floating, and miscellaneous societies. All told, these societies contain over three and one-half millions of members. Of this total, nearly 44,000 societies are found in the United States, while nearly 9,000 are found in Great Britain, 4,000 in Canada, and the other 4,000 in Australia, India, China, Japan, Turkey, the countries of continental Europe, and the islands of the sea. From every standpoint the last year has been one of the best that the Society has ever known.

The "Comrades of the Quiet Hour" are those Christian Endeavorers who agree to spend at least fifteen minutes every day in meditation, communion and prayer. More than 30,000 are thus enrolled, and the influence of the "Quiet Hour" has been very marked upon the movement. Every convention has its "Quiet Hour"; many have received great spiritual benefit therefrom, and the art of meditation is no longer a "lost art."

The Tenth Legion consists of those Endeavorers who esteem it a privilege to give at least one-tenth of their income for the spread of the kingdom of God. Nearly 20,000 have enrolled themselves under this banner, and as nearly as can be ascertained the gifts of Endeavor societies amount to more than $500,000 a year for the advancement of the cause of Christ through their own churches and denominations.

The evangelistic efforts of the Endeavorers have been steadily upon the increase of late years, and at least 200,000 young people come into the churches every year through the gateway of the Society, influenced in part at least by its meetings and fellowship.

Missionary Department.

PRESENT CONDITION OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The paper of Mahala Jay, on "Present Condition of the Foreign Mission Work of American Friends," which was read before the Five Years Meeting, has just appeared in pamphlet form, with a number of excellent illustrations, which make the work very attractive and add instruction and interest to the subject. The pamphlet is well calculated to meet the needs of our busy "every-day" members, and should be in every home. The author speaks with authority, having been intimately connected with the work since its inception.

While the paper deals with "facts and figures," there is a first-handed freshness in the presentation of the subject which brings added inspiration to the "great commission." The treatment is comprehensive and brief, and is given under the different yearly meetings, the headlines thus showing what part each contributed and what is their present relation to the work. The interest, however, is centered chiefly on the mission field and its present condition.

Although, as the opening paragraph stated, "Foreign Mission work, in the form now exemplified in all the yearly meetings, of locating missionaries in foreign fields to reside among the people and teach them, is a thing of but a few years' trial by American Friends," yet substantial progress has attended the enterprise. "Indiana Yearly Meeting was the first to establish such a work," which opened in Mexico in 1871; then "Iowa Yearly Meeting began work in the Island of Jamaica, in 1883," and "next in order of time was the establishing of Friends' mission in Tokio, Japan, in 1885, by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia." Other yearly meetings followed, and other missions were opened in the countries already named, and also in Alaska, Syria, South Africa, China and India. "Baltimore, New York, North Carolina, Wilmington and Canada Yearly Meetings have not opened separate missions, but help in one or several of those of other yearly meetings." "The American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions made preparations to take up field work in Cuba," in 1900, and The Friends' American Industrial Mission "sent out its three pioneer missionaries last Fourth month." They have already selected a site near Lake Victoria Nyanza, and have begun to erect homes.

The report brings out many interesting points. Among others is the practical working of a full gospel message manifest in three prominent lines of work—i.e., a care for the material, mental and spiritual salvation of men. A few extracts may be culled from the work and grouped with profit under three prominent phases of evangelization.

HEALING.

"Besides its distinctively gospel service" the mission at Ramallah, Syria "has had its medical work, which reached, from its dispensary, 1,335 patients the last year."

"The medical work was opened at Matehuala, Mexico, nearly two years ago, and has made rapid progress in preparing the way for the reception of the gospel," while the wide range covered by the work has been the means of bringing a greater number under the influence of the missionaries.

"The medical work in China has developed and enlarged very much since the troubles of 1900. The five thousand who have received medicine at the dispensaries is, at the very lowest estimate, but half the number that have heard the gospel through this agency. The faithfulness of the foreign physicians in staying by the people at the risk of their own lives during the great epidemic of cholera that visited Nanking the past summer has been greatly appreciated by the people, and is telling in a most fruitful way in all the missions at that place."

TEACHING.

At Matamoros, Mexico, "schools were started from the first in a small way; the girls' school, later known as Hussey Institute, has been continuous for twenty-nine years. Preparations are now being made in Victoria for a school of higher grade and a Bible Institute for young men."

In Jamaica the "mission has a well-established training home for girls, and is opening such a home for boys, and there is a large number of day-scholars under its care."

In the girls' school in Tokio "the number of pupils has been larger the past year than at any time heretofore, and the hearts of the teachers rejoice in recording fifty pupils in average attendance, nearly all of whom are Christians."

"Church services and Sabbath Schools are held at Douglas, Alaska, for both whites and natives, and a day school has been taught by a missionary teacher about seven months in the year for several years."

In the training home and school for girls, which has been running for some time, at Ramallah, "an important and much-needed training home for boys was opened last year. Applications were far in excess of accommodations, even though a nominal fee was demanded toward the cost of training. There are now eighteen carefully-selected, bright, active boys in this home. Both girls and boys in these homes are trained in industrial pursuits, in addition to their school studies and daily instruction in the Bible."

A report from Mexico says: "Our schools are taught by faithful, conscientious teachers, and are doing satisfactory work. There is increasing desire on the part of the people for the privilege of sending their children to our schools."

"All China is now asking for 'Western learning,' and having finally decided that this is her need, rest assured she will have it. Great opportunities are given us to help in Christian education and training for the evangelization of China by her own people."

MAKING DISCIPLES.

From Mexico comes the word that "the gospel, preached with power, has won many to Christ in the years since the founding of the mission. Meetings have been gathered in many places. Seven monthly meetings have been set up. Six Mexicans of intelligence, and filled with the Holy Spirit, have been recorded ministers of Friends."

"The work in Jamaica has expanded from year to year, till now they report twelve missionaries in the field at two principal stations, with ten out-stations, three churches, five hundred and thirty church members, and an average attendance at all their places of worship of seven hundred and eighty persons each Sabbath."

"At Ishioka, Japan, an earnest and gifted Japanese evangelist is in charge of the work. He wrote some months ago: 'Christian work seems pretty difficult; yet by and by their attention is coming toward Christianity, I believe. I am praying to the Lord to get His preaching power at present and in future.'"

"The crucial tests through which China passed in 1900, and the supernatural way in which native Christians met persecution and death, gave to the religion of Jesus Christ a reality and power, both in the church and out, that she had not felt or known before."

On Kaak Island, Alaska, out of a population of four hundred, "one hundred and thirty-one natives requested membership." at a recent dedication of a new meeting house.

These quotations serve to illustrate the truths brought forth in this excellent paper, and combined with these are some useful statistics. The work concludes thus:

"We see from the foregoing sketch that, in all the American yearly meetings, Friends are engaged in foreign mission work, and that their work is in nine widely separated countries. The interest is deep with a part of our membership, but many are not awakened on the subject. The aggregate amount of contributions reported this year for foreign missions is $55,000, a creditable sum do we think for a Church of less than one hundred thousand members? Yet it is not all we are able to do in fulfilling the great mission of the Church. Not half the purses of our membership were reached in collecting this fund.

"These problems are before us: How our Church shall come to do its whole duty, its full obedience to our Lord's command to 'Disciple all nations'; how we may strengthen the long line of missions we have laid; how we may guard against future unwarrantable expansion; how we may gain the strength of union of effort without weakening the sympathy and individual interest that foster our missions in their separate state. May the Lord teach us how to solve them."

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

How unique was Christ's love as leader and hero! In military affairs the rule is that the general must not expose himself. Always the commanding officer must stand apart on some safe point. He controls the army from the vantage ground of security. From time to time his aides descend to the battlefield with his instructions. The under officers march at the head of the troops, not the leader. In going over the battlefields the sight-seer is always shown the point of safety from which the commander surveyed the battle scene below. Even in the olden days, when a chieftain received messages bidding him surrender, he told one of his soldiers to jump over a precipice and another to plunge a dagger into his heart; then, when both instantly obeyed, with proud disdain the chief told the messenger that every man in his army would gladly die for him. But if the soldiers died, the chieftain returned in safety to his tent. This method of sacrificing the follower has been the method of every leader from Alexander to Garibaldi. What if the chieftain had jumped over the precipice? What if the commander should seek out the thickest of the fight? Christ is the one leader who always reserved the most dangerous spot for Himself. He never sent another; He rather exposed Himself to the full fury of the storm. Instead of sending others down, He went Himself. He bore the followers' dangers, endured their temptations, healed their sicknesses, carried their sorrows. He gave Himself for them. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—Newell Dwight Hillis.

"The Son of God became the Son of man that the sons of men might become sons of God."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

VOLITION.

BY CHARLES CLINTON JONES.

I stumbled in darkness, I could not see
 The hand restraining that guided me.
 The fogs hung heavy, the clouds rolled black;
 Stones of discouragement strewn my track.
 I shunned the evil, but missed the good,
 And guessed at more than I understood.
 But I felt that God in His love and might Somehow would keep my steps aright;
 Reaching out of the great unknown,
 Taking my hand into His own.

The fogs were lifted, the skies were cleared,
 Wisdom and truth in the light appeared,
 I guessed no more, for I surely knew
 'Twas the land of blessing He led me thro',
 And, lo! in my path to the heights sublime,
 The stones where I stumbled were steps to climb.
 I walk in the light, and I now can see
 The loving hand that is leading me
 Out of the unknown into the known;
 Into God's hand putting my own.

Amesbury, Mass.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND desires copies of Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7 and 52 of Volume IX.; No. 36 of Volume V.; No. 52 of Volume VI. Anyone having these issues and being willing to dispose of them will confer a favor by writing to this office.

Evi Sharpless is just returning from a visit to Oklahoma to his home in Salem, Iowa.

Levi Mills is now engaged in special meetings at Whittier, Cal., with encouraging outlook.

William G. Hubbard wrote a good vigorous letter on the Militia bill to the Senators from Michigan.

J. L. Spicer, of Cincinnati Children's Home, traveled 22,433 miles last year in the interest of the work.

Irene Hunnicutt, of Lewisville, Ind., is now laboring in a revival in Cherry Grove Meeting, near Lynn, Ind.

Clinton and Cassie Commons are temporarily living in Pasadena, Cal., for benefit of Clinton Commons's health.

Acting President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, has been chosen a judge for the Iowa State Oratorical Contest.

Edward Hutchens, of Cleveland Training School, and George McGraw, of Nebraska, have just closed a successful revival at Lynn, Ind.

Our friend, Sylvester Newlin, is located at Westfield, Ind., and those who know him hardly need to be told that he is doing good work.

Theodore L. Cuyler sends us an article on "Fuel and Fire for Prayer Meetings," with the hope that it may be a "heater" in some of our meetings.

James Wood, of Mt. Kisco, N. Y., lectured to a large audience in the Friends' Lyceum Course in Philadelphia on his travels in Mexico, Sixth-day evening, the 16th inst.

We record elsewhere the death of Hannah E. Sleeper. Her death is a great loss in Kansas Yearly Meeting. She has throughout her life been a faithful Friend, and it removes a strong missionary worker.

Cincinnati Monthly Meeting has a unique plan of holding its sessions in the evenings, and serving a substantial meal in connection with the occasion. Those engaged in business go directly to the meeting house. The social feature is much appreciated, especially by the young people, a good many of whom attend.

Earlham College opened on the 6th inst., with unusually bright prospects for the term's work. More than twice the usual number of new students matriculated. The religious life among the students is very pronounced.

George M. McGraw and wife, of Nebraska, are now engaged in visiting the meetings of Indiana Yearly Meeting, and such other work as the Lord may call for at their hand. Their address till further notice will be Lynn, Ind.

We have received an interesting personal letter from our elderly friend, Joshua Bull, of East Farnham, P. Q., Canada. He has taken the "Friends' Review" and THE AMERICAN FRIEND since 1847, and cannot remember ever to have missed a number.

Wilfred and Della Rowntree, of Ramallah, Palestine; Adela Davis, of Lawrence, Kansas; Margaret Wills, of Oklahoma, and Roxanna Davis, of Denver, Colorado, were the guests of President E. Stanley, of Friends' University, Wichita, Kansas, during the holidays.

Eber N. Gause recently labored in a series of meetings in Mound City, Kansas, which were well attended. The results are very promising. He was called upon to speak in the Congregational Church on the subject of "Peace from a Quaker Standpoint," and was well received.

Harriet Green and Sophia Fry, of London, England, have been engaged in a week's meeting at East Main Street and South Eighth Street Meetings, Richmond, Ind. The teaching of the former was plain and practical, and the meeting has been much strengthened and helped.

The syllabi for the Friends' Bible Institute, conducted by Indiana, Western and Wilmington Yearly Meetings for the second quarter have been mailed. Any one not receiving them will please notify Albert J. Brown, 1218 N. Alabama Ave., Indianapolis. The course is popular, and the number taking the work is a surprise to the management.

Friends' University has been favored this month with two lectures by Wilfred Rowntree, of Ramallah, Palestine. Both lectures were illustrated by means of stereopticon views, the first being "Bible Scenes in Palestine," and the second, "Customs and Dress of the People of Palestine." They were of much interest and value, and were largely attended.

The annual meeting of the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia will be held in the Committee Room of Twelfth Street Meeting House on Fifth-day, the 22d of First month, 1903, at 4 p.m. Carolena Wood, of Mt. Kisco, N. Y., will speak on "The Purpose and Method of Our Work." It is expected that full accounts of the recent disaster by fire will be presented.

There are a few Friends at San Diego, Cal., who are desirous to see a good, strong meeting built up in that place. They have a monthly meeting organized, and Jesse W. Wilmore has felt it right to accept a call to serve as their pastor for a time. They would extend a most cordial invitation to Friends who may be seeking a more equable climate, or for any cause contemplate locating in the State.

Levi Barr has been laboring for some time in a revival in his home meeting, Los Angeles, Cal. R. N. Jeffery also has been doing good service in singing. Several are taking decided steps in their Christian walk. During the past year more than sixty members have been received into Los Angeles Meeting by letter and request; and the meeting is in the best spiritual condition it has been in since its organization.

Ackworth Friends' Meeting, Iowa, had a great uplift recently, the result of a series of meetings in which Inez E. Batchelor and her cousin, Birdie V. Batchelor, two young evangelists of Iowa Yearly Meeting, were very active. Several were led to take definite steps in their Christian experience. The meetings seemed much like those recorded concerning the early Friends under the ministry of George Fox.

Levi D. Barr has tendered his resignation as superintendent of evangelistic work in Southern California on account of increased responsibility in Los Angeles Meeting. John Henry Douglas has been appointed by the board to fill the vacancy.

It is very important that Friends who may have occasion to address the Friends' meetings in Wichita, Kan., should remember that there are two monthly meetings in that city, and make distinction so as to avoid complications in business meetings. Wichita Monthly Meeting is held at the Cleveland Ave. Meeting House, Wesley Hackett, clerk, east side; University Monthly meeting at the Friends' University, J. Edwin Jay, clerk, west side.

We are in receipt of the following communication from our brother, Levi D. Barr: "On the death of Barclay Jones, I wish to say that my life has been transformed and my home made happy by and through the faithfulness of that man of God. It was during his pastorate at Emporia, Kan., myself and wife were converted to God and united with Friends. We feel his death keenly, but rejoice that he has entered into the rest and glory of the faithful."

"The Institute for Colored Youth," which has had a successful history of sixty years, is about to enter upon a new stage in its career. A farm has been purchased in the suburbs of Philadelphia, and the institute is about to be equipped for giving all the training that the first-class modern teacher needs. The institute has about $150,000 of available funds, and it has secured a highly trained and thoroughly competent principal to take charge of the new work in the person of Hugh M. Browne.

Tillman Hobson has just closed a very successful series of meetings in the Union Street Meeting, Kokomo, Ind. These meetings were held under discouraging circumstances, but from the first it was evident that he was divinely led. The preaching was unusually strong and clear, the attendance and interest increased despite the holiday festivities, and many accepted Christ as their personal Saviour. The church was not only strengthened in numbers, but the clear presentation of Bible doctrines greatly built up believers.

The Militia bill amendment proposed by Friends is as follows: "Section 2. That the Vice-President of the United States, the officers, judicial and executive, . . . pilots, mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States, those who, being members of religious bodies, whose tenets are opposed to all war, are themselves conscientiously scrupulous as to bearing arms, and all persons who are exempted by the laws of the respective States or Territories shall be exempted from militia duty, without regard to age."

At a stated meeting of Friends' Western District Dorcas Society, held in Phila., 12th mo. 31st, '02, it decided to make a special appeal to each member and contributor, and Friends generally, for money to aid the poor women employed by the society to obtain coal during this season of scarcity. The proper distribution of the fund thus obtained will be decided upon at a future meeting of members. It is hoped that a generous response will be made at once, so as to relieve a great deal of suffering. Mary H. Biddle, treasurer, 1429 Arch Street.

It is with deep sorrow that we record the departure of Sibyl Narcissa Beale, of New England Yearly Meeting. She was the oldest daughter of Eli and Sibyl Jones, and she possessed much of the earnest, devoted evangelical spirit of both her father and mother. She and her first husband, J. William Jacob, were recorded in the ministry on the same day by China Monthly Meeting in the late seventies. Owing to a lack of physical health and strength, Narcissa Beale was never able to undertake extensive gospel labors, and she was not known much beyond her own yearly meeting. Every one, however, who knew her well felt the power of her faith and the earnestness of her spirit. Her words, never very abundant, carried conviction to the heart, and her personal appeals were deeply effective. She was, too, a striking example of those who live "as seeing the invisible."

The Friends of Blue River Monthly Meeting, near Salem, Ind., have their new house very nearly completed, and expect to dedicate it Second month 1st, which is the time of the regular winter quarterly meeting at that place. The total cost of the building is about $4,000, something over $1,200 of which remains to be raised at dedication. Blue River is next to the oldest monthly meeting in Indiana, and many of the ablest workers in widely-scattered fields to-day went out from her fostering care. Not a few of these have been hearty in their words of encouragement and in their financial offerings toward the new building. It is hoped that many of the old members and friends will be present at the dedication, and that it may be a time of refreshing.

We are glad to see the program for the Friends' Bible Institute Extension Course. This is an extension of the work done at the Earlham Bible Institute. The main lines of study are to be toward "a more comprehensive knowledge of the Holy Scriptures," and secondly, "a more extended knowledge of the characters and labors of the founders of the Christian Church and the defenders of the Christian faith." The outlined courses before us are on the geography of the Holy Land and on the history of the apostolic church. Elbert Russell conducts the former with Stewart's "Land of Israel and the New Testament" for text-book. Cyrus Hodgkin conducts the second with Thatcher's "Apostolic Church" as the text-book. The tuition fee is only fifty cents. All correspondence should be addressed to Albert J. Brown, 1218 North Alabama Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

DIED.

NEAL.—At her home, Lynn, Mass., First month 6th, 1903, Lydia Cobb Neal, in her 88th year. She was a lifelong member of the Society of Friends, and ever emulated its virtues.

SLEEPER.—At her home, in Baldwin, Kansas, First month 5th, 1903, Hannah Elliott Sleeper, in her 65th year. For the greater part of her entire life she was an earnest, active, Christian worker, and for a number of years latterly she was especially interested in foreign missions, being a member of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions at the time of her death.

SWAN.—At Las Palomas, New Mexico, Twelfth month 31st, 1902, Hannah S. Swan, daughter of Asa N. and Sarah A. Sutton. Her noble Christian character has left a deep impression, which will long be cherished by her family and friends. Funeral services were held at her old home in Raisin, Mich., and the burial took place in the Raisin Valley Cemetery.

TERRELL.—At the home of her daughter-in-law, Anna M. Terrell, near New Vienna, Ohio, Eleventh month 24th, 1902, Sidney H., wife of Israel A. Terrell, in her 76th year. She had been for a long time an elder in Fairfield Quarterly Meeting. Her loving spirit and ready sympathy will be greatly missed in the church as well as in the home.

WHITE.—At his home, near Raysville, Henry County, Ind., Twelfth month 31st, 1902, James White, son of Caleb and Mary White, aged 76 years. He was a birthright member of Friends, and for many years was a member of that body at Raysville, Ind.

During the year 1902 the following deaths have occurred in connection with Farmington Monthly Meeting, New York, out of a membership of about one hundred: Ira L. Purdy, Second month 14th, aged 61 years; Lottie Stevenson, Fifth month 5th, aged 42 years; Phebe Hathaway, Seventh month 6th, aged 83 years; Margaret J. Baker, Eighth month 27th, aged 50 years; Charity Stevenson, Ninth month 13th, aged 71 years; Ida Lapham, Ninth month 27th, aged 49 years; Lorana Brown, Ninth month 6th, aged 85 years; Levi A. Brown, Twelfth month 8th, aged 89 years; Amy A. Herendean, Eleventh month 27th, aged 73 years.

Several of these for some time were unable to attend meeting, while others were to the last in the active service of the church. Levi A. and Lorana Brown were married in 1834, thus living together sixty-eight years. They served acceptably as elders for many years.

This story is told of a young gentleman going to the British Wesleyan Theological Institution: His father was very anxious that he should not be plunged into any feminine entanglements. So he wrote to the governor to that effect. The next thing the father heard was that his son was appointed to take a ladies' class. The father remonstrated. The governor wrote back, saying that the safety of his son was in numbers. The father wrote back to say that the safety of his son was in exodus. The chronicler, unfortunately, does not relate the sequel to this Pentateuchal repartee.—Exchange.

DID YOU EVER KNOW

That Improper Food Often Causes the Liquor Habit?

It's a great proposition to get rid of a taste for liquor by changing food.

"About three years ago," writes a man from Lowry City, Mo., "my appetite failed me and my food disagreed with me. I got weak and nervous and felt dull and entirely unfit for business; then like a fool I went to taking liquor to stimulate an appetite. For a time that seemed to help and I congratulated myself on finding so simple a remedy. But, alas! I had to take more and more all the time until I got so that I could not get along without the whisky, and I was in a pitiable condition.

"I tried to quit, but that seemed impossible as I needed nourishment, and my stomach rejected food, and the more whisky I drank the worse I got. I kept fighting this battle for more than two years and almost gave up all hope.

"I noticed an advertisement of Grape-Nuts in the paper and concluded to try it. I found I could eat Grape-Nuts with a relish and it was the first food that I found nourished me in a long time. Soon my stomach trouble stopped, my appetite increased, the craving thirst relaxed until all desire for drink was gone. I have used Grape-Nuts constantly for over a year, and I am now strong and robust; entirely cured from drink and able to work hard every day. My gratitude for Grape-Nuts is unspeakable as it has saved my life and reputation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Your religion is good if it is vital and active, if it nourishes in you hope, confidence, love and a sentiment of the infinite value of existence; if it is allied with what is best in you against what is worst, and holds forever before you the necessity of becoming a new man; if it makes you understand that pain is a deliverer; if it increases your respect for the conscience of others; if it renders forgiveness more easy, fortune less arrogant, duty more dear, the future less visionary. If it does these things it is good, little matter its name; however rudimentary it may be, when it fills this office it comes from the true source, it binds you to man and to God. But does it perchance serve to make you think yourself better than others, quibble over texts, wear sour looks, domineer other men's consciences or give your own over to bondage, stifle your scruples, follow religious forms for fashion or gain, do good in the hope of escaping future punishment?—oh, then, if you proclaim yourself the follower of Buddha, Moses, Mahomet, or even Christ, your religion is worthless—it separates you from God and man.—Charles Wagner.

THE BIRD MUST LIGHT.

"I have almost become accustomed to the pranks played by the motormen of Brooklyn trolley cars on the long-suffering traveling public," observed a resident of that borough the other day, "but I most strenuously object to being insulted by the conductor in the bargain. I boarded a 'standing-room-only' trolley car yesterday, and had just got inside the door and was looking about for a nice strap on which to hang, when the motorman gave us a short stop. It meant a quick start for me. I went sailing through that car as if I'd been sent for. You couldn't have passed me with anything unless it had been thrown. I landed against the front door with a thud, and was just getting my bearings when the rascal on the front end did it all over again. It didn't seem so far going back, but when I crashed into the rear door the conductor yanked it open and snarled:

"Do you want to get out here?"

"No," said I. "I want to stay in."

"Well," said he, "if you want to ride on this car you'll have to stop running up and down the aisle."

"I'd be a bird if I could do that," said I.

"Well, be a bird," said he, "but light somewhere."—Exchange.

George M. McKinney, of Chicago, general immigration agent and land expert for the Harriman railroad systems, arrived in San Francisco to-day, in the course of a tour of the great country districts of California suitable for general colonization.

"I have come directly from Inyo County," said he, "and I am greatly impressed with Owens Valley, in the eastern part of California. I found hidden away in the mountains up there in Inyo County, 1,000,000 acres in Owens Valley, that is the most desirable land for general colonization purposes that I have thus far seen in California."

THEY CALL ME STRONG.

*They call me strong because my tears I shed where none may see ;
Because I smile, tell merry tales, and win the crowds to me ;
They call me strong because I laugh to ease an aching heart,
Because I keep the sweet side out and hide the bitter part.
But, O, could they who call me strong live but an hour with me
When I am wrung with grief in my Gethsemane !*

*They call me strong because I toil from early morn till late,
Well knowing there will be no smile to meet me at the gate.
They call me strong because I hide an inward pain with jest,
And drive away the care that comes unbidden to my breast ;
Perhaps 'tis strength—God knoweth best ; He sent the cares to me !
And His—not mine—the strength that keeps through my Gethsemane !*

Events and Comments.

The deadlock in the Delaware Legislature over the election of United States Senators continues, thus leaving the State without representation in the upper house. Colorado is also suffering from a deadlock, and as yet has failed to elect a Senator.

The national bank depositaries which were permitted three months ago to substitute State and municipal bonds for United States bonds as security for public deposits must now go back to the old security. Such is the order coming from the treasury department. The effect will be to reduce somewhat the supply in the money market.

Since The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago was founded, in 1889, 2,388 men and 1,286 women have been enrolled as students. Over 209 are in evangelistic work as preachers and singers; 559 in churches as pastors, pastor's assistants, visitors, etc.; 155 in city, home and Sunday School missionary work; 44 Christian Association secretaries, and 228 in foreign fields.

Two successful cases in New York seem to indicate that an antidote for blood poisoning has been found in formalin. If so, one of the greatest triumphs of modern science has been achieved. In surgical cases the danger of infection has been immeasurably reduced by modern aseptic and antiseptic methods, but where infection sets in the risk to life is very great. The formalin treatment will be watched with the greatest interest.

Many manufacturing establishments over the country have been compelled to close during the past few weeks on account of lack of fuel. In one industrial town in Indiana nearly all of the factory population, numbering several thousand, is out of work for this cause. Cases are common where hundreds have been thrown out of employment for a time more or less extended, and a salt manufacturing concern in New York has gone into the hands of a receiver, overcome by the high cost of fuel.

The new Panama Canal treaty has been signed by Secretary Hay and Dr. Herran, the Charge d'Affairs of Colombia, and sent to the United States Senate for its ratification. The principal conditions of the treaty require the United States to pay Colombia $10,000,000 for her rights in the present canal and railroad, and a yearly annuity of $250,000. On the other hand, the United States is to secure what is practically a perpetual and sovereign control of a strip of territory about six miles wide in which the waterway is to be built. This is to be accomplished by means of a lease for one hundred years, renewable thereafter in terms of one hundred years at the sole option of the United States.

The record of the year just ended shows a marked change in the share which the various ports have had in the distribution of the exports of the United States. The Gulf ports show a falling off of about 13 per cent. in exportations as compared with last year, and the Atlantic coast ports a decline of about 10 per cent., while the Lake and Northern Border ports show a gain of 3 per cent., the Pacific coast ports a gain of 10 per cent., and the Mexican Border ports an increase of 25 per cent. These marked contrasts, in which the ports tributary to the Atlantic show a reduction, and those on the Pacific or fronting upon contiguous territory show an increase, are in keeping with the general trend of the year's commerce, in which exports to Europe show a marked decline, and those to Asia and to the contiguous territory at the north and south a marked growth. Exports to Europe especially were affected by the crop failure of last year, since breadstuffs and provisions form the large proportion of the sales of the United States to that part of the world, while the bulk of our exports to Asia, Mexico and Canada are manufactures.

At the suggestion of the American Peace Society a memorial has been introduced into the Massachusetts Legislature asking the Congress of the United States to authorize the President to invite the governments of the world to join in establishing a regular international congress to deliberate upon the various questions of common interest, and to make recommendations thereon to the different governments. During the past century this work has been done by special Congresses and Conferences, about thirty in all, having been held to discuss and adjust matters of immediate and pressing importance. These congresses have been, in a large measure, successful, and besides accomplishing the ends for which they were called, have done much to remove friction, and promote harmony between the nations. The organization of such a body would not be altogether a new experiment, and it has many excellent features which commend it to the lovers of peace. Its efficiency and usefulness would be greatly increased by its permanence and regularity. Its recommendations would require the ratification by the nations before becoming public law, and in this way the governments would not sacrifice any of their sovereignty and self-direction. Such a congress, if established, would certainly exert a great influence in favor of mutual good will between nations, lessen the dangers of war, and assure the permanence of peace.

THE PEACE OF GOD.

THERE are many things which we all want—things for which we struggle hard and toil painfully. Like the little child with his printed list for Santa Claus, we have our list, longer or shorter, of precious things which we hope to see brought within our reach before we are gathered to our fathers. The difference is that the child is satisfied if he gets one thing which is on his list. We want everything on ours. The world is full of hurry and rush, push and scramble, each man bent on winning some one of his many goals. But in spite of this excessive effort to secure the tangible goods of the earth, it is nevertheless true that down deep in the heart most men want the peace of God. If you have an opportunity to work your way into that secret place where a man really lives you will find that he knows perfectly well that he is missing something. This feeling of inward unrest and disquiet gets smothered for long periods in the mass of other aims, and some men hardly know that they have such a thing as an immortal soul hidden away within. But even so, it will not remain quiet. It cries out like the lost child who misses his home. When the hard games of life prove losing ones, when the stupidity of striving so fiercely for such bubbles comes over him, when a hand from the dark catches away the best earthly comfort he had, when the genuine realities of life assert themselves over sense he wakes up to find himself hungry and thirsty for something which no one of his earthly pursuits has supplied or can supply. He wants God. He wants peace. He wants to feel his life founded on an absolute reality. He wants to have the same sort of peace and quiet steal over him which used to come when as a child he ran to his mother and had all the ills of life banished from thought in the warm love of her embrace.

But it is not only the driving, pushing man, ambitious for wealth and position, who misses the best thing there is to get—the peace of God. Many persons who are directly seeking it miss it. Here is a man who hopes to find it by solving all his difficult intellectual problems. When he can answer the hard questions which life puts to him and read the riddles which the ages have left unread, he thinks his soul will feel the peace of God. Not so, because each problem opens into a dozen more. It is a noble undertaking to help read the riddles of the universe, but let no one expect to enter into the peace of God by such a path. Here is another person who devotes herself to nothing but to seeking the peace of God. Will she not find it? Not that way. It is not found when it is sought for its own sake. He or she who is living to get the joy of Divine peace, who would “have no joy but calm” will probably never have the peace which passeth understanding. Like all the greatest blessings, it comes as a by-product, when one is seeking something else. Christ's peace came to Him not because He sought it, but because He accepted the Divine will which led to Gethsemane and Calvary. Paul's peace did not flow over him while he was in Arabia seeking it, but while he was in Nero's prison, whither the path of his labors for helping men had led him. He who forgets himself in loving devotion, he who turns aside from his self-seeking aims to carry joy into any life, he who sets to doing any task for the love of God has found the only possible road to the permanent peace of God.

THE EXCLUSION CLAUSE IN THE MILITIA BILL.

It is cause for rejoicing that our efforts have borne fruit. The clause exempting Friends from military service passed both Houses of Congress, and the Bill in its final form has been signed by the President. For the first time, Friends are exempted from serving in the militia by United States statute. Formerly exemption has been by State law, and this existed only in a small number of States.

We have never known an instance which revealed more clearly the influence Friends can exert when they rouse themselves and go to work in faith. When our first editorial was written the Bill had passed the House, and had had three readings in the Senate. The Committee on Legislation of the Five Years Meeting was at once notified, and this committee went straight to work. The Bill was in the care of Senator Proctor, of Vermont, and he declared that we were too late. He would have favored the amendment if it had come at a suitable time, but now it could not be put in. But a series of fortunate circumstances finally induced him to yield. In the meantime a number of very influential Senators had been reached and became interested in the amendment. Letters began to pour in from individual Friends and from meetings. Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, introduced the amendment in the Senate and ably supported it. Senators Hoar, of Massachusetts, and Depew, of New York, spoke vigorously for Friends. We shall print, next week, the interesting part of the debate in the Senate. Thomas Butler, member of Congress from Pennsylvania, did much faithful work, not only in the House, but in influencing Senators. It is impossible to overestimate the good work which the Committee on Legislation of the Five Years Meeting has done in this first matter which has come before them. They were able to reach in an influential way a large number of Senators, and in their efforts they have done the entire Church a good service. They have, however, by no means worked alone. The pleasant thing about the victory is the fact that so many have faithfully labored and helped to win it.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

THE Foreign Missionary Committee of Philadelphia Friends has decided to rebuild their school at Tokio, Japan, which was recently destroyed by fire. Before rebuilding, a delegation of the Association will go to Japan and study the whole situation, so that the future work may be established on the best possible basis. Asa S. Wing and Margaret W. Haines will make up the delegation. It is one of the signs of the great advance which the mission cause has made that one of the leading business men of Philadelphia leaves his work, from which almost nothing else could have drawn him, to go on this long trip solely because he feels a call to make a thorough study of the situation, so that for the future the most efficient work may be done. We speak of a "call" to the foreign field, but we often forget that those who do the work of management at home, who plan and study the problems, and who in the hour of a crisis leave everything else to go to the field to secure a clearer view, are called to the work too. This great work among the nations—heathen is a harsh and grating word—is calling for the best we have. It is too momentous an undertaking to be done through unbusinesslike method, or by a few scattered enthusiasts. It demands all the wisdom we have, and it cannot be done without just such sacrifices as this one which we record. We talk of the beautiful spirit which prompted Daniel Wheeler and the other worthies; let us rejoice that this beautiful spirit is not a thing of the past.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

PETER AND JUDAS.

BY ELBERT RUSSELL.

Peter and Judas were both members of the apostolic band, but from almost every other point of view they present contrasts. Peter's name stands at one end of the lists of the Twelve; that of Judas at the other (Matt. 10: 2-4; Mark 3: 16-19; Luke 6: 14-16; cf. Acts 1: 13). The first is always mentioned in the lists with the epithet Jesus gave him—Peter, the Rock; the other, with the epithet by which his fellows marked his infamy—the Traitor. Peter was a Galilean; Judas a man of Kerioth in Judea. We know the circumstances under which Andrew brought Peter from following John the Baptist to Jesus (John 1: 40-42); of the previous life of Judas and the occasion of his joining Jesus' disciples we know nothing. Peter became the spokesman, Judas the treasurer, of the Twelve. The crisis of Judas' career came on the night when he went out from the Last Supper with Satan in him to betray Jesus (John 13: 27); the climax of Peter's, on the day of Pentecost, when, filled with the Spirit, he preached Christ. If tradition may be trusted, Judas committed suicide in remorse for his treachery; Peter suffered crucifixion rather than deny his Lord.

Contrasts such as these are the result of differences in character. Peter was a man of good intentions, but hasty and lacking in self-control. He was a man of feeling and action rather than of reflection and foresight, whose motives were often better than his judgment. Such a man has much to regret or repent of in life, but Peter was open-hearted and open-minded, and had the ability to see and the strength to acknowledge his errors. His life was full of apparent contradictions, and he was continually surprising himself with his own acts and feelings. Yet at bottom he was a genuine man—wheat, though continually needing sifting; able to strengthen his brethren, but needing to turn first; rock-stuff, slowly growing to solidity and firmness that would endure and retain the divine fashioning. Under the tutelage of Jesus and the Spirit he grew continually less narrow, more progressive, less hasty, more spiritual. His varying impulses became a steady purpose and uniform enthusiasm, and his prejudices gave way to wider knowledge and experience.

We know less of Judas. He impresses one as a silent man with fixed, far-reaching purposes; as one who does not show on the surface either his passions or his plans. He was devoted to his own interests and capable of biding his time—a covetous man, crafty in his ways. He was the kind of man to be jealous of his superiors and to nurse imagined wrongs. He was capable of deep, unconscious friendship or of vindictive hate; yet he understood the undercurrents of his being not much better than Peter.

Each of these men had an ambition in connection with the Messianic kingdom, which they expected Jesus to establish—Peter to be His chief minister, Judas to be His treasurer. Like the rest of the disciples, they had cast in their lot with Jesus under a misapprehension as to the character of His Messianic work. They expected Him to restore the kingdom to Israel, with outward glory and with supernatural power and opulence, and they thought to share largely in its rewards and glory. Jesus' failure to fulfill this expectation led to a tragedy in the case of both Peter and Judas. His real character and work—so different from the current thought as to make even the Baptist doubt his Messiahship—became a "rock of stumbling" to them (Matt. 21: 44). Peter fell upon it and was broken in pieces; he made the change from selfish adherence to the national Messiah, to loyalty to Jesus as his own and the world's Saviour through a series of experiences that were not fatal to his faith. But the rock fell on Judas and ground him to powder.

The Gospels enable us to follow the process by which Jesus weaned Peter from the current notion of the Messiah, and attached him to his own person and work. His brother introduced Jesus to him as the Messiah (John 1: 41). Later, in Galilee, the miraculous draught of fish filled Peter with a half-superstitious awe of Jesus. The wonder-working Messiah, who was to make food plenteous, so that Israel could live without toil—was this not He? But Jesus called him away at once from such a thought to become with him a fisher of men (Luke 5: 1-11). After the feeding of the five thousand the multitude wished to make Jesus king, because they thought they recognized in Him the bread-giving Messiah. But at Capernaum, the next day, Jesus taught them to seek for spiritual life in Him, and elicited from Peter the statement that the Twelve wished to remain with Him because He had the words of eternal life (John 6: 15-68). At Cæsarea Philippi, though Peter confessed Jesus as the Messiah, the idea of a suffering Messiah was far from his thought, and Jesus began a course of instruction to accustom him to the idea of his suffering and death (Mark 8: 29, 31-33; Luke 9: 30, 31; Mark 9: 12). On the return to Capernaum Jesus taught Peter the expediency of submitting to Jewish authority even though he were Israel's king (Matt. 17: 27). At the same time Peter learned that humility and forgiveness are the badges of greatness in the kingdom (Matt. 18: 1-35). By the parable of the Laborers in the Vineyard (Matt. 19: 27ff) Jesus taught him that the disciples' sacrifices for Him would bring them no exceptional material reward. (See also the lesson that there was to be no personal favoritism in bestowing honors in the kingdom, Mark 10: 35-40.)

During the last hours of Jesus' life on earth the crisis of Peter's relation to Jesus came. In the upper chamber, when Peter was over-humble, Jesus washed his feet under protest; while Peter was over-confident Jesus predicted His denial; and in Gethsemane, while Peter was rashly brave, Jesus rebuked his use of the sword. Then, when passive strength was needed, the man of action broke down and forsook his Master, with whom he had felt himself shortly before ready to go to death. Later he recovered somewhat, and together with John followed Jesus to the high priest's palace. But when John secured permission for Peter to enter the palace with him, in response to the maid's surprised question, "You are not one of this man's disciples, too, are you?" Peter's first denial slipped out quite naturally. (See John 18: 15-27.) Circumstances did not make it easy for him to change his denial into an avowal of discipleship. It was more dangerous to confess Jesus as his Master before the officers than before the door-keeper; still more dangerous to acknowledge to a kinsman of Malchus that he had been with Jesus in the garden. Peter does everything enthusiastically; he swears to his denial with a solemn oath and impre-cation. Then the cock-crow, the remembrance of Jesus' warning, and the look that Jesus turned on Peter, brought him to himself. What the look was that Jesus gave His recreant disciple we may not know, but this we do know: it sent Peter out to weep bitter tears of contrition but not of despair. He had fallen on the rock of stumbling and been broken in pieces. It was thus Jesus found him on that morning when he appeared to a few of the disciples by the Sea of Galilee (John 21). When he recognizes Jesus he flings himself into the water to swim to his Master with his old impulsiveness. But in his converse with Jesus there is none of the former overweening self-confidence and rash assertion. He meets Jesus' tender question, whether Peter loves Him more than the other disciples, with an appeal to Jesus' knowledge of his own heart: "Thou knowest that I love Thee." Jesus' questions are followed by a commission ever increasing in scope and responsibility, for he knows that Peter will be faithful to him even unto death.

We know little of the process by which Judas was led to his failure. He had cast in his lot with Jesus under the same misapprehension as Peter and the others. But being less impulsive, he made fewer open mistakes, and consequently learned less. He came less closely into contact with Jesus, and did not form so close a personal attachment for Him. He became the treasurer of the Twelve, and was occupied with the financial side of their life. He, no doubt, expected to continue in this office when the kingdom should be established. The position of treasurer was an attractive one, for it would enable him to provide handsomely for himself. Then he began to steal the funds that were entrusted to him (John 12: 6). He must have felt less and less comfortable in the high moral tone of Jesus' company. Jesus' words concerning the improbability of a rich man entering the kingdom must have alarmed him, and Jesus' stern rebukes of covetousness must have stung him. He must have felt that Jesus and the other apostles rated him low spiritually, even though they did not fully see through his plans.

Gradually it dawned upon Judas that Jesus was not likely to set up an outward kingdom, such as he was expecting. He felt that he had been imposed on; that he had a grievance against Jesus who had aroused false expectations. The triumphal entry to Jerusalem, which had raised high hopes of the immediate setting up of the kingdom, had led to nothing; opposition to Jesus was growing daily among the rulers. Was it not best for Judas to sell out to Jesus' enemies for as much as possible and be quit of an unprofitable undertaking? Men's motives are hardly ever unmixed. Judas may have thought that an attempt against Jesus' life by the rulers would force Jesus' hand and hasten the setting up of the kingdom. In that case Judas, keeping his treachery secret, would have the priests' money and still have as much chance of preferment with Christ as before. If Jesus were not going to establish the kingdom at all, then better be quit of Him at once, while he could still realize something from Him. In any case, Judas did not expect that Jesus would allow himself to be put to death.

But Jesus let Judas know both in the upper room and in Gethsemane that his treachery was known. Any hope of return to the apostolic band was thus cut off. And Jesus was condemned! Then an unrealized under-current of affection for his Master came to the surface. He had been compelled to admire the personality of Jesus, and the latter had knit Himself more firmly to the disciple's life than Judas knew. After the excitement of his crime was over, and he faced an existence without Jesus, his feelings changed. Christ's hold on him was not strong enough to draw him back, but it was too strong for Judas to want to live without Him. He returned the blood-money to the priests, but their taunts only drove him to deeper despair. From them he went out to his untimely and violent death. The rock had fallen on him and scattered him as dust.

Fuller studies of the lives and characters of Judas and Peter may be found in Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible, articles "Peter" and "Judas"; in Bruce's "Training of the Twelve"; and in Ederheim's "Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah."

HISTORICAL NOTES OF FRIENDS.*

BY WM. H. COFFIN.

Friends have always possessed the Anglo-Saxon spirit of adventure and enterprise, which led them to remove to new, good countries. These reasons have led to the settlement of all the Western States and the Pacific Coast.

Causes of spiritual decline and lack of accessions to the Society by conversion were at work in the first half of the nineteenth century. While these causes may date back, the effects did not appear so much in the South as in the West, rising to their full force in 1828. First—A profession of extreme spirituality, which led to exhortations against a dependence on the letter; therefore reading or teaching from the open Bible was not allowed in meetings for worship; no First-day Schools were countenanced, and no regular family devotional reading of the Scriptures practiced previous to 1830 for fear of formality, it being held by many that the Scriptures must be read under the immediate prompting and influence of the Holy Spirit. This led to much ignorance of the Scriptures by the most of the membership. Second—No one was expected to speak, teach or pray in any meeting for worship unless under a strong impression of the immediate prompting and influence of the Holy Spirit and a call to the ministry. Much exhortation was heard about the danger of putting forth the hand unbidden to steady the ark, and many warnings against "creaturely activity." This had a repressive effect, and was followed in the smaller home meeting by long, silent meetings to a great extent, so that very many meetings had little or no ministry, unless a traveling minister came around, who was always hailed with joy. Unconverted or even religious professors of other denominations were not attracted by this quietism and silence, and very few accessions to the Church were known. Third—The rigid enforcement of the Discipline and disownments for slight causes. Hundreds were disowned for "departing from plainness in dress and address and accomplishing their marriage contrary to Discipline," very many for just the latter cause. We find numbers of such persons all over the West whose parentage were disowned for such causes, but who yet have a warm regard for the Church in which their fathers were born and lost their rights. A certain form of dress then worn was considered necessary as a hedge and a shield from "worldliness," no coat was allowed with a rolling collar, and I have known noted English ministers stopping at my father's at yearly meeting to have their overcoat collars cut off in obedience to these demands. No music of any kind was allowed, nor singing, as it was thought to show a light mind, and led out into the world; nor as an act of worship, as it led into formality and "creaturely activity." I found on the early records of White Water Monthly Meeting, where a Friend was disowned for "allowing a 'fidel' played in his house." Friends had good reason for this in the then new settlements, as fiddling and dancing and drinking generally all went together. And, although it was the custom of the time even among Friends to keep whiskey for medicine to make "camphire" of and hot stews for colds, yet Friends were always a strong temperance people, and allowed no drunkenness or excesses, and always had queries to that effect, about frequenting taverns where bars were kept, and falling into drinking habits or card playing. Fourth—Dissensions and separations and their cause. The lack of Scripture study and teaching of the masses of the Church led many to be an easy prey to the artful, specious, spiritualizing away of the Scriptures relating to the fall of man and blood atonement by Christ, in fact leading to Unitarianism, and resulted in 1827 and 1828 in a widespread and grievous separation in the Eastern and Western Yearly Meetings, the bitterness and baleful effects of which lasted for many years.

After the separation Indiana Yearly Meeting, in 1828, ordered a canvass by the subordinate meetings to find the number of families destitute of a copy of the Holy Scriptures, and the reports in 1830 were meager; but 191 were reported as entirely destitute, and, had the reports been full, it was thought at least 300 families were so. This was so astounding as to arouse the yearly meeting to action, and the monthly meetings were ordered to see that every family was supplied gratuitously, if not able to purchase. An annual query was now instituted, and reports expected every year. Elijah Coffin was the prime mover and secretary of an auxiliary to the Philadelphia Bible Association of Friends, which operated for many years. (Charles F. Coffin filled this place for twenty-nine years.) Every reader, as well as every family, was kept supplied. First-day Schools for scriptural instruction were first begun in the Western Yearly Meeting by Elijah Coffin in 1832-'33 in the school houses, but in a few years were allowed in the meeting house, because popular, and were attended by young and old, much the same as now. A query was also adopted by the yearly meetings recommending daily family reading of the Scriptures, which soon became general, and this study of the Holy Scriptures in the family and schools, with the able spiritual ministry on the atonement and salvation by Christ, laid the foundation for the great awakening that came to the Church in after years. Much quietism still prevailed in the smaller home meetings, but the quarterly, and especially the yearly, meetings were always seasons of great spiritual uplift on account of the associated body of believers and able ministers gathered together, and it was always hard to part at the close. Indiana Yearly Meeting, as mentioned in all the foregoing, really was the center, and represented all the Middle West and Western Ohio as well. The anti-slavery separation in 1843 in Indiana Yearly Meeting should never have occurred. All Friends in the yearly meeting were bitterly opposed to slavery, and the larger part had removed from the South mainly on that account. It was simply a difference in view as to the best mode of action in opposition to the slavery question at a time of great excitement and demonstrations throughout the whole country, North as well as South. The yearly meeting took some action towards a few prominent individual members which it probably had better not, as it stirred up much feeling at the time, and they, with many others, perhaps 500 in all, took hasty steps and set up separate meetings, but in a few years all came back and were lovingly and joyfully received without any apology, slavery going down soon after at the mouth of the cannon, amid carnage and the loss of hundreds of thousands of lives and billions of money and property.

Friends have, from their first rise, taken an active interest in the Indians, and have maintained from a very early period missions among several different tribes, virtually having brought them into civilized lives. They have now over 500 Indian members in the Indian Territory, some of whom are faithful ministers to their people. The standard of daily life among the early Friends up to 1850 was always morally high and appreciated by the public wherever they have lived. They held their membership to a strict accountability in the payment of debts and obligations, and to the faithful attendance of all their meetings of worship as a duty to God. They always cared for their own poor, and never allowed their members to go to law with each other, but settle by arbitration. They always took a deep interest in education, and established good schools at the Friends' school houses and academies in the Middle West long before any public school system was adopted, and opened them to the public. In conclusion, those early pioneers were the leaders in every moral reform and philanthropic work, and laid the foundation for good government and good society, and their influence is yet felt in every place they settled.

Some Views on Present Topics.

A CRYING NEED.

BY LEVI GREGORY.

To win souls to Christ, and to build up the believers in the most holy faith, is certainly the work of the Church. Is it not, therefore, proper for us to examine our position occasionally and see how well we are doing in the work undertaken?

Believing as we do in the Divine call to the ministry, all our work should be of His putting forth; while He calls for laborers to go forth and bring precious souls from darkness into light, and from the power of Satan unto God, does He not also call for loving care to be given to the babes in Christ.

Parents would certainly be far remiss who, after the little ones have been given, would care for them only a few days or weeks, while all are aware that it requires many years of patient care and labor before the child has become a man.

How often those who have started well in Christian life have soon been left to the unequal battle against old habits, former companions and the evil one.

I am certainly, heart and soul, in favor of soul winning or evangelistic work, but let us couple with it the other service of caring for or building up and strengthening the believers.

How to provide the needed ministerial help for new fields, for small or isolated meetings, is the urgent question. In many cases the neighborhood is not a desirable one in which to live; it is too isolated; principally foreigners; there are but few Friends. Or what about a living? Are conditions or objections raised?

Apparently two things are lacking among us. First, a true missionary trust in the Lord, that He will not forsake or fail those who go forth at His call. Second, a definite plan or provision on the part of the Church to carry forward such work. I fear that we have not looked upon the new fields and small meetings in the right light. We have somehow expected them to go, because they are started and ought to go.

In conversation with our out-going missionaries, recently, the case was presented of a minister who, under a sense of duty, sold personal necessities to go a few hundred miles to engage in a work where there were but few Friends, and with no assurance of support, only "that they would do what they could." One of the missionaries said to the other, "That is more faith than we have had to exercise to go to Alaska, for the Board supplies our living."

A recent letter from John Henry Douglas, who has had much experience on these lines, expresses the same thought, that it requires true missionary spirit and consecration to go to small or weak meetings. "There is such a pressing into centers and large meetings that it is with difficulty that any one can be had to labor in the small meetings."

"Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ" is doubtless a proper Scripture for us to consider in these cases.

Those who have had superintendency of the work in any of our yearly meetings will no doubt agree with me that one of the most difficult questions is, How to maintain our small meetings. It was discussed at the Five Years Meeting, and many good things said, but the solution of the problem is in rendering actual help. Somehow make it possible for some one called of the Lord to give the needed time and attention to the work. I am not asking for luxury. I know well a minister who, in the years of his service, has never received in support one-half as much as he formerly made in business, nor one-third as much as he has been offered by other churches, but being a true Friend his convictions are not to be covered with dollars. In many cases and places there should be the same care as is given missionaries to foreign fields. I am concerned that there be an awakening on these lines, for I believe that it is apostolic and according to the usage of early Friends. There are many places where, for the lack of a little assistance, small, struggling meetings are dying out. A faithful few are holding on, making untold sacrifice for truth's sake. And many other places where there are open doors and an earnest cry, "Come over and help us," but for the lack of means the cry must go as unheard. Having proven that we can do all that God asks us to do, I also believe that He has provisions for all His requirements. That while He calls some as ministers and missionaries, that He also blesses and prospers others in temporal matters, and asks that they share with the laborers by contributing of the blessings received.

I know some who recognize this obligation and desire to contribute of their means as an evidence of their appreciation and love. Shall we not prove Malachi 3: 10 and see what great things the Lord has in store for us?

And now that there is to be more united purpose and effort, let us pray that the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board may be favored to plan so wisely and well that much of this need may be met.

Corinth, situated on the isthmus which joins northern Greece with the Peloponnesus, was a great seaport, having trade both on the Ægean Sea and on the Gulf of Corinth. It was a city of about 400,000 inhabitants, and was the capital of the Roman province of Achaia, as the Romans called all the country south of Macedonia. Corinth had the reputation even in Paul's day of being the wickedest city in Europe, perhaps in the world. Paul, in the epistle to the Romans, which was written from Corinth, speaks of what he doubtless saw all round him (Rom. 1: 18-32). So also from the epistles to the Corinthians, we can infer much concerning the character of the Corinthian population (1 Cor. 5: 9-13). "Impurity was by no means the only vice for which Corinth was notorious. It was a city of drunkards; it was a city of extortioners and cheats." It was a center of manufactures as well as of commerce, and it was celebrated for the fine arts also. It was visited by many strangers, and there were a goodly number of resident Jews. Such was the place to which Paul went from Athens, and where he at this time spent eighteen months.

1. "From Athens." We are not told how long Paul remained at Athens. Some think it was about a month. Corinth was about forty miles southwest of Athens and the journey was often made by water to Cenchrea, the eastern port of Corinth. It could be easily done in a day.

2. "Aquila, a man of Pontus," in Asia Minor. Paul always sought out his own countrymen first. "Priscilla." A diminutive form of Prisca. This as well as Aquila is a Roman name, and some have concluded that as Aquila is distinctly stated to be a Jew, it is to be inferred that Priscilla was not one. It is not safe to draw this conclusion, for many Jews (including Paul himself) had Latin names. Neither is it likely that had Priscilla been a Gentile she would have been so familiar with the Old Testament as she seems to have been. As she is generally mentioned first, she seems to have been the abler and more energetic of the two. Some modern critics believe that she is the author of the epistle to the Hebrews. See Acts 18: 18, 26; Rom. 16: 3; 2 Tim. 4: 19; 1 Cor. 16: 19. "Claudius had commanded," etc. This special edict has not been positively identified, but was probably the one in A.D. 52, mentioned by the Roman historian Suetonius. The Jews were charged with stirring up insurrections.

3. "Trade." Every Jew was required to teach his son some trade or handicraft. "Tentmakers." Makers of the tents used by travelers, shepherds and possibly army tents—the word is the general one for tent. Paul seems to have been anxious not only to set a good example, but also to avoid any possible charge of favoring any faction. Compare 1 Cor. 9: 6-15; 2 Cor. 11: 6-10.

4. "Reasoned." Rather, discoursed. "Greeks." The Greek proselytes, for it is unlikely any Gentiles would have frequented the synagogue.

5. "Silas and Timothy." See Acts 17: 13-15; 1 Thess. 3: 6; Phil. 4: 15. "Paul was constrained by the word testifying," etc. Revised Version. This is the reading of the best manuscripts. The meaning is, that by the coming of his two friends Paul was relieved of anxiety, and more than ever gave himself to the preaching of the word. His message was the same as that he urged upon all his brethren—that Jesus was the Christ.

6. "Shook out his raiment." A Jewish symbolical act, similar to shaking the dust off the feet. "Your blood," etc. Similar to our expression, "You have taken the responsibility." It is a warning, not a threat. "I am clean." Paul had brought the message to them—the Jews, first; they had refused it. Compare George Fox's last words: "Now I am clear; I am fully clear."

7. "Departed thence." From the synagogue. "And went into the house of a certain man named Titus Justus." That is, for teaching and preaching. "Worshipped God." A phrase used to distinguish those who were proselytes. Compare Acts 16: 14. "Hard to the synagogue." Probably the reason for choosing it. Paul would be more likely to attract the Jews, and yet not discourage Gentiles.

8. "Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue," and therefore one of the chief Jews in Corinth. "Corinthians." These were doubtless Greeks and Gentiles. "Baptized." Thus making a public confession of their faith in Christ. Paul baptized them. See 1 Cor. 1: 14, 16.

9. "And the Lord said unto Paul—by a vision." Compare Acts 16: 9; 22: 17; 27: 23. "Be not afraid," etc. "The double form, affirmative and negative, adds emphasis." There was much to cause fear and uncertainty in Paul's mind. See 1 Cor. 1: 10-12; 2: 3-5; 11: 18-22, etc.

10. "I am with thee." Compare Jer. 1: 8; Matt. 28: 20. Set on thee so as to harm thee. This promise was literally fulfilled. "I have much people in this city." Literally, There is for me much people in this city. There was a definite work for Paul to do in Corinth, and he was given the assurance that he was in a fruitful field. The idea is that there were many who would receive the word if it were spoken to them.

11. "And he dwelt there." Revised Version. Not the usual word, but one which implies a restful abiding. "A year and six months." Whether the time should be counted from Paul's arrival or from the incident just named is not clear.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Paul labored with his own hands.
2. God often directs his servants to build better than they know. Paul does not appear at first to have thought Corinth was the most important place in Greece to preach the gospel, but it was, as a great center of human life, a strategic point.
3. If the wicked Corinthians could be made pure and righteous, any one could.

BIBLE LESSONS FROM MEN THAT FAILED.

Opposite the name of Cain we write jealousy; yet back of that was unfaith, for faith wrought Abel's acceptance. Samson was created, body, soul and spirit, but body dominated and the higher qualities went to the wall. Eli was in many things a faithful servant of God, but his weakness let in a train of evils that brought terrific judgment on him and his house. Saul was a chosen ruler for the chosen people, but when his opinions made him a better economist than Jehovah, he was on the road to speedy ruin. So that against part or all of the lives of these men is set the mark of failure.

This morning's paper recorded the last act of a man who once had wealth, social standing and political influence. He committed suicide in one of the hotels of Washington, and in a note which he left were the old familiar words: "Don't take the first drink." Another bit of human wreckage strews the shoal of intemperance and debauchery; another ruined life stands out like the buoys and beacon towers that mark the reefs and shallows at the harbor mouth. Yet this rock was well known. The very words of warning that this man left had been uttered by many a victim. The same sacrifice of honor and happiness and life itself ought long ago to have so impressed the thought of our race that no one would venture upon the folly of disregarding such a message.

"Mark but my fall and that that ruined me," says the doomed Wolsey to Cromwell. Does not the author of the book of Hebrews get the lesson from failure when, after having brought to mind how Israel missed the Promise, he utters the solemn words, "Let us therefore fear,"—"Let us therefore give diligence not to fall after the same example of disobedience." (Heb. 4: 1, 11.)

Of the founder of Methodism it is told that on seeing a condemned felon led away to execution he exclaimed, "But for the grace of God, there goes John Wesley!" Unless a contemplation of the failure of another begets in us a like spirit of humility and dependence on a stronger Power, we are ourselves in perilous plight.

These are proverbs of Solomon: "Whoso walketh uprightly shall be delivered." "The curse causeless lighteth not." Failure and success are effects; they result, but do not happen. The Holy Spirit and the World-spirit have different standards of success; they also have different guarantees. The world's promises often fail; the Spirit's are without variable-ness.

Jesus told in a simple parable what failure means in the sight of God. He likened men to two classes of workmen, each making a house, the one a success, the other a failure. The difference is not in the materials used nor in the workmanship of the superstructure. Both are subject to like storms, yet one fails to serve the purpose for which it is built, the other remains because it performs the function of a house. The success and failure is not in the appearance or treatment the buildings receive, but in the foundation upon which they rest. One is founded on that which is eternal, the other upon that which is transient.

In constructing character—and we all do—that which we place upon eternal truth is addition, a gain in the sight of God; but that which we place upon the shifting sands of a narrow and selfish ideal is subtraction, a failure in the sight of God. Esau forsook a divine inheritance for the gratification of his appetite. Achan was selfish and grasping, even bringing disaster to his people in order to gratify his greed, and Ananias and Sapphira held the praise of their companions deeper than truth. All of them were miserable failures, whose lives survive only as examples of warning. But how about Moses, who chose to wander in the wilderness and suffer with and for his people; or what is the lesson taught by Elijah, who hid himself for Jehovah's sake in a mountain cave? Then, again, there is John the Baptist, Stephen, Paul and a host of others whose lives are successes, all of whom reached out with candid, open hearts and accepted Truth and went down deep in their own lives and found God. They builded upon the Eternal Rock.

Nor dare we forget how awful is the failure to build character aright. We meet many failures in every-day life. The pen we try to use may be imperfect, the book we wish to read may be blurred, the knife, the hammer or the spade may be broken. Then, again, there are failures in human enterprise. Great fortunes are often swept away and families left destitute and disheartened, but these failures are not to be compared to the failure in life itself. They always come as the results of phenomenal causes, which may or may not be known, but in character-building every stone is a choice. The young man says: "I can leave liquor alone if I will," but this very power of choice is what makes his ruin so tragic. Let us be true to our Christian vows and make for eternal success.

Missionary Department.

AN ABSTRACT ACCOUNT OF THE FIRE IN TOKYO.

On the morning of Twelfth month 13th Mary A. Gundry remained in her room on account of a slight illness, and Edith Dillon and Sarah Ellis sat down to their morning meal alone. At the Bible reading a special need was felt to ask for strength for the day, and we are thankful to believe that the prayer was heard and answered.

The cook went up stairs to build the fires in the teachers' rooms, and, hearing a crackling of fire, came running down, calling, "Pipe, danger." Sarah Ellis and the cook tried to throw water on the flames in the kitchen, but to no avail. Edith Dillon ran and called Gilbert Bowles, who found the attic all ablaze. The fire bell was rung; cook ran to M. A. Gundry's room and hurriedly helped her down stairs. Edith Dillon and Sarah Ellis found time to throw a few things out of Sarah Ellis's room, to see that Mary A. Gundry was safe, and then ran to the girl's end of the house, shouting, "Get your baggage and run." Yamamoto San and Oneki San, two of the graduate teachers, also the Japanese matron, looked to the safety of others, caring for the little ones, and thus suffering the loss of their own property. There were twenty-seven girls in the boarding house; twenty-four of these escaped with Edith Dillon and the matron by the back way and gathered on the far corner of the playground. The three remaining little ones were taken by Sarah Ellis down the front way and joined Mary A. Gundry on the other side of the street.

A high north wind carried the burning embers onto the Mission residence, and it seemed as if it too must go. The firemen had arrived promptly, but the hose had to be spliced, and there was some delay. In the meantime, however, the wind changed and blew from the opposite direction, and the other buildings were spared.

Some furniture had been thrown out of both the school building and missionary residence, also some books and the sewing machine from each house. Gilbert Bowles had been engrossed in superintending this, when the heavy tile roof fell in, and nothing more could be done. The teachers were still uneasy as to the whereabouts of all the girls, and as soon as the heat abated a little all were gathered in the meeting house and counted. As one of them writes: "While the building was burning and I was not sure that all were out of the house, it seemed almost more than I could bear; but when it was over and I found they were all saved, a weight was lifted from my heart that made the loss for the time being seem very small indeed."

It was 11 o'clock when we all gathered in the residence parlor to consider what to do. All was chaos in the rooms about us. The smoke was still coming in from the burning building. A short praise service was held, giving thanks for our safety. Chuzu Kaifer offered a most touching prayer. Gilbert Bowles spoke of the lessons the fire ought to teach us, and C. Kaifer spoke to the girls, telling them of the plan for them to take explanatory letters and go home. After this the girls went to the meeting house again, and Edith Dillon and Sarah Ellis helped them to get their few rescued possessions together, and most of them went to their homes. Those who remained found a temporary shelter at the Missionary residence.

During the progress of the fire Gilbert Bowles telegraphed to the fire insurance company, also to Joseph Cosand, Gurney Binford and Anna C. Harts-horne. These friends came promptly and gave the comfort of their presence and counsel. Joseph Cosand was most kind in going over the building with the insurance agent and helping Gilbert Bowles in every possible way. "The loving sympathy of so many friends, both foreign and Japanese, is very comforting. Telegrams and letters, food and clothing, have been coming freely to us."

The insurance agent came the same day, examined everything and in a day or two Gilbert Bowles received a check from the Hong Kong Shanghai Bank for the full amount, 8,717 yen.

The partly-damaged goods were valued at $625 and purchased for $447.50.

The foregoing is a record of our losses, but over against these we wish to set down our gains. We have known that the school and mission were a power for Christianity, but how great a power we have not before appreciated. The kindness of the Japanese and their friendly feeling is unmistakable. "They have brought us tubs of hot rice, with cakes and oranges. Help is gratefully recorded as given by members, believers and attenders of the meeting—the gardener, milk man and different merchants. On First-day morning the husband of a former pupil called, bringing a letter of sympathy from his wife, in which they had enclosed three yen ($1.50), which she said was to be applied to the fund for rebuilding the school." And again: "We were all so touched when the man who does the menial work about the place came through the pouring rain, expressed his warmest sympathy, inquired about our safety and handed us a little paper with fifty sen ($0.25) wrapped in it to be used for those in distress."

The following indicates the value those who know the school place upon it: "A brother of K. Ota, a graduate of the school, is glad to offer his services free as an architect of the new building if desired.

He is a graduate of the Imperial University of Tokyo, in the architectural department, and is most grateful for all that has been done for his sister."

Most impressive is the following: "On First-day morning it rained heavily, but the meeting was held as usual. In the evening a strange young man was present. He arose, and in a manner and tone of voice which no one could question as showing a change of heart, stated his decision to follow Christ, and said that it was the extraordinary behavior the Christians had shown through the sad experience of the fire that had convinced him that the peace of God was something he had known nothing about. Now he believed with all his heart and determined to follow Christ."

The foregoing incidents must surely be called our gains. They are large with hope, and in the balances of the kingdom outweigh all the losses, leading us humbly to acknowledge that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Friends at La Harpe, Kan., recently set up a new monthly meeting.

There is at present a vacancy in the chair of Greek in Wilmington College, Ohio.

R. Hayes Puckett has been active for the past three weeks in a revival effort in his home meeting at Bangor, Ia.

Francis W. Thomas was greatly favored with a message in the meeting at Raysville, Ind., on First-day, the 18th.

Emma F. Coffin recently closed a successful series of meetings at Kamawah, Ia., and began a series at Lynnville on the 18th instant.

Fred Coppock labored for some time in the mission meeting at Miami, Indian Territory, and closed his efforts on the evening of the 11th inst.

Charles Stalker labored for two weeks in the meeting at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, last month. The meeting was much helped and permanent good was done.

T. C. Kenworthy, of Oskaloosa, Ia., has accepted a call to labor in the meeting at Damascus, Ohio, and will begin the work about the 1st of next month.

Bertha T. Pinkham, of Cleveland, O., held a successful series of meetings at Ludlow, O., from the 4th to the 14th instant. Substantial results followed the preaching.

New Hope Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma, has recently received a shipment of books from Harriet Green for their new Friends' Library. The Friends Book Store of Philadelphia also favored them with a donation.

Morton C. Pearson was unable to fill his usual place in the meeting at Knightstown, Ind., on the 18th instant, owing to overwork. J. O. Binford was present, however, and gave an inspiring message to the large company.

Friends' Meeting at Coloma, Indiana, sent a petition in a body to Senator Fairbanks to work for the amendment to the Militia Bill. As soon as the amendment was passed, Senator Fairbanks telegraphed his congratulations to Coloma Friends.

Henry McKinley, who is a first cousin of President McKinley, recently gave a vigorous address at Traverse City, where he is located, against war and military power. The sermon was called out by a lecture which Richmond Pearson Hobson of the Navy had given in Traverse City two days before. The sermon was reported in the "Daily Eagle," and should make many persons think.

Ernest Howard, who was recently called to labor in New Hope Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma, has decided to sell his farm near Cherokee, Okla., and locate permanently in the meeting.

The Board of Managers of Wilmington College, Ohio, on the 16th instant, accepted the resignation of President J. B. Unthank. He has done most excellent work in the college for more than a quarter of a century. His resignation is cause of deep regret to his host of personal friends in the yearly meeting.

Friends are warned against a man asking assistance in the neighborhood of Philadelphia, who represents himself as Dr. Theophilus Waldmeier, and claims in calling that he was sent by a person known to the Friend from whom he is asking assistance.

Anna Nuton, a native of Alaska, who is now a student at Friends' University, visited some of the meetings in Oklahoma during the holidays. She spoke on "The Alaskan Country and the Needs of Her People," and was the means of arousing quite a missionary spirit.

A very successful series of meetings has just closed at Upland, Ind., in which Fred Smith and wife, of Farmland, were very efficient in their ministry. A number of conversions and renewals and two accessions to Friends are some of the immediate results of the effort.

Gilbert L. Farr and wife, who have labored faithfully in Jamaica for nearly twelve years, with very gratifying results, have tendered their resignation to the Mission Board, and expect to return to the United States in order to give their boys an opportunity to secure a higher education.

Harry R. Keates, formerly of Glens Falls, N. Y., a well-known evangelist, commenced a series of revival meetings at Friends' Meeting House, Knightstown, Ind., on the evening of First month 19th. Meetings are held each afternoon at two o'clock, and each evening at seven o'clock. Large audiences and good results are expected.

The Friends at High Point, Ia., dedicated their beautiful little meeting house on the 11th instant. A monthly meeting was organized on the 12th by a committee of Ackworth Quarterly Meeting. A series of meetings was also begun at the same time. The meeting was organized only a year ago, and the outlook is bright for the future.

A two weeks' revival effort held three miles east of New Hope Meeting House, Oklahoma, closed the evening of the 11th instant. Lodi Bonser, of Clay Monthly Meeting, who labored for some time in the meeting, was called home by the illness of his wife. Several conversions and renewals are reported, and five have united with Friends.

By a recent religious census of the city of Dayton, O., it is shown there are over 75 members and preferences for Friends in the city, with no meeting. This opening is certainly worthy of care and attention. The cards giving names and street addresses are in possession of Oscar Moon, Ludlow, O., who may be addressed for further information.

Harry R. Keates, of Glens Falls, N. Y., closed a two weeks' series of meetings at Fairmount, Ind., the 18th instant. In the evening meetings he was enabled by the Spirit's power to awaken many to a consciousness of their condition and to lead some to decide for Christ. The afternoon meetings were devoted to an exposition of the letter to the Ephesians, showing the privileges and blessings vouchsafed to believers, and many were led to a fuller dedication of their lives to God.

We are glad to know that John Frederic Hanson is publishing a book on the rise, progress and present condition of Friends in Norway. It is to be called "Light and Shade from the Land of the Midnight Sun." It will tell the story of the labors in Norway of such well-known Friends as Lindley M. Hoag, Eli and Sibyl Jones, Robert Doeg, James Owen, Allen Jay, and Dr. Richard H. Thomas and Anna B. Thomas. The writer is himself a native of Norway, and expects soon to return to continue in that land the labors which he has been carrying on for the past two years.

All Friends everywhere who desire to assist Friendswood Monthly Meeting, Texas, in rebuilding their meeting house—blown down by a storm—will please take notice that the name of their postoffice has been changed, so hereafter draw all money orders in favor of Dr. J. M. Wright, League City, Texas, who will promptly and gratefully acknowledge the same.

Haviland Quarterly Meeting of Friends, held at Pleasant Plain, Kan, Twelfth month 12th to 14th, was well attended. Visiting ministers were Henry Dalrymple, of Indiana, and Anna Winslow, of Mount Air Quarter. Their gospel labors were edifying. On Sixth-day evening the Christian Endeavor Union rendered a very interesting program. Perry Hadley, the yearly meeting's superintendent of Christian Endeavor work, was present and gave some helpful advice. The meeting closed with a number of renewals and conversions, and a protracted revival effort followed, in which nearly fifty souls were led to accept Christ.

Dedicatory services were held in the Friends' Meeting House at Miami, Indian Territory, on First-day, the 11th inst. In response to an invitation of the local minister, Jeremiah Hubbard, the pastors from other congregations in the town were present and gave short talks. The meeting house was given to Grand River Quarterly Meeting by the Executive Committee of Indian Affairs in 1895. At that time the building was not quite finished, only partially seated, and had a small debt against it. By the generous offer of the creditor, Thomas Griffith, who promised to cancel the debt on condition that all needed repairs be made, and through the earnest efforts of an Ottawa Indian woman and other friends, the house has been placed in excellent condition, furnished with the needed seats and cleared of indebtedness. At the close of the services an opportunity was given to unite with Friends, and two candidates presented themselves.

BORN.

SYZE.—At Yorktown Heights, N. Y., to Albert and Laura S. Syze, First month 4th, a son.

MARRIED.

ROBERTS—PETTIT.—At the home of the bride, 1221 Third Avenue, New Brighton, Pa., Dr. Evelyn S. Pettit to Oscar Roberts.

WILKINS—BRANSON.—At the home of the bride's parents, on the evening of Twelfth month 31st, 1902, at New Sharon, Ia., Frank E. Wilkins, of West Liberty, Ia., and Evelyn M. Branson. Their home will be near West Liberty, Ia.

DIED.

SMITH.—In Buffalo, Kansas, Twelfth month 12th, 1902, Eva Smith, daughter of Watson and Emma Fuller, aged 35 years. Although a great sufferer her faith was unwavering. The funeral service was held in accordance with her own plans.

SPRAY.—At the home of her son, William A. Spray, near Springdale, Kan., First month 1st, 1903, Hannah Spray, widow of Elihu Spray, and daughter of William Mendenhall, of Spring Valley, Ohio, in her 69th year. She was a member of Lawrence Monthly Meeting and served as an elder for many years.

STURGEON.—At his home, in Kokomo, Ind., First month 11th, 1903, John Sturgeon, aged 64 years. One year ago, while giving his testimony for Christ in a revival meeting, he was stricken with paralysis. He was a member of New London Monthly Meeting, Ind., and died rejoicing in the Lord.

WEAVER.—At his home in Smyrna, N. Y., First month 17th, 1903, Chester A. Weaver, aged nearly 84 years. He was a member of Smyrna Monthly Meeting, and left the comforting evidence that through the merits of redeeming love he was prepared for his heavenly home.

A modern critic proposes the following translation for the first three verses in Genesis:

"In the beginning of Elohim's creating heaven and earth—that is, the cosmos—the chaotic mass existed—namely, as a tohu wavohu; and darkness was upon Tehom and the spirit of Elohim upon the waters."

It will be obvious at the first glance how much more clear and comprehensible this is than the old translation, with which we are familiar! In its grace, simplicity, and perspicuity it is absolutely admirable and well-nigh perfect!—"Western Christian Advocate."

"Well, well," remarked Farmer Korn-top at the zoo, "this here lion 'pears to be real good-natured." "Mebbe," suggested his wife, "it's one o' them social lions you read about in the papers."—"Philadelphia Press."

Pearline or Soap—not soap and PEARLINE. That is waste. PEARLINE has enough soap to act in the most effective way on dirt. With many washing-powders, much soap is needed. You can't find a trace of soap in some. But PEARLINE is improved soap itself. Takes soap's place. Does easier—quicker—better work—saves rubbing. 675

BOOK REVIEWS.

"Water Baptism: A Pagan and Jewish Rite, but not Christian." By James A. Moon. Price 25 cents. John Wanamaker.

There is often a felt need among Friends, especially in new meetings, for a clear, concise statement of our position on water baptism. The present manual is intended to meet this need. By scripture and history the author proves that this so-called "Christian ordinance" was a Pagan and Jewish rite, but that it formed no part of pure Christianity. Christ's commission to His apostles is discussed in the opening section, followed by a discussion of John's baptism, the use of the rite in the early Church and its development in later ecclesiastical degeneracy.

"Light and Shade in the Land of the Midnight Sun." By John Frederick Hanson.

The rise and progress of the Society of Friends in Norway, which is the real theme of this book, just appearing, is a subject of permanent interest to Friends and Norwegians generally, while no Norwegian Friend will be content without it. The little body of Friends has survived more than a half century of persistent persecutions from the State Church and the military régime in Norway, and the narrative of their Christian heroism and enduring faith in their native land will fill honored pages in history, while children's children will tell the story and trace the pathway from persecution to free America of their own Pilgrim Fathers. The work of English Friends on behalf of their brethren over the sea is a very unusual example of faith and patience. The many visits and faithful services of English and American ministers beautifully illustrate the power of Christian love in response to the call of God. The fact that the author has lived and moved in the midst of the events which he narrates with becoming modesty will be of added interest to the reader. Indeed, he is the only person who could write this work, now or in the future, and many will thank him for his labor of love so well performed.

To live content with small means; to seek elegance rather than luxury; and refinement rather than fashion; to be worthy, not respectable; and wealthy, not rich; to study hard, think quietly, talk gently, act frankly; to listen to stars and birds, to babes and sages, with open heart; to bear all cheerfully, do all bravely, await occasions, hurry never; in a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious, grow up through the common. This is to be my symphony. --William Henry Channing.

"The death of self is not the crushing out of self-hood, but of selfishness."

THE RIGHT THING.

A New Catarrh Cure, which is Rapidly Coming to the Front.

For several years, Eucalyptol Guaiacol and Hydrastin have been recognized as standard remedies for catarrhal troubles, but they have always been given separately and only very recently an ingenious chemist succeeded in combining them, together with other antiseptics, into a pleasant, effective tablet.

Druggists sell the remedy under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and it has met with remarkable success in the cure of nasal catarrh, bronchial and throat catarrh, and in catarrh of the stomach.

Mr. F. N. Benton, whose address is care of Clark House, Troy, N. Y., says: "When I run up against anything that is good I like to tell people of it. I have been troubled with catarrh more or less for some time. Last winter more than ever. Tried several so-called cures, but did not get any benefit from them. About six weeks ago I bought a 50-cent box of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and am glad to say that they have done wonders for me, and I do not hesitate to let all my friends know that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are the right thing."

Mr. George J. Casanova, of Hotel Griffon, West Ninth Street, New York City, writes: "I have commenced using Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and already they have given me better results than any catarrh cure I have ever tried."

A leading physician of Pittsburgh advises the use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in preference to any other treatment for catarrh of the head, throat or stomach.

He claims they are far superior to inhalers, salves, lotions or powder, and are much more convenient and pleasant to take, and are so harmless that little children take them with benefit, as they contain no opiate, cocaine or any poisonous drugs.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cents for full size package, and they are probably the safest and most reliable cure for any form of catarrh.

George M. McKinney, of Chicago, general immigration agent and land expert for the Harriman railroad systems, arrived in San Francisco to-day, in the course of a tour of the great country districts of California suitable for general colonization.

"I have come directly from Inyo County," said he, "and I am greatly impressed with Owens Valley, in the eastern part of California. I found hidden away in the mountains up there in Inyo County, 1,000,000 acres in Owens Valley, that is the most desirable land for general colonization purposes that I have thus far seen in California."

SALE OF DRESS GOODS

It seems almost foolish to mark down the prices of staple styles of Black Dress Goods when the demand in certain favored lines is almost greater than the supply; but that is just what we have done, to make this January Sale more interesting, and to-day's buyers will secure unusual values.

BLACK IMPORTED MOHAIR

This is one of the best things we have ever offered at the price. An imported fabric, made of pure mohair, with a high lustre; 44 inches wide, and of superior character in every way; 75c. value—at 58c. a yard.

BLACK ALL-WOOL CHEVIOT

Another fine lot of this popular number has come to us just in time to get into the January Sale. Medium wale, and a good solid black; 54 inches wide; $1.25 value—at 65c. a yard.

BLACK STORM SERGE

All wool, with a medium twill and a crisp, bright finish; 50 inches wide. This is a special value, so great that it stands out boldly even in the month of January Sales; worth 75c.—at 50c. a yard.

"WHAT IS TRUTH?"

*One day I asked in fancy,
Of the passers, for a word
In answer to this question;
This is what I heard:*

"Truth is reality,"
 The sage of science said;
"Truth is only justice,"
 The son of Blackstone read;
"Truth," replied the merchant,
 "Is just plain honesty;"
"Truth," observed the maiden,
 "Is sweet sincerity;"
"Truth," affirmed the artist,
 "Is always seen in beauty;"
"Truth," wrote the moralist,
 "Is synonym for duty;"
"Truth," so taught the teacher,
 "Is fact and nothing less;"
"Truth," proclaimed the preacher,
 "Is perfect holiness."

*Like gem of many facets
In the spectrum of the sun,
Truth may seem many featured;
Yet, all truth is one.*

MUCH misinformation regarding these people has been industriously disseminated by the newspapers. They are simply not understood by their critics. They come from a different civilization, and have different ideals, habits, and prejudices. Yet they are most richly worth knowing.
One who can penetrate their strange exterior soon finds they are made of the very best character-stuff. In many respects they compare well with the pioneers of our own settlements two hundred years ago.

In one respect they are unfortunately different. They are ignorant. The hope for their future lies in education.

The author of this book traveled through their settlements on an educational mission. He came to know them intimately, and portrays them as they are,—but kindly and lovingly, not grotesquely. He believes in them.

The fruits of this book, both moral and material, he dedicates to their welfare. He hopes its publication may gain them new friends and helpers.

Many illustrations are from photographs by the author.

Events and Comments.

Experiments on the military railroad between Berlin and Zossen in connection with keeping a moving train in continuous wireless communication with the signal station, by means of the Braun system, have been completely successful.

Last week, for the first time since winter set in, there was a plentiful supply of coal in the yards of New York city dealers. The impression prevails that the famine at last has been broken, and this is indicated by such an increase in the supply of so-called independent coal as to break down the price to $7 and $7.50, at which it is being bought by New York dealers.

Albert K. Smiley is making plans for another conference on international arbitration at his delightful summer resort, Lake Mohonk, N. Y., in the coming Fifth month. He announces that the meeting will be held on the 27th, 28th and 29th of that month, and he hopes to make it the best of the series, in view of the prominence that international arbitration has acquired through the events of the past year.

A local option bill on the right of the people to govern themselves in regard to the saloon question is attracting the attention of Christian people throughout Illinois. More than one thousand sermons favoring it were preached in Illinois pulpits on First month 25th, the first Sabbath after its introduction in the present legislature. The State governing or connectional body of almost all the leading denominations is officially committed to favoring the passage of this measure.

A new general customs tariff has recently been published at St. Petersburg. An official memorandum accompanying it explains that Russia has followed the example of other states in view of the impending expiration of her commercial treaties. The new tariffs have been elaborated with special regard to the protection of national industries, but there has not been any idea, by an artificial raising of rates, of securing a means of bargaining with other Powers because such a weapon would cut both ways.

Henry C. Rouse, of New York, President of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, arrived in Berlin, one day last week, having made a mid-winter trip from Pekin to Moscow in the record time of seventeen days and nineteen hours over the Eastern Chinese and Trans-Siberian Railroads. His journey was accelerated by complimentary special trains through Manchuria and the other eastern provinces. He was favorably impressed by Russia's achievements, and believes in the ultimate commercial value of the Trans-Siberian Railroad, as well as in its immediate strategic use.

The movement of farm families from our Western States into Manitoba and the Canadian Northwest must be very large, and it is certainly of great significance. It was heavier in the last half of last year than in the first half; yet the report of the Canadian Department of the Interior for the year ending Sixth month 30th last shows that 4,954,847 acres of land were disposed of by the department and the railroad companies during that year, or about double the sales of the previous year, and wholly out of comparison with sales of previous years. And this land has been taken up largely by immigrants from the agricultural sections of the western United States.

One of the most appalling railroad wrecks that has occurred in the vicinity of New York for many years took place one night last week at Graceland, on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, near Westfield, N. J., when the Royal Blue line express plowed at top speed into the rear of a local train. Twenty persons were killed outright, while the number of those known to be injured is upward of 50, of whom 13 remain in the hospital. Another disaster occurred on the Southern Pacific, near Vails, Ari. Two passenger trains collided while running at full speed. Eight bodies have been found, but the number consumed in the burning wreck has not yet been reported.

To answer accurately such questions as "Do College Women Marry?" and "How Many College Women Teach?" is practically impossible. But some of the results from such facts as are gathered are interesting reading. When President M. Carey Thomas, of Bryn Mawr College, prepared for the Paris Exposition her monograph on "The Higher Education of Women," she found that in 1895 37.7 per cent. of Vassar graduates were teaching, two per cent. engaged in graduate study. In 1898 she found 49.7 per cent. of the Radcliffe alumnae were teaching, 8.7 per cent. being engaged in graduate work. At Bryn Mawr, in 1899, 39 per cent. were teaching and 11.4 were engaged in graduate study. Radcliffe had 17.5 of her alumnae unmarried and without professional occupation, while Bryn Mawr had 26.6 per cent. The figures for 1901 show that only 30.8 per cent. of Bryn Mawr graduates are teaching, and 9 per cent. engaged in graduate study, while 24.4 are married. The fact that fewer graduates are teaching now than three years ago is not an index of lower standards of work, but an indication that more girls go to college now who wish the best intellectual training, but do not intend to teach.

A MINISTRY OF SIMPLE FAITH.

FROM childhood to old age Faith is the first thing to get and the last thing to let go. There could be no better words for any one's closing hour than those of the greatest Christian: "I have kept the Faith." It is the first and most important duty of a Christian Church to build men up in Faith. Whatever else a minister may have, or may lack, he must have the gift of quickening Faith and of establishing souls in confidence. The real trouble with our world is its sin, and sin always weakens a man's sense of God. It is useless to undertake to help a man who is spoiling his life in sin, by entertaining him with eloquent sermons or by telling him what modern scholars believe about this or that problem. What would you think of a man who stood in front of a burning house and gave an address on the science of combustion! No; the first thing is to get the fire out. Then there may be time after that to study combustion, if anybody cares to know. So, too, in our religious work, the first consideration must be to get the fire out in men's lives. Wrangles over theology do not help do this. Nothing does the work except God's remedy. There is no other great thing in the world quite so simple as the Gospel of Redemption. Little children generally understand it best because they do not complicate it with a lot of metaphysics which never belonged in it. They see straight to the heart of it, and this is what a minister ought to do. He ought to make it absolutely simple—especially when he wants to reach a man who is floundering in sin. Faith in Christ is the whole of it. In Him I see God. He is God for me. Without Him I do not know God, I cannot find Him, I cannot be sure of His Goodness, His Love or His Forgiveness of sin. I should be left in a sense of terror before an Unknowable Power. God has come to the world. He has showed His nature. We see here how infinitely He is beyond us and yet how like us He is. We hear Him bless the pure in heart, but He does not stop with that—He goes on down the scale until He reaches the poor fellow who has nothing but hunger, and He blesses him! He shows his infinite Goodness, and He says you are to be like me—like your Father. He tells in the simplest stories, which even the boy in the slums appreciates, what the kingdom of God is like and how it comes—and lo! it is within you. He who can tell these simple things because they have become facts in his own experience will always have a theme and will always quicken Faith in others. But this is not half the story. He spake as never man spake. But the things which reach our lives are deeper than words. He was unspeakably more than a teacher. The minister of simple Faith must be able to say, "I will know nothing save Jesus Christ and Him crucified, for the cross is the power of God." He must be able to tell this, so that it becomes the clearest reality to those who hear. Here, again, if he is merely interested in working out a theological theory he will waste his breath. Men are seldom saved by theological theories." His business is to make men see what Calvary means to them—not what it means in books. God so loved the world that He took the burden of its sin Himself. He bore it. It cost Him all this agony which one reads in the cross. He paid the price of sin. He showed the awfulness of sin. But it is not some abstract sin which makes God suffer. It is your sin and my sin. It is not alone Herod and Pilate and Judas and Roman soldiers who crucify Christ—all of us who sin crucify Him afresh and heap up the Divine sufferings. Will any mortal who knows that find any peace in his sin? Can he go on eating his swine husks if he hears ringing in his ears: "He loved me and gave Himself for me?" Why not tell men this and make it simple and plain? That is just the greatest need to-day and always—this ministry of simple Faith.

But if the main thing and the best thing is this ministry of simple Faith, why should our ministers be referred to a long list of books dealing with modern problems, which very likely will disturb them more than settle them in this simple Faith? Our answer would be that to a large number of our ministers such books would be of no use whatever. The problems dealt with in these books have never risen in their lives, nor do they trouble anybody in their communities. They would find the books, too, exceedingly hard to read, and they would be more perplexed than helped. The thing for them to do is to let such matters alone, just as they do theories about the inhabitants in Mars, and go about their daily work telling the simple, old, old story which is the central thing, after all the ages.

But there are others who cannot do this. Their own reading and mental training have made it necessary for them to deal with intellectual problems. Then they find themselves continually questioned by the young, active members who read modern books and hear such matters discussed. There is one of two things to do. Either we must condemn all modern views unread, or we must know what they are and why they are held. The books in this field are simply legion—some are good and some are very bad. The man who would like to form an honest opinion is confused over the mass of literature. We recently selected a brief list which was printed. We frankly said that these books were not free from error. They are not final. They settle nothing. The various writers often disagree. Those who want to find a book which will answer all their questions will find no such book here. They are merely the safest books we know of for those who want to pick up the threads of present day thought on religious lines. They are every one written by devout and spiritual men—men of faith. They must, however, be taken as they are meant. They are only for those who want to read such books. There are some Friends who still compare such scholars as John Fiske to Voltaire, and point out sentences in the books of most modern Christian scholars which seem to them pernicious. It is only the person who can penetrate the spirit of a book even though he disagrees with sentences or chapters who can be instructed by such books. It is much better to let them alone until the situation compels us to take them up. It was for such that this simple list was given; and read in the historical spirit there is no book here which will hurt anybody.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

ONE more seemingly indispensable Friend has been removed by death. Charles Rhoads, of Had-donfield, New Jersey, was suddenly called home on First-day, the 25th ult. He was a twin brother of the late Dr. James E. Rhoads, and though not so widely known as his brother, he was, like him, a beautiful example of pure and noble Christian living, and a gifted minister of the Gospel. His life was an unending sermon, and must have convinced many of the truth of his religion. His words were always weighty, and he was a trusted counsellor in the affairs of the Church. In his own meeting, and in his yearly meeting, everybody will feel that a pillar has gone.

THE "British Friend" appears in its first issue for the current year in a new and attractive dress. Within, its character is still more changed, though a steady progress has for some time been apparent. It has been gradually developing into a Monthly Review. Its editorial articles are solid and penetrating, with a real message for the thoughtful. It gives large space to the review of the leading religious books of the month. It is open for the discussion of all questions of the day, and it gives a valuable outlook on the progress of events of interest to the Church.

WE publish this week the debate on the amendment to the Militia Bill. The clause as finally adopted reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this Act shall be construed to require or compel any member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing whose creed forbids its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein, in accordance with the creed of said religious organization, to serve in the militia or any other armed or volunteer force under the jurisdiction and authority of the United States.

The first Militia Bill was passed by Congress in 1792. No exemption was made for Friends, either in this or in subsequent bills until the present one. During the Civil War President Lincoln, by his authority as commander-in-chief of the army, did much to relieve Friends from military service. This relief was largely accomplished through the active exertions of Governor Morton, the great "war governor" of Indiana. Friends themselves, as is well known, often visited President Lincoln to secure relief for those who were drafted.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

AN OLD-TIME STRONGHOLD OF FRIENDS IN NEW ENGLAND.

On the southern coast of Massachusetts there stands a prosperous and rapidly-growing city, which in the days when its shipping interests were supreme contained the largest and most influential body of Friends in the East, exclusive of New York and Philadelphia. Here, in the early days of the century which has just ended dwelt the descendants of the Friends who founded the city and made this community noted throughout the world. Their vessels were found upon every sea, and valuable cargoes were landed at the shores and dispersed to every corner of the land.

Daniel Wheeler, the noted minister and servant of Christ, came here with a message, and viewed with interest a spot whose name had been a familiar sound to him when prosecuting his missionary labors in the Pacific Ocean. The broad-brimmed hat, the plain coat, and the drab bonnet were seen daily upon the streets. Frederick Douglass, when arriving here as a fugitive from slavery, exclaimed, with pleasure, "I am among the Quakers, and I am safe." From week to week great audiences assembled at the large meeting-house, and the gatherings on the day of the quarterly meeting filled the building to overflowing. This was a community whose wealth was derived from the sea and the uttermost parts of the earth.

But the old has vanished, and new experiences are at the door. As a great whaling seaport memories only remain. As a large manufacturing city of New England it holds a prominent position. During the twenty-five years embracing the third quarter of the last century a period of transition took place, and the foundation was laid for the present industries, which have advanced with rapid steps. While these transformations were in progress the Society of Friends suffered a decline and waned in numbers and influence.

But at this hour our chief concern is with the future. With a population of more than 70,000 people, and with suburban villages to raise the total to nearly 80,000, with three meeting-houses of Friends, one in the city and the other two a short distance beyond the limits of the former, with hundreds of the inhabitants descended from Friends, and many of these favorably disposed toward the faith of their fathers, with hundreds of dwellers who have come from the busy Lancashire towns of England, many of whom have been thrown in contact with Friends in their native land—with these and other facts to face, and with a due sense of responsibility to these classes, what a prospect for work is presented!

From a population of 27,000 in 1882, this city has grown to a population of 72,000 in the opening days of 1903, a gain of 45,000 in twenty years, and with the suburban residents the community embraces nearly 80,000 people.

Is New England Yearly Meeting awake to the importance of this field and mindful of its interests?

We simply desire to call attention to the New Bedford of to-day, and leave it in their hands.

FISHING FOR MEN.

BY HUGH MACMILLAN.

How admirably does the calling of the fisherman represent the work of the apostles whom Jesus called. For just as the fisherman casts his net into the sea, proverbially uncertain of the result, and ignorant if successful, what kind or number of fish he may take, so the fisher of men knows not whether he shall spend his strength for naught and in vain, or whether he shall have many souls for his hire. The work both of the natural and the spiritual fisherman is one which eminently demands faith and patience and trust. The Lord often teaches His servants by a long dark night of fruitless toil how weak and insufficient they are in themselves, how incapable of bringing anything they desire to pass. By this discipline He gives them "gainful losses," higher and better things than those for which they let down their net; and at the same time prepares them for success when it does come, to enjoy it meekly and to give God the praise, instead of sacrificing to their own net, and burning incense to their own drag. He who is the Lord of nature and of grace, who holds the hearts of all men in His hands, and turneth them as the rivers of water are turned, guides those who are to be the subjects of converting grace in ways that they know not to the human ministry appointed for the purpose, just as He guides the unconscious movements of the fish in the sea, and regulates the kinds and ways in which they shall come into the fisherman's net.

But you will notice that in the last interview of our Lord with His disciples, He combined the two occupations of the Shepherd and the Fisherman, the distinctive teachings of the Old and New Testaments as they are represented by those two characteristic images. The motto of the old dispensation was "keep," but a new dispensation was inaugurated by Jesus Christ, whose motto is not so much "keep" as "catch." The disciples were told to meet Christ after His resurrection at the accustomed haunt on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. The angel told them at the sepulcher that Jesus was risen, and that He had gone before them into Galilee, and that they should see Him there, and when they went a fishing, and resumed their old occupation as if they had given up all hope of anything coming out of their brief connection with Jesus, and when they toiled all night and caught nothing, Jesus by that significant circumstance showed them that they were no longer to be mere fishers of fish, and by the repetition of the former miraculous draught of fishes in the same spot He re-consecrated them to be fishers of men. There beside the net full of great fishes dragged to the shore, and the fire of coals with fish laid thereon and bread for a sacramental meal, Jesus connected the occupation of the fisherman with the occupation of the shepherd, enabling them to carry over into the higher truth to which He was summoning them, the very characteristics that gave them success in their natural calling. To the persistent fisherman of Galilee He said in that last touching scene of restoration, "Lovest thou Me, feed My sheep, feed My lambs." He made a shepherd of the fisherman; for it would need the combination of the two offices to make an apostle of Christ. A fisherman can show his skill and patience, his courage and hope, in braving the stormy deep and catching his scaly spoil, but the fishes which he catches have no need of his care; they have no personal relation to him; they are mere dead spoil taken from the deep. But sheep are living creatures of sensitive nature, weak and erring and defenceless, and are placed under the protection of man, and need to be watched over and tended continually. They know their shepherd and he knows them. The minister of Christ must be the pastor of those whom he catches by the Gospel net, feeding them by his teaching and leading them by his example. "Follow Me," says the Lord Shepherd to us, and as we follow Him ourselves as the sheep of His pasture, let us seek to be under-shepherds of His to others, caring for and ministering lovingly to the flock, however small, which He has placed under our influence, in such a way as that by the work we ourselves may be educated, and the sheep and lambs of Christ may be trained for the everlasting fold.

EXTRACTS FROM THE DEBATE ON THE MILITIA BILL.

Mr. Beveridge: Mr. President, this amendment* I offer to cover two or three well-known religious organizations in the United States—particularly the Quakers and the Dunkards. It is well known that it is one of the fundamental tenets of their creed that war in any form is murder, and that they are conscientiously opposed to participating therein. The point will be made—and perhaps with some weight, too—that in this bill as it now stands amended, with section 24 stricken out, my amendment is not necessary; nevertheless, Mr. President, it certainly can do, and it will be admitted that it can do, no harm.

While I myself am not in favor of loading a bill with unnecessary provisions, yet I think it is perfectly right that when a great and weighty and intelligent body of our fellow-citizens—and there are no more intelligent or worthy citizens of this United States than those known as the Quakers—ask for a thing of this kind in a bill like this, it should be granted. Certainly, if it be their opinion that when they go to war they are participating in a species of murder, they should not be forced to do so. Therefore, upon that hypothesis, the amendment should be adopted. If, on the contrary, it does not compel them to do so, then the amendment can do no harm. In either event, it would be without injury, meeting the wishes of one of the very large and one of the very best elements of the citizenship of this republic.

I hope the amendment will be accepted; and if it is not accepted, of course I shall want a vote upon it.

Mr. Bate: Mr. President, if I understand the purport of this whole bill, it does not force anybody into the military service.

Mr. Beveridge: No.

Mr. Bate: This bill, as I understand it, does not compel anyone, whatever may be his age or his religious faith, to go into the military service. If I thought it did, I would be against this bill. I do not think so, but nevertheless I do not care to make objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. I think that we have precedents on that sort of legislation. I believe it is not an innovation upon existing legislation in regard to the militia. Certainly some of the States have so legislated. I think those sects having religious scruples against military service are generally excepted, and ought to be when no constitutional objection intervenes. I do not make any point about that, however, because I do not understand from this bill that there is anything which constrains or forces anyone, even a militiaman, to go into the army.

Provided, That nothing in this Act shall be construed to require or compel any member of any religious organization whose creed forbids its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein, in accordance with the creed of said religious organization, to serve in the militia or any other armed or volunteer force under the jurisdiction and authority of the United States.

Mr. Beveridge: No; the Senator is right about that.

Mr. Quarles: Mr. President, I certainly hope that the amendment will not be adopted, because it is absolutely unnecessary and is not germane, and would constitute defective legislation. There is nothing compulsory connected with the militia system; but the organization of the militia is left entirely to the States. Each State can regulate for itself the membership of the militia. We do not assume to do that here at all. In none of the States is there any provision that is at all coercive. The membership of the militia in every State is purely voluntary. I cannot see why we ought to attach to the bill this clause, wholly unnecessary and impertinent as it is, no matter how worthy the people may be to whom the amendment refers.

Mr. Beveridge: There is a further consideration with reference to this amendment, a consideration entertained in the minds of this very large and very respectable body of our fellow-citizens. They intend to present their opinions to the various State Legislatures when the question of militia legislation comes up, and there is a very distinct fear on their part that this bill, having the scope that it has, will have influence upon State legislation, and that this amendment will take off that influence from the State Legislatures and leave them perfectly free.

Mr. President, I will not argue with the Senator whether or not that fear and apprehension is well founded. I state merely that it is worthy of note and not to be neglected when it comes from a body of citizens as large and as singularly intelligent as are the Quakers, the Dunkards, and other people like them in the United States. They are a people who read, a people who think, and a people who constitute a very valuable element of our citizenship. Therefore I say that their opinions upon a subject of this kind are in themselves entitled to consideration and weight.

Since it is admitted on all hands that the amendment presented here can do no possible harm, and since the only objection urged against it is that perhaps it is surplusage, I do not see why it is that there is any objection to giving our concurrence to the clearly-defined objection of this very large and exceedingly and unusually intelligent body of our fellow-citizens that they would be injured, both directly and indirectly, by the bill as it now stands.

I have nothing further to say upon the amendment, though I shall surely call for a vote upon it if it be not accepted by the committee.

Mr. Hoar: Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Wisconsin does not give quite sufficient force to the language of the bill. I make the suggestion to him with great deference, because I am not, myself, as familiar with it as I ought to be before undertaking to discuss it, for my attention has been called to other matters which are pending. But, if I understand it, the first section of the bill describes who are to be the militia:

States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, etc."

All of those are now members of the militia by law. Whether a man so desires or not, it is proposed to make him a soldier by the law—the word "militia" means "soldiery," as I understand it—and without exception, if a man be within the two ages named in the bill, unless he be under the age of 18 or over the other limit, which is 45 years, he is a member of the militia. So a Quaker who is conscientiously opposed to war, is made by law a soldier against his will. It seems to me we should not do that unless we wish to constrain a man against his conscience.

Besides that, the second section provides that certain persons shall be exempt from military service. You do not refrain from making that exemption by the fact that nobody is called upon for military duty, unless he has a mind to enter the service. The section exempts various executive and judicial officers, persons in the military and naval service, custom-house officers, clerks, postmasters, persons employed in the transportation of the mail, and other public officers. It also exempts members of the two Houses of Congress. Why should we put in the provision offered by the Senator from Indiana? We put in all the other cases of the men defined by the lawmaking power as persons who ought to be exempted?

It does seem to me that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is germane and that it is proper, unless we mean to make by law all these men soldiers against their conscience.

Mr. Quarles: Mr. President, the first clause of the bill, to which the distinguished Senator has referred, has not been at all changed. That is not new phraseology in this bill. It is the exact phraseology used in the original act of 1792, which has been upon our statute book ever since. I look upon it simply as a general definition in the most broad and general sense of what shall constitute the militia.

Mr. Hoar: May I ask the Senator whether in those laws there was not some exemption of the character now proposed?

Mr. Quarles: No; I think not.

Mr. Hoar: I have been so informed, though I am not sure.

Mr. Quarles: I think not.

Mr. Aldrich: Mr. President, certain intelligent Quakers in my own State have called my attention to this matter. They have told me that all the early militia acts did contain an exemption of this character, and they supposed a similar provision not being in this bill was simply an oversight on the part of the framers of it.

Mr. Quarles: Mr. President, let us see whether we would have any jurisdiction to pass upon that question in its entirety. I suppose that the organization of the militia is a matter which pertains peculiarly to each State. It is a State force, not a Federal force until it has been called out, of course, in the manner indicated by the Constitution.

The exemptions that are contained in section 2 relate to Federal employees. We are protecting Federal employees against any act or regulation of the States which might take them away from their employment. That is clearly within our jurisdiction; but can we go beyond that? Can we dictate to the State of Massachusetts how she shall organize her own militia at home? I apprehend not, and I apprehend it will be found that the laws exempting Quakers and other religious persons to which reference is made, are in the laws of the several States, and that they have never found any place in the Federal laws since 1792.

Mr. Hoar: May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. Quarles: Certainly.

Mr. Hoar: If that be true, why is it that in the very first line of the bill there is a provision as to what the militia shall consist of?

Mr. Quarles: That is simply following the old act.

Mr. Hoar: I know; but I now understand the Senator having departed from that reason is giving another; that is, that we should not make this exception because the States are to determine who shall constitute the militia, and it is not for us to do it. I ask him, then, if that be the purpose, why it is that he does undertake to determine by act of Congress who shall constitute the militia by saying that the militia shall consist of so and so, and not leave it to the States?

RESPECTABLE SALOONS.

Advocates of the dispensary, a Government control system of saloons, have much to say of the desirability of closing "vile dens," and opening "respectable" saloons, hoping thereby to diminish intemperance. But the record of all such movements shows that to close the "dens" and open the "fairly respectable" saloon rather increases than diminishes the evil of intemperance. The change is simply a transition from odious dram drinking to "respectable" bottle drinking.

The odium of the ordinary saloon has been a restraint to many, but the dispensary or Gothenburg plan has no such restraining features, and hence the consumption will constantly increase.

Take either the dispensaries in South Carolina, or the Gothenburg shops in Sweden, and you find that in neither case is the consumption of liquor diminishing.

If, then, the closing of the "dens" and the opening of the "fairly respectable" saloons does not diminish the consumption, but rather increases it, where is the gain, unless it be in the fact that communities share in the financial profits?

Of this feature much is made by the advocates of these systems, and by those who are now in some of the States advocating the "public trust" system, a first cousin to the Gothenburg system.

In Scotland several such trusts or saloons have been established because of the supposed benefits the inhabitants would receive in grants to libraries, public parks, city improvements, etc.

The financial results of last year's working of three of these experiments have just been published. The figures are interesting and instructive. They clearly establish that whatever the "new public house" accomplishes it in no way reduces the amount of drink sold. The amount of so-called profit free for distribution in Kelty, Cowdenbeath and Hill-of-Beath is $5,875, but to make this fund $39,750 was spent on drink. On financial grounds the bargain is a poor one, and what an amount of suffering, shame, misery, sin, might have been prevented if the $33,875 worse than wasted had been directed into right channels. At what an enormous cost to mortality have the trifling benefits been secured to these villages.

If there is to be dram drinking let it be done under the odious cover of a saloon or "tiger," and do not usurp the devil's throne because we can make that throne look more decent. Its very decency will make it the more dangerous. Too often is the devil's cake so sugar-cruised that even church people are found nibbling at it.

Drive him back, and tell him that if he must drink it must be on his own ground and under his own flag. That we make no compromise with him; the fight is to a finish. A finish in which he receives the last uncompromising blow.—"National Temperance Advocate."

INSANITY FROM ALCOHOL.

Dr. Henry P. Stearns, superintendent of the Retreat for the Insane at Hartford, Conn., has made the seventy-ninth annual report of that institution, from which we take the following extracts:

"You will further observe from the tables of statistics appended, that in no less than twenty-one of the admissions—that is, in more than seventeen per cent.—the insanity was thought to have been caused by the abuse of alcohol. This may be a higher per cent. of such cases than exists in some State institutions, but it corresponds quite accurately with our own history (seventy-nine years) in this respect.

"In fact, alcohol plays so important a role in the production of insanity and crime, especially in cities and large towns, that society should use every means to educate the rising generation as to the danger attending its use as a beverage.

"The effects of alcohol upon the elements of the nervous system are much greater before twenty years of age than afterward. The brain is more sensitive to the effects of all toxic influences during the period of adolescence, and young persons acquire habits of using both alcohol and tobacco much more readily than during later periods of life. When once formed during this period they are much more likely to become incorporated with the development of the system and thus become permanent. . . .

"The importance, therefore, that some effective measure be adopted, if those already in existence are not adequate, to have instruction given to the pupils of the public schools of the State regarding the nature and effects of alcohol when used as a beverage, can hardly be overestimated. Such a course should be continued if at the expense of less important subjects of study."

ATTACKS ON THE ANTI-CANTEEN LAW.

As we read the daily papers we see frequent evidence of the liquor dealers' efforts to restore the sale of liquor in the army canteen. Many of the statements made in opposition to the present law have been investigated and found to be without foundation.

General Chaffee has lately been reported as saying: "The W. C. T. U., backed and aided in every possible way by the saloon keepers of this country, secured the passage of the anti-canteen law."

This is but one illustration of the inaccurate and superficial way in which even men of distinction deal with this matter. One has only to read the proceedings of liquor dealers' conventions, or any of the influential liquor papers, to learn how ardently they are striving for the repeal of the law, while it is no secret that the liquor lobby in Washington has opposed the law in every possible way.

On First month 5th a bill was introduced in the House "To restore the sale of fermented malt beverages and light wines to soldiers on army transports and in post exchanges."

Hon. R. Wayne Parker, of Newark, N.J., who presented the bill, represents a district which has twenty-five breweries, with a capital of $12,000,000, and with an output of $8,326,000, and with 1,900 licensed saloons.

By the prompt action of Margaret Dye Ellis, of the W. C. T. U., and the Reform Bureau at Washington, a flood of protests against the bill at once began, and the chairman of the military committee, the Hon. J. A. T. Hull, received a flood of telegrams, letters and petitions from all over the country. On the 15th inst. the military committee passed a resolution deciding to take no action on the canteen question at this session.

In a recent number of the "Union Signal," Margaret Dye Ellis reported a characteristic interview on this subject, with the late Hon. Thomas B. Reed.

She writes: "I ventured to question him on other matters of national import, viz.: the repeal of the anti-canteen law, and the seeming desire on the part of the War Department and others high in army circles for a repeal of the law, and I asked what he would advise.

"'Madam,' he replied, 'hold the law.'

"'But, Mr. Reed, how can we hold the law with such odds against us?'

"'How did you get the law?'

"'We fought for it.'

"'Then, madam, hold it by the same means, but hold it.' This was declared with great earnestness."

Margaret Dye Ellis also writes: "Remember, we have two bills and very important they are, too, which if we but strive for, I believe will pass, viz.: To prohibit liquor selling in all Government buildings; to prohibit liquor selling in immigrant stations. 'A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether' will give us this victory, too. Do not relax your diligence for one moment."

After an interview with the President the same devoted worker was rejoiced by the appointment of five women inspectors at the port of New York. These women are to prevent the traffic in girls by meeting them on the vessels, making friends with them and saving them from the pitfalls which await them on landing.

We trust that all members of the Society of Friends will be faithful in using their influence with their representatives in Congress for the passage of the McCumber Bill, forbidding the sale of liquor in all Government buildings, and for the provisions in the Immigration Bill, prohibiting the sale of liquor at immigrant stations, and in the Capitol building.

SHALL IT BE HANGING OR IMPRISONMENT FOR LIFE?

The following letter has been sent by Josiah W. Leeds to the attorney who defended Albert West, convicted of killing a policeman at Chester, suggesting that the death sentence of said West be changed to life imprisonment. The appeal does not extenuate the crime, but brings forward the point that the Government's tax on the saloon keeper is virtually a licensing of the business, and it becomes in a measure amenable for the results:

"I have lately thought very seriously upon this aspect of crimes committed under the influence of drink, that not only does the State provide the places where the deadly drink is handed over, but even the United States Government claims its twenty-five dollars' tax or license for the same privilege. Without this participation, not a half—perhaps not a fourth—of the cases of homicide would occur. I was especially struck with this view of it upon reading the charge of Judge Raymond, lately appointed to the new judicial district of the United States Court in the Indian Territory. He drew the Grand Jury's attention to the fact that a very large percentage of all the overt crimes to come under their notice they would find to be due to strong drink, and so he charged them to make exhaustive inquiry as to every violation of the United States statutes against liquor selling, and to bring in an indictment against every offender.

"Does it not seem a singular anomaly, notwithstanding all this, that a twenty-five-dollar Government tax or license virtually sanctions the business? Now, on the strength of this, I don't like to intimate that the Government ought 'to be hanged,' yet it is clear to my mind that the crazed victims of drink purchased at shops where the Government license hangs behind the bar, ought not to have their lives cut off for the capital offense, but rather atone for the crime by a long term, even by life imprisonment."

Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the National Reform Bureau, at Washington, having received a copy of the above, made the following comment upon the Government's revenue derivable from the liquor business:

"We might have abolished it when first proposed, when Senator Henry Wilson denounced it, but the Churches did not say amen, and now it is bound in the bundle of life with our reckless pension system, and almost every pensioner and his friends would oppose abolition, as the two funds just balance for debit and credit. I think we might abolish it in prohibition districts by a strong agitation."

LESSON VII.

SECOND MONTH 15, 1903.

CHRISTIAN SELF-CONTROL.

1 Cor. 8: 4-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace.—Rom. 14: 19.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Second mo. 9.—Christian self-control. 1 Cor. 8: 4-13.
Third-day, Second mo. 10.—Abstain from evil. 1 Thess. 5: 14-23.
Fourth-day, Second mo. 11.—Not expedient. 1 Cor. 10: 14-23.
Fifth-day, Second mo. 12.—Be separate. 2 Cor. 6: 11-18.
Sixth-day, Second mo. 13.—Consideration for others. Luke 6: 27-36.
Seventh-day, Second mo. 14.—Burden bearing. Gal. 6: 1-10.
First-day, Second mo. 15.—The perfect pattern. 1 Jno. 3: 10-16.

The general surroundings of the church at Corinth were considered in the last lesson. Paul, it will be remembered, remained in Corinth eighteen months. He then left it to go to Jerusalem so as to be present at the Feast of Pentecost.

He then left Jerusalem, went to Antioch, and, after spending some time there, went on to Phrygia, Galatia and other parts of Asia Minor, reaching Ephesus in 54 or 55 A.D.; he remained there about three years. It was while he was at Ephesus that the Epistles to the Corinthians were written. The date of 1 Corinthians is probably 56 or 57 A.D., near the close of Paul's stay at Ephesus. It is evident that the epistle was written from Ephesus (1 Cor. 16: 8). This is not the first letter Paul had written to the church at Corinth. In 1 Cor. 5: 9 reference is made to an earlier epistle, which has not come down to us. In it he apparently had forbidden intercourse with immoral persons. His words appear to have been misunderstood—some reading them to mean that no intercourse of any kind should be had with such. This would have meant in Corinth that one should go into seclusion—leave “the world” altogether. While Paul did not mean this, what he did say opened the way for discussion, and the formation of factions. What Paul did mean, and what in this (our first) epistle he says, is, that impurity must not be tolerated within the church. The church at Corinth was placed in the midst of vice and luxury; many of its members were converts from heathenism, and had been brought up to look at many things in a very different way from those who had been educated as Jews; the influence of the later Greek philosophy, which was prevailing at that time, was by no means elevating—altogether the surroundings were by no means conducive to right Christian living. Besides this there were factions in the church itself. One can hardly imagine a more difficult situation for the apostle to meet. The key to it is love—Christian love and consideration for others.

The present lesson discusses some practical questions which confronted the Corinthian Christians, and which also, in essence at least, confront every Christian who lives in “the world.” No one can read these epistles carefully and not be thankful that “when the Christian Church was ‘pawing to get free’ from its natal day of heathenism, it found one strong hand to help it, one sure and balanced judgment to work out boldly and clearly the boundaries of right and wrong.”

1-3. One of the questions perplexing the Corinthian Christians was, whether it was lawful to eat food which had been offered to idols. If they did eat such food it might be held that they countenanced idolatry.

4. “We know that no idol is anything in the world.” R. V. An idol has no real place in the world. “And that there is no God but one.” R. V. There is only one God.

5, 6. “For even if indeed there are so-called gods, whether in heaven or upon earth,” etc. The apostle means that polytheism does not in this case concern the Christian, for to him there is only one God. As an idol is nothing, food offered to an idol can be nothing to the Christian so far as he himself is concerned.

7. “But not in all men is the knowledge [of the one God], but some, by the familiarity with idols until now eat as of a thing sacrificed to an idol, and their conscience being weak is defiled.” The weakness consists in the inability to discern between evil and matters of indifference. Eating such food to the weak brother is sin, though in itself there is nothing wrong in eating it.

8. Food will not bring us nearer to God; neither eating or not eating gives us any superiority. The heart is the thing—the life is the important matter.

9. The Christian has liberty so far as he himself is concerned, but he must consider his brother; he has not liberty to injure him in a matter where the question is not of absolute right and wrong. “Let your motto be forbearance, not privilege; and your watchword charity, not knowledge.”

10. A further reason for forbearance—the possibility of leading a weak (unenlightened) brother to sin against his conscience.

11. Read as in R. V., “For through thy knowledge [that the idol is nothing] he that is weak perisheth, the brother for whose sake Christ died.”

12. “Ye sin against Christ.” By injuring the weak brother; by injuring Christ’s cause, and misrepresenting His character.

13. “Wherefore, if meat maketh my brother to stumble, I will eat no flesh forevermore, that I make not my brother to stumble.” R. V. One of the most noble of the apostle’s many noble sentences; one where “he asserts the rights of Christian conscience above the claims of Christian liberty.” Where he states the great truth that we have liberty not to do as well as liberty to do. At the same time this principle may be carried to excess. At all times in the application of principles there must be discernment. Eph. 1: 17, 18; Col. 1: 9, 10.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. The application of the teaching of this lesson to Temperance is obvious. Even if a man thinks he is safe, he must have regard to others. Abstain, then, if not for your own sake, for the sake of others. There is no question as to the tendency of the use of intoxicating liquors; “they are dangerous to all, and deadly to many.”

2. Total abstinence is the only safe course to follow. Every one has liberty to be a total abstainer, and it is the best and only safe position to take.

TOPIC FOR SECOND MONTH FIFTEENTH.

LESSONS FROM BENHADAD’S DEFEAT.

1 Kings 20: 12-20. (Temperance.)

Second-day, Second mo. 9.—Keep away from temptation. Prov. 23: 20, 21.

Third-day, Second mo. 10.—Heed the scriptures. Eph. 5: 15-21.

Fourth-day, Second mo. 11.—What drink does. Prov. 23: 29-32.

Fifth-day, Second mo. 12.—The folly of beginning. Prov. 20: 1-3.

Sixth-day, Second mo. 13.—The punishment it brings. Matt. 24: 49-51.

Seventh-day, Second mo. 14.—The eternity it holds out. 1 Cor. 6: 9-11.

No victory that Benhadad’s armies might have won over Ahab could have made him a conqueror. Will must vanquish appetite before he could be master even in the realm of self. Exorbitant demands and intemperate boasting are excesses flowing naturally from unrestrained winebibbing. The judgment is one of the first captives that King Alcohol chains to his chariot wheels, and the power to carry even moderate plans to their fulfillment is quick to follow, to say nothing of the ability to accomplish great things.

“It is not for kings to drink wine” was the teaching of the mother of King Lemuel; and where every man rules—or should rule—not one can afford to sacrifice his best power for the sake of a self-indulgence which is self-destruction.

The president of a great railway system tells of going, soon after his election, to an agent of the Pullman Company and asking for some of its palatial cars for use on his road. The reply was that the Pullman Company had no cars to be wrecked. Conditions justified the reply, and the president set himself to study the causes. He found that at terminals and division points saloons had sprung up about the stations and roundhouses, and in these the crews, from conductor and engineer, down through the list, were in the habit of spending their time between runs or while waiting for their trains to be made up. He went before his directors with the proposition that, as a matter of business investment, they should take the company's money and provide and maintain buildings for the Railroad Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association at these points, so that the men might find light and warmth and welcome where they would not also find blurred sight and confused hearing and unsteady nerves. A few years of this policy brought his road to a standing with the best. Pullman cars and the traveling public went over its rails in safety. And, more than material safety, there was opportunity and helpfulness over against blight and despair for the employees, many of whom were glad to get away from the saloon if only there was somewhere for them to go and feel at home. No lesson from a defeat is complete until it is found how a recurrence may be avoided, and here was a way.

The citadel is the man's own will, but the outposts are in the hands of society, employers, fellow citizens, the Church. Perhaps we think they are in the hands of the politicians, but the politicians are in the hands of society, if society will have it so. Shall the man be flanked and beset by snares and death-traps, or shall he be surrounded by mountains of defense and the walls of Zion?

"A man is found in an alley, dead from poison. Was it alcoholic poisoning or of some other kind? We must investigate, for if it was of some other kind the guilty wretch who administered it must be run down and punished. But if it was alcoholic poisoning, nothing remains to be said, for within a square of where the victim lies are half a dozen such places, legalized by the votes of the good citizens to dispense just such drink of death."

Educational.

[We publish a letter from Harriet Green, also one from William M. Perry, which give us recent reports from two of our Colleges. The spiritual condition among the students is a source of encouragement and speaks well for higher educational work among Friends.]

Last week it was our privilege to spend parts of three days at Earlham, having meetings with the students each evening, Sophia M. Fry having previously attended their Sabbath morning service.

We had several happy visits to the students in their rooms, and from them in the "guest room," and also attended one of a course of lectures on "The Life of Christ," in which the class discussed some difficult questions with much reverent interest and grasp of the subject.

Our evening meetings with the students were arranged for by the Y. M. and Y. W. Christian Associations. The natural way in which the students turned from the fun and adventure of sleigh rides to worship, and their confession of allegiance to Christ, were delightful. The spiritual tone and life of the students is much higher than one usually finds in a college; indeed, I have never been in any educational institution where the young people themselves have the work for God so near their own hearts, and where everything was so well arranged by the Christian students, that every one coming in must come under the highest and best influence. I came away thankful for Earlham. She is surely a power for God and righteousness as her bright young people leave for their work in the world and the Church.

Allen Jay is now engaged in trying to collect some $12,000 needed before Fifth month 1st, if F. White's gift toward the endowment fund is secured.

Friends:

The history of Friends in Nebraska dates back only a few years. There are now four or five quarterly meetings. As is usual, the strongest meetings are at those points where there are special school advantages, more especially where there are denominational schools. At Central City, Neb., is located Nebraska Central College, where there is also located perhaps the strongest Friends' meeting in the State. The College is now in its fourth year, under the present management of the Friends. I take the following from one of the Central City papers:

"Educational system and institutions to some extent show the character of a community. They also are mighty factors in forming such character, hence their importance; and an educational institution which aims at the all-round development of any community stands high in the scale of importance. Such is Nebraska Central College. This College is under the control of Friends, sometimes called Quakers. . .

"Already a transaction had been authorized which led to the acquirement of the building known as Nebraska Central College. This structure was built at a cost of $17,000. It, with twenty-seven acres of ground, was deeded to the association free from encumbrance.

"The College is situated in a suburban community, two miles from the business portion of the town. Such a location is favorable for student life; and this thought accords with the desire and purpose that the general influence of the institution and its surroundings be conducive to the well-being of those under its care. It is not enough simply to provide good instruction for the class room. Provision should be made for the body as well as for the mind, and for the social and moral as well as for the mental nature.

Systematic physical culture, properly ordered social gatherings, Christian influence within and without school, all have their part in the development of manhood and womanhood."

We have just closed a revival meeting of about ten evening sessions at the College. During these meetings the president and faculty were present at every session, with the exception of the president's absence from one session. They were all very active in personal work, both in the audience and at the altar services.

All the students in the College, with the exception of one girl and three boys, who were not already Christians professed conversion during the meeting.

The Friends have a strong and growing meeting at Central City. This is a beautiful little western city in the Platt Valley, with no saloons and six churches besides the Friends. Friends who desire to better their location, for both church and college advantages, will do well in locating at Central City.

Farm lands have doubled in prices in the last few years. Prices are now ranging from $30 to $50 per acre.

The College here, being the youngest Friends' College in America, has not a large endowment back of it, but we hope soon to see steps taken to put the College on a strong financial basis, for there is certainly great work and a bright outlook for the Friends in Nebraska.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

We are glad to state that through the kindness of our friends we have been able to arrange for an ample supply of all the back numbers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND which were asked for in the issue of the 22d ult.

Darwin Gidley, of Hargrave, Kansas, assisted in a revival effort in La Crosse, Kansas, a few days near the close of last month.

Wilmington Friends did a good work at Christmas time sending out comfortable baskets of food to forty families, besides much warm clothing.

Plainfield Monthly Meeting received nine new members at its last session, eight by request and one by letter from the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Susie Cox, who has labored for some time in Sterling Quarterly Meeting, Kansas, is planning to locate permanently within the limits of the meeting.

Albert Peele, superintendent of evangelistic work in North Carolina Yearly Meeting, is kept busy in attending the quarterly meetings and organizing the work.

William P. Angell, of Muncie, attended the meeting at Portland, Ind., First month 18th, where was a fairly good attendance and a very satisfactory meeting was held.

Harriet Green, of London, England, led the services at Friends' Meeting, Indianapolis, Ind., on First-day, the 25th ult. Her teaching was very clear and helpful.

Griffith Wright, after visiting a number of meetings and many families in Kansas Yearly Meeting, is now engaged in revival work in his home field in Western Yearly Meeting.

S. Edgar Williams, of Fountain City, Ind., recently paid a hurried visit to Greensboro, N. C., and Guilford College, with a view to locating in North Carolina for religious service.

Irena Hunnicutt, from Lewisville, Ind., has just closed a series of meeting at Cherry Grove, Ind. Through her ministry the meeting was awakened to a lively sense of its real needs and much good was done.

A. Leonidas Ellis, who has served as clerk of Kokomo Quarterly Meeting, Ind., for nearly six years, has moved with his family to Lynn, Ind. His old home meeting, New Hope, thus loses an elder and faithful worker.

The monthly meeting at Knightstown, Ind., held 24th ult., was favored with the presence of Harriet Green and Minnie Bassett. Good reports come from Harry Keates, who is laboring in the meeting in a revival effort.

Mahlon and Martha Lindley are doing a good work at the Blue Ridge Mission, under the care of North Carolina Yearly Meeting. Ora H. Jinnett and Sallie Marshburn are teaching in the mission, and all these Friends are much appreciated in their work.

The Founder's Lecture of Bryn Mawr College for this year was given before a very large audience in the chapel the evening of the 23d ult. by Prof. Josiah Royce, of Harvard University. He chose as his subject for the occasion "George Fox as a Mystic."

On First-day, 25th ult., Lewis Stout preached a powerful sermon in Plainfield Meeting, Indiana, on the "Grace of Giving," which was followed by a cash collection of $301 to meet the indebtedness on the meeting house. The meeting will be clear of debt in a few days.

Portland, Ind., Monthly Meeting was held First month 24th; a better attendance than usual. Representatives were appointed to attend the quarterly meeting; reports on the State of Society were received from most of the local meetings. A committee was appointed to consider the appointment of elders.

A united Christian effort for the advancement of the kingdom of God has recently been wrought out in a substantial way at Newberg, Oregon. Meetings were held alternately at the Friends' Meeting House and Methodist church. A Baptist minister took the leading part in the work, and the result was a great spiritual uplift.

The total membership of Philadelphia Monthly Meeting for the Western District (Twelfth Street) is 768. This is a gain of 9 for the year, and a gain of 40 in the last five years. There have been only 4 births against 16 deaths. Eighteen have been received by request. There has been a steady decrease in the number of children of school age. In 1890 there were 136 reported, and last year only 98.

Friends in Chicago are taking an active interest in the local auxiliary of the American Peace Society, which has recently been organized, with headquarters at 175 Dearborn Street. The society held its first meeting Twelfth month 21st, at which Samuel M. Jones, Mayor of Toledo, Ohio, was the principal speaker. Several denominations are represented in its membership, and its outlook for the future is very promising.

Nebraska Central College has experienced a revival. A series of meetings was begun on the 13th ult., conducted by Wm. M. Perry, and the Lord signally and abundantly blessed the effort. Teachers were interested in behalf of students. Students prayed for and labored with fellow-students, friends and patrons gave encouragement and help. The meetings closed on the evening of the 21st, with only four students who had not confessed Christ.

The Committee on Legislation of the Five Years Meeting has organized and appointed James Wood, of Mt. Kisco, New York, as chairman, and S. Edgar Nicholson, 116 West Mulberry Street, Baltimore, Md., as secretary.

David Tatum visited Lake City, Fla., on the 20th inst., and in the evening lectured on temperance at the Presbyterian Church. On account of rain the audience was very small, but this did not lessen his enthusiasm or prevent him from delivering a most excellent lecture. From Lake City he goes to points south. He is doing a noble work, and at an age, too—over fourscore years—when most men have ceased to do work which requires so much traveling.

On the 22d ult. the Friends of Windham, Maine, observed the one hundredth anniversary of the setting up of their monthly meeting. An all-day session was held, with dinner served in the house. Alfred T. Ware delivered an address on "The Friends One Hundred Years Ago." Daniel Maxfield, C. A. Nichols, J. H. Hall, Anna F. Hall and others gave historical sketches. Lucy A. Snow and Phebe Cobb Dole had poems for the occasion. It was well attended and a very enjoyable occasion.

Minneapolis, Minn., Quarterly Meeting was held the 24th ult., at 7.45 p.m., instead of 11 a.m., as heretofore, thus giving opportunity for business men to attend, and a much larger number were present than at any time for several years past. Ellison R. Purdy, of Marshalltown, Ia., was in attendance and spoke in the quarterly meeting, and also in the meetings on First-day. The meetings were unusually well attended, and a deep interest was manifested by all. E. R. Purdy led the Y. P. S. C. E. meeting at 6.30 p.m.

The meeting house at Monkton Ridge, Vt., which has been standing for more than twenty years, is now receiving some repairs. Through the efforts of Anna Rugg the women of the neighborhood have been meeting one day each week to work on new cushions for the seats. The occasions afford opportunity for social intercourse, and are enjoyed by all. Leverett J. Rugg continues to labor in the meeting, and much unity exists. The prayer meeting is held at private houses during the winter season. There has been one conversion this year.

The meeting at Caloma, Ind., is enjoying an uplift, the result of a series of meetings held last month. The prominent workers in the meeting were Cyrus Jones, the resident minister; L. B. Woodard, the quarterly meeting superintendent, and David Commons, of Tangier, Ind. Fifteen persons gave their testimony to having received definite blessing during the revival season. Some have united with Friends. There is a promising class of young people in the meeting who are taking up the work and making themselves useful in several lines of church activity.

The Friends' Academy at Augusta, Davie County, N. C., and the Friends of that neighborhood, have had a great uplift in a series of meetings, held there recently by David E. Sampson, of East Bend, N. C., assisted by Eli Reece, of High Point. In all, fifteen sessions were held, and several were converted and strengthened in their Christian lives. Eight requested membership with Friends. David E. Sampson attends this meeting once a month. Eunice Darden has charge of Augusta Academy, and her services are much appreciated both in the school and meeting.

The action of the Executive Board of the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia in making arrangements for rebuilding the Girls' School at Tokio was approved by the Association at its annual meeting on the 22d instant. Through the efforts of the former chairman of the Finance Committee, Asa S. Wing, and the generosity of a few earnest Friends, the major part of the $7,500 which is needed for the enterprise has already been procured. Carolina Wood spoke very enthusiastically before the meeting encouraging Friends to visit the fields of missionary effort and thus to be living epistles of love for the encouragement of the missionaries and the inspiration of the home meetings.

The second volume of Sarah P. Morrison's series, "Among Ourselves," is entitled "Catherine and Her Surroundings," and covers the family history between 1816 and 1832, dealing chiefly with Catherine Morris's life at Westtown and the letters that her absence from home called out from her family, then living at Salem, Ind. She was one of the third thousand to enter the boarding school. This book, like the first of the series, is full of letters and reminiscences that give an intimate picture of Friendly life a century ago, especially in Indiana. Thus the series is of interest to those outside the family whose history is here related. The illustrations are of particular value, among those in the present volume being Marcus Mote's Indiana Yearly Meeting in 1844, which includes such figures as Elijah Coffin and Jeremiah Hubbard, and two of Westtown, one of 1840 and the other a late photograph. The little book is a useful contribution to Quaker annals. It may be procured of the author at Richmond, Ind.

BORN.

HULL.—At Gasport, N. Y., First month 17th, 1903, to John C. and Laura H. Hull, a son.

DIED.

COX.—At the home of James Cox, near Richland, Iowa, First month 14th, 1903, Elizabeth Jane Cox, wife of Nathan Cox (deceased), in her 77th year. She was a birthright Friend and an active Christian.

FLETCHER.—At the home of her daughter, Mary E. Patton, at St. Joseph, Champaign County, Ill., First month 11th, 1903, Lydia Fletcher, the mother of Wm. P. Haworth, in her 88th year. She was a lifelong member of Friends, to whom she was ever closely attached, and occupied the station of an elder at the time of her death. The funeral services were held in the Friends' Meeting House at Ridge farm, in which section of the country she had resided for over seventy-two years.

GIFFORD.—At the home of her son-in-law, Herbert A. Pratt, in Princeton, Mass., Twelfth month 13th, 1902, Susan A. Gifford, widow of Samuel Gifford, aged 76 years, a member and minister in Uxbridge Monthly Meeting of Friends, Massachusetts. In 1873 she located in Worcester, Mass., immediately identified herself with the temperance movement, and was chosen president of the first local W. C. T. U. She was an active organizer in her home county, the first president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., and one of the first vice-presidents of the National Union.

HINSHAW.—First month 22d, 1903, Maria Hackett Hinshaw, wife of Garner Hinshaw, aged 66 years. She was for many years a consistent and faithful member of Wilmington, Ohio, Friends' Meeting, and was deeply interested in all its concerns.

PURINTON.—At his home in East Farnham, Province of Quebec, Canada, First month 21st, 1903, William C. Purinton, aged 80 years. He was for many years a member of Farnham Monthly Meeting.

SMILEY.—At his winter home, Redlands, Cal., Twelfth month 25th, 1902, Alfred H. Smiley, in his 75th year. He was a native of Maine; later a graduate and tutor at Haverford College; spent some years in Oskaloosa, Iowa; then taught in Friends' School, Providence, R. I., and latterly was engaged in business at Mohonk Lake and Minnewaska, N. Y.

WILBER.—At the home of her daughter, Lavina Briant, Le Ray, Jefferson County, N. Y., Twelfth month 14th, 1902, Margaret Wilber, in her 80th year. She was converted in early life and united with Friends at Evans Mills, where she ever remained a member. Her home for forty years was near the meeting house in Le Ray, and was a quiet, restful place, where Friends were always welcome. For a number of years she was a recorded minister and spoke as occasion offered always in the demonstration and power of the Spirit.

THE SONG AND THE DEED.

There was never a song that was sung by thee,
But a sweeter one was meant to be.

There was never a deed that was grandly done,
But a greater was meant by some earnest one.

For the sweetest voice can never impart
The song that trembles within the heart.

And the brain and hand can never quite do
The thing that the soul has fondly in view.

And hence are the tears and the burden of pain,
For the shining goals are never to gain.

And the real song is ne'er heard by man, Nor the work ever done for which we plan.

But enough that a God can hear and see
The song and the deed that were meant to be!

—Benjamin R. Bulkeley.

An estimate of the water-power used for generating electricity has been made by a German engineer. Germany and Austria thus utilize 180,000 horse-power; Switzerland, about 160,000; Sweden, 200,000, and the United States, 400,000. The total available power in Sweden is placed at 2,000,000 horse-power; that of France, at 10,000,000; that of Germany, Austria, Switzerland and Italy together, at 10,000,000, while in the United States Niagara alone could furnish 10,000,000.

FED THE DOCTOR.

How He Made Use of Food.

Sometimes it is the doctor himself who finds it wise to quit the medicines and cure himself by food.

"In looking around for a concentrated palatable prepared food I got hold of Grape-Nuts, and immediately began using it four times a day, exclusively for breakfast with milk; for luncheon and dinner as dessert, and a cup on retiring," says a physician of Mt. Zion, Ill.

"I had had nervous dyspepsia for over a year. My normal weight is 140 pounds, but I had been steadily losing flesh until a month ago I only weighed 122 pounds. I concluded it was time to throw 'physic to the dogs' in my case. Twenty-four hours after starting the Grape-Nuts regime the fullness and distress after eating had ceased. The heart-burn, water-brash, palpitation of the heart and other symptoms that had reminded me for over a year that I had a stomach, soon disappeared, and I can now eat a square meal and feel good afterwards.

"I weighed yesterday, and was surprised to find that I had gained 18 pounds in a month, and the end is not yet.

"The nervous symptoms have entirely disappeared, and I am stronger than I have been for two years. I thank you for placing Grape-Nuts at the disposal of those suffering with nervous dyspepsia." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

An efficient football coach declares that the Penn College (Iowa) boys are "too ethical to play a good game of football—too afraid of hurting somebody." They may be too ethical to win at the jeopardy of the "life and limb" of their fellows, but the criticism reveals a humanity that has taken root down into the deeper and better stratum of their nature that prevents them from becoming oblivious to the sacred relations of fellow to fellow.—"Western Work."

The mysterious "sleeping sickness" of West Africa, which has been the subject of late scientific investigation, proves to be a form of meningitis, differing from cerebro-spinal meningitis in its chronic and almost invariably fatal character. It is classed with hydrophobia as one of the most deadly diseases known. It is communicated from person to person in some unknown way, beginning with slight listlessness, which passes into coma and then into death, its duration being from one to six months. Thus far it has been known only among negroes. It has depopulated large districts, however, and its spread is feared through the opening of African trade.

The physiological effects of working in compressed air have been studied during the placing of foundations for a lock in the Danube at Vienna. The work required nearly three years, and in this time 675 men were employed for an average of 553 hours under pressures of one to five atmospheres above the normal. Each working shift of four hours was followed by eight hours off duty. Included in the working time were the rests in the air-locks to become gradually accustomed to the pressure changes, from 5 to 35 minutes being necessary on entering and a longer period up to 20 minutes for each atmosphere on leaving. The results have led to the conclusion that carefully-selected men may work under pressures up to 75 pounds to the square inch without serious risk. Yet, of these men nearly one-half were obliged to go to the hospital, two dying and six being permanently injured, and it was found that sufferers from nasal catarrh, ear troubles or bad digestion were specially unfit for employment.

VERY FEW PEOPLE

Are Free from Some Form of Indigestion.

Very few people are free from some form of indigestion, but scarcely two will have the same symptoms.

Some suffer most directly after eating, bloating from gas in stomach and bowels, others have heartburn or sour risings, still others have palpitation of heart, headaches, sleeplessness, pains in chest and under shoulder blades, some have extreme nervousness, as in nervous dyspepsia.

But whatever the symptoms may be, the cause, in all cases of indigestion is the same, that is, the stomach for some reason fails to properly and promptly digest what is eaten.

This is the whole story of stomach troubles in a nutshell. The stomach must have rest and assistance, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets give it both by supplying those natural digestives which every weak stomach lacks, owing to the failure of the peptic glands in the stomach to secrete sufficient acid and pepsin to thoroughly digest and assimilate the food eaten.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or other wholesome food, and this claim has been proven by actual experiment, which anyone can perform for himself in the following manner: Cut a hard-boiled egg into very small pieces, as it would be if masticated; place the egg and two or three of the tablets in a bottle or jar containing warm water heated to 98 degrees (the temperature of the body) and keep it at this temperature for three and one-half hours, at the end of which time the egg will be as completely digested as it would have been in the healthy stomach of a hungry boy.

The point of this experiment is that what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do to the egg in the bottle it will do to the egg or meat in the stomach, and nothing else will rest and invigorate the stomach so safely and effectually. Even a little child can take Stuart's Tablets with safety and benefit if its digestion is weak and the thousands of cures accomplished by their regular daily use are easily explained when it is understood that they are composed of vegetable essences, aseptic, pepsin, diastase and Golden Seal, which mingle with the food and digest it thoroughly, giving the overworked stomach a chance to recuperate.

Dieting never cures dyspepsia, neither do pills and cathartic medicines, which simply irritate and inflame the intestines.

When enough food is eaten and promptly digested there will be no constipation, nor in fact will there be disease of any kind because good digestion means good health in every organ.

The merit and success of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are world-wide and they are sold at the moderate price of 50 cents for full-sized package in every drug store in the United States and Canada, as well as in Europe.

CUDDLEDOWNTOWN.

Cuddledowntown is near Cradleville,
Where the sand men pitch their tents,
In Drowsyland,
You understand,
In the State of Innocence.
'Tis right by the source of the River of Life,
Which the Grandma Storks watch over,
While honey-bug bees,
'Neath funny big trees,
Croon lullabies in sweet clover.

'Tis a wondrous village, this Cuddledowntown,
For its people are all sleepers,
And never a one,
From dark till dawn,
Has ever a use for peepers,
They harness gold butterflies to sunbeams—
Play horse with them a-screaming,
While never a mite,
Throughout the night,
E'er dreams that he's a-dreaming.

In Cuddledowntown there are choo-choo cars

In all the beautiful streets,
And round bald heads
And curly heads,
Are the engineers one meets;
From Piggybacktown to Pattycakeville
These cars run hissing, screeching,
While wonderful toys
For girls and boys
Can always be had by reaching.

Oh, Cuddledowntown is a Village of Dreams,
Where little tired legs find rest;
'Tis in God's hand,
'Tis Holy Land,
Not far from Mother's breast.
And many a weary grown-up man,
With sad soul, heavy, aching,
Could he lie down,
In this sweet town,
Might keep his heart from breaking.
—Joe Kerr.

"It is necessary to hope, though hope should be deluded, for hope itself is happiness, and its frustrations, however frequent, are yet less dreadful than its extinction."—Johnson.

Trials are profitable.

The rough diamond cried out under the blow of the lapidary: "I am content, let me alone."

But the artisan said, as he struck another blow:

"There is the making of a glorious thing in thee."

"But every blow pierces my heart!"

"Ay; but after a little it shall work for thee a far more exceeding weight of glory."

"I cannot understand," as blow fell upon blow, "why I should suffer in this way."

"Wait; what thou knowest not now, thou shalt know hereafter."

And out of all this came the famous Koh-i-noor to sparkle in the monarch's crown.—David J. Burrell.

SOME TIME.

Last night, my darling, as you slept
I thought I heard you sigh,
And to your little crib I crept,
And watched a space thereby;
And when I stooped and kissed your brow,

For oh! I love you so—
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you shall know.

Some time when, in a darkened place,
Where others come to weep,
Your eyes shall look upon a face
Calm in eternal sleep;
The voiceless lips, the wrinkled brow,
The patient smile shall show—
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you shall know.

Look backward then into the years,
And see me here to-night;
See, oh, my darling! how my tears
Are falling as I write;
And feel once more upon your brow
The kiss of long ago—
You are too young to know it now,
But some time you shall know.

The venerable Senator Pettus, of Alabama, remarks: "The secret of living long is to work. I am eighty-one, and happy and healthy as a boy. I notice that all of my neighbors who got rich and retired are all dead. I never got rich, and I never retired. I tell you, young man, the most fatal disease I know of is to quit work. It kills every time. Keep working and you'll keep alive."—"Boston Herald."

PENN MUTUAL MANAGEMENT.

The Key-note to Success! Its 55th Year Greatest!

Gains in Income, Assets, Insurance, Surplus. A Purely Mutual Organization controlled by its members.

The fifty-fifth annual report of the Penn Mutual is in conspicuous evidence in the newspapers, and invites the consideration of more than 110,000 members. Beginning in a small way, the growth of the company has been by slow and steady accretion, and to-day it ranks among the largest and safest institutions. What it gains it holds. Progress is always forward, and while some years it may gain more than others, the records show that each has been a substantial growth upon the preceding one.

Desiring some general information, a reporter sought an interview with Harry F. West, who has presided over the destinies of the company since July, 1897. Being questioned about the work of last year he said, in part: "Yes, it was our fullest, largest and best. We insured on our various plans 29,729 men and women, to the amount of $69,632,777, running ahead of the prior year something over $7,000,000."

"To what or whom do you attribute it?"

"There were several factors in it. We think our various plans of insurance are unsurpassed anywhere. Their great variety makes it possible to fit the applicant with just the variety which he needs. He can exercise a wide choice, and is not compelled to accept something which only partially meets the situation."

"What about your agency corps?"

"The finest in the world! Many of them have grown up with the institution; they know it through and through; their interests are centered here; they know our contracts with them are as inviolable as our policies of insurance; they have knowledge as the basis of their energy and enthusiasm."

"How was your mortality last year?"

"Highly favorable. We expected a mortality of about $3,834,655; we incurred $2,602,945.73, or, as near as may be, 68 per cent. of the tabular. For a series of years the average of the company has been about 73 per cent. of the expected. I recall that in 1901 the death losses rose to something like 82 per cent., and such variations are to be expected from unusual causes. The gains of surplus from this source have been very considerable. In six years, 1896 to 1901, inclusive, our mortality was so much less than the tabular that we saved over $4,000,000 to our policy-holders. Last year, as said, the saving was $1,231,709.27. A great deal of stress is properly laid on medical selection. I take it as a correct principle that no man should be admitted to a mutual organization unless he presents in his person, surroundings, etc., the strong probability that he will live out the average life of men of his years. Billions of life insurance could be written if the companies were careless enough to accept at regular rates invalids or persons who through peculiar occupation, heredity, etc., are unlikely to reach the expectation of life. We are envious of our record in this regard. Having said this much, I ought to say that it is largely due to the medical department, and also to the influence of our agents, who, as honorable men, may be relied upon not to recommend doubtful or undesirable cases. There is such a thing as overdoing this, however, and carrying it so far that few persons, of any age or condition, could get insurance. The middle ground in this, as in other things, has proven to be the safe one. Take our Southern business, for instance. We have been writing in North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, etc., for many years a considerable volume of business, and our losses are just the average. This is mentioned because several companies have what they call a 'southern class' or charge an extra premium, adhering to methods which modern science and knowledge of life underwriting pronounce unjustifiable."

"Where is your business mainly done?"

"The Vice-President would be the best person to answer this question, for it is due to his careful and intelligent supervision that much of our success in agency work has been achieved. He tells me that we wrote in the State of Pennsylvania last year about $17,000,000, nearly half of which was secured right here in the City of Philadelphia, where our Quaker founders and Quaker managers are best known. Up in New England, where they are credited with exercising more discrimination in life insurance than elsewhere, our product is very large. New York State, I think, is next, one agency in which last year wrote over $4,000,000 of business. What do you think of Georgia, with its product of $6,763,511? I am told that this exceeds the record of production of any two companies in that State during 1902."

"Do you expect to keep on growing?"

"Why not? Believers in life insurance, of whom I am one, know that no greater benefit can be conferred upon the average man than to induce him to make through it a provision for his family or other dependent. To many under present conditions it seems to be the only way possible, and the returns from all the companies indicate the increasing popularity of the system as the years go by. More business was done last year than could have been effected in five years a decade ago. It is evidence of popular sentiment and appreciation, and naturally we shall expect to broaden our base and extend our usefulness from year to year. The conservative man always takes into account the general business conditions which may arise, and assuming that the present situation will remain throughout the year I do not know why the results of the year will not be equally satisfactory and perhaps greater."

Jamieson, Fausset & Brown's Bible Commentary

By Robert Jamieson, D.D., St. Paul's, Glasgow; Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., St. Cuthbert's, York, and David Brown, D.D., Professor of Theology, Aberdeen.

A complete commentary—critical, explanatory and practical—on the Old and New Testaments, 1380 pages, bound in cloth. Former Price, $7.50. Far in advance of the older works now in use, it is also the most practical, suggestive and scientific.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, Bishop M. E. Church: "It deserves a place on the table of every Bible student."

Critical and Expository Bible Cyclopædia

Compiled and written by Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., joint author of the Jamieson, Fausset and Brown Commentary. It contains 750 three-column pages; 600 illustrations. Regular Price, cloth binding, $5.00.

This great work is the result of seven years of labor by the author, contains three thousand seven hundred articles, and presents a completeness, conciseness and thoroughness, such as to make it a perfect Bible Cyclopædia.

J. W. Bashford, D.D., President Ohio Wesleyan University: "It is a most admirable aid. I hope ten thousand teachers will use it inside the next six months."

The Complete Works of Flavius Josephus

The Celebrated Jewish Historian, translated from the original Greek by William Whiston, A.M. Large Octavo, Cloth, 1056 pages, nearly 100 illustrations. Former Price, $4.00.

In this great work is contained the History and antiquities of the Jews, Destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; also Dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac.

Illustrated History of the Bible

By Rev. John Kitto, D.D., F.S.A. It contains 735 double-column pages, 220 engravings, printed from excellent plates, on good paper, strongly bound in cloth. Former Price, $4.50.

No modern writer has contributed more largely to enrich the biblical literature of our time, or to clothe with a fresh and living interest the main personages and incidents in Bible History than John Kitto in this magnificent work. Deeply interesting and instructive, and abounding in striking pictorial illustrations, it should have a place in every home. Over 100,000 copies of this popular work have been sold.

The Sunday School Times: "It is positively refreshing to read a life of the Saviour which is critical in the best and truest sense of the word, and is biblical at the same time."

Concise Cyclopædia of Religious Knowledge

Biblical, Biographical, Theological, Historical, Geographical and Practical. Edited by Rev. E. B. Sanford, D.D., assisted by a brilliant galaxy of Biblical Scholars and Divines. Complete in one volume. Nearly 1,000 pages, beautifully illustrated. Regular Price, cloth, $3.50.

To the seekers after knowledge this work will prove a surprising storehouse of information regarding Church History, Doctrines, Denominations, The Early Church, The Story of the Reformation, Young People's Societies, Theologians, Churches, etc.

Smith's Dictionary of the Bible

Edited by William Smith, LL.D., Classical Examiner of University of London. It formerly sold for $4.50.

Contains 1024 large octavo pages, printed on excellent paper, finely illustrated, and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. An indispensable aid to ministers, teachers, families, Sunday School Superintendents and Bible readers generally.

The Life and Epistles of Saint Paul

By the Rev. W. J. Conybeare, M.A., of Cambridge, and J. S. Howson, D.D., of Liverpool. Formerly sold for $4.50.

Contains 1014 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc. There is no work that will compare with this in giving a lifelike picture of the great apostle and the work which he did.

Cruden's Complete Concordance

By Alexander Cruden, M.A. Former Price, $1.50.

Contains 756 large octavo pages, clearly printed and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Scripture is the best interpreter of Scripture, and, next to the Bible, no volume is of greater value to the Bible student than Cruden's Concordance.

ALICE FREEMAN PALMER.

[Former president of Wellesley College, and a noble example of true
Christian living.]

*When fell, to-day, the word that she had gone,
Not this my thought: Here a bright journey ends,
Here rests a soul unresting; here, at last.
Here ends that earnest strength, that generous life—
For all her life was giving. Rather this
I said (after the first swift sorrowing pang):
Hence, on a new quest, starts an eager spirit—
No dread, no doubt, unhesitating forth
With asking eyes; pure as the bodiless souls
Whom poets vision near the central throne
Angelically ministrant to man;
So fares she forth with smiling, Godward face;
Nor should we grieve, but give eternal thanks—
Save that we mortal are, and needs must mourn.*

Events and Comments.

The Pennsylvania Railroad's famous twenty-hour train from New York to Chicago, upon which the company has spent at least a half million dollars, was abandoned last week in order that the railroad company might break the freight congestion which has crippled the road for months and relieve the coal famine in the East.

Among the streams of the United States the traffic on the Monongahela River is possibly the heaviest, owing to the prominence of the coal trade. For the twelve months ending with Twelfth month, 1902, the total coal traffic passing through Lock No. 3, in addition to the quantity mined in the first and second pools, was reported as amounting to 9,109,002 tons.

Mexican railways, at the instigation of the Mexican Government, have made a reduction in freight rates on wheat. The reduction amounts to more than one-third of the usual transportation rates. This is done because the country needs American wheat. Eight hundred and sixty-five carloads were sent to Mexico last year, which amount will probably be very much increased during the coming year.

As the proposed tribunal to settle the Alaskan boundary question is to be constituted, there will be three American commissioners and three British commissioners, of whom one at least will be an English jurist, while no more than two will be Canadians. The dispute is not one in which Englishmen feel any special interest; and it is not so much a British interest that is involved as a Canadian one.

A bill to authorize a resumption of the negotiations with Great Britain for the preservation of the Alaskan fur seals passed the House with practically no opposition. The bill also proposes to give the Secretary of the Treasury authority, if a modus vivendi is not concluded prior to the opening of the pelagic sealing season this year, to exterminate the seal herd on the Pribyloff Islands, except 10,000 females and 1,000 males.

The political world was startled last week by the conditional withdrawal of J. Edward Addicks from the famous Senatorial contest in Delaware. He has tried for 14 years to secure his election as United States Senator, during which he has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars, split the Republican party into factions, aroused bitter enmities, deadlocked Legislatures, and caused the State to remain for years unrepresented in the upper branch of Congress. It remains to be seen whether this withdrawal is sincere.

The contribution of live stock to railway traffic at the five leading stock markets of Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and St. Joseph during the past year amounted to 583,245 cars, compared with 622,352 cars in 1901 and 582,257 cars in 1900. It would thus seem that the high tide of live stock traffic was reached in 1901, and that the past year has returned to the level of activity indicated by the figures of 1900.

Hok Fong and Ham Ming, president and vice-president of the China Commercial Steamship Company, have made final arrangements for a new Oriental Steamship Line shortly to be inaugurated. President Hok Fong says that the first steamship of the line will leave Hong Kong Third month 27th, calling at Shanghai, Yokohama, Honolulu and Manzanillo, Mexico. On the return trip the steamer will call at San Francisco and thence direct to Yokohama.

The Pullman Palace Car Company announces that on Fourth month 1st an increase in wages will be paid to every man employed in the works. Nearly 8,000 men are affected, and more than $70,000 will be added to the company's pay roll each month. One thousand extra men will be employed to do the work performed in the ten-hour-day by the old force. Under the old schedule the men worked sixty hours a week. Under the new system they will work fifty-four hours a week and will have their Saturday afternoons off.

Prominent visitors from three States united with the citizens of Vicksburg last week in celebrating the opening of the Yazoo Canal, whereby Vicksburg's water front is restored. To remedy the conditions resulting from the cut-off in 1876, the Federal Government undertook to dredge a canal through six miles of forest, tapping the Yazoo River several miles above its mouth, and diverting the river through the bed of the Mississippi down past the front of Vicksburg. This engineering feat has been completed at a cost of nearly $2,000,000.

The arrangements by the American agent of the Cecil Rhodes scheme for the education of a certain number of American youth at Oxford are in nearly all the States taking definite form. The matter of appointments is left in the control of college or university officials, there being nothing to connect our State authorities with the business. One of the most interesting points being decided is the age of the youth who are to go to England. The age of 19 seems to be the favorite minimum, and 23 the maximum. The first scholarship has been given to Eugene Heitler Lehman, of New York city, a Yale graduate.

WE HAVE SEEN THE SONS OF THE ANAKIM.

HUMAN nature does not change very much. The same old facts come round over and over again. Modern investigators tell us that most of our jokes are as old as Pharaoh. We are laughing at the same things which made these odd-looking mummies shake their living sides. We get frightened, too, at the same sort of things which frightened Moses' people, and we lose our chance to enter promised lands for the same reason that they missed theirs. There it was just over against Kadesh-barnea. It had been promised for centuries. It was meant for them, and they were meant for it. All they had to do was—to take possession. Like a refrain, the word from the Lord comes in: "Fear not, neither be dismayed. Only go and take it!" But five-sixths of the "spies" can see nothing in this milk and honey country except difficulties and bugaboos. "Why, the walls of the cities go clear up to heaven, and we have seen the sons of the Anakim peeking over the tops of them! It makes our hearts melt to think of them." This was an honest opinion. It was an overwhelming majority view, but it was a mistaken view nevertheless. It turned the Israelites back to their wanderings, back to their quails and their manna. It prevented those who started the exodus from ever entering the land which was their goal—the land which was meant for them.

How these same old Anakim keep living on! See how history repeats itself! Forty years ago—just the period Israel wandered with their hearts melted over the Anakim—the younger members of our body began to realize that we were not in our promised land; in fact, that we were making little or no progress toward it. If we were moving at all, we were compassing the same old mountain. The eager "spies" who were on the hill, a little nearer the sun, got a vision of a better state. They saw a land to be possessed. They felt a living call to go on into something richer. Everywhere there were beckoning hands, and the future was for us! But such a host of Anakim as suddenly looked over the walls! Hearts began to melt. We shall lose our peculiarities! We shall be stripped of all the luggage which we have brought from Goshen, the land of our fathers! A longer list of "ites" began to loom up than that which described the dwellers in Canaan—Hivites and Jebusites and Perizzites and Amorites and so following. Again, there were those who said, "Fear not, neither be dismayed. We can become a strong people for the Lord. Only go forward." But spite of the faith and the vision and the leading there were Anakim-seers enough to hamper the march, to break the camp into sections, to drive the enthusiasts into excesses and to spoil in large measure the attempts to enter the land which was really ours and meant for us. The same thing keeps on recurring. There were sons of Anakim in the Quinquennial Conference. There were bugaboo Anakim in the Uniform Discipline. They were looking over the walls of the Five Years Meeting. Most of those Anakim have been killed. They were very little men on stilts. Shall we learn to look squarely at facts, and not miss any more promised lands because somebody sees Anakim where others see only grapes of Eschol? The deep and spiritual men of our time see a rich and glorious inheritance of truth for God's people. They know that the Christian Church has a new chance to enter into power and to become the mightiest factor in modern society. They are saying, "Fear not, neither be dismayed. Only take what God has for you." But as of old, the Anakim are on the walls. They have on new hats, and they hold up new scare heads, but they are the same short men on stilts. Let us not be deceived. Our serious Friends to-day who are devoted with all their strength to the task of defeating the powers of darkness are loyal to Jesus Christ. They want no other King. They want no other Saviour. They are not in the wilderness of doubt. They are after the land which is meant for them. Let us not be scared by those who see Anakim on the walls, or at least let us see whether they are really Anakim, or only stuffed figures on stilts.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

FRIENDS who are specially interested in Peace will do well to arrange for a public meeting to observe the 18th of Fifth month, which is the anniversary of the opening of The Hague Peace Conference (1899). This is the day which is generally kept, and it is an excellent custom to perpetuate. We keep one day in the year with the booming of cannon and the noise of fire crackers. Let us have a day which fittingly commemorates the power of love and brotherhood.

FRIENDS everywhere in this country will regret to hear of the death of Alfred H. Smiley, which we reported last week. He had been connected in earlier life with three of our educational institutions—Oak Grove Seminary, Friends School, Providence, R. I., and Haverford College, where he graduated and later was an instructor. He was the proprietor of the Minnewaska House, in New York State, where he entertained notable men and women from all parts of the country. He was connected with his twin brother, Albert K. Smiley, in many public and philanthropic undertakings, and in numerous ways he served his fellow men.

ANOTHER fact of considerable interest has reached us in connection with the work done by Friends to secure the passage of the exemption amendment. A deputation of Friends from Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings had a personal interview with Senator Beveridge. The Senator received the Friends most cordially, and remarked: "Gentlemen, it is for you to say what you want. I am at your service." He at once took the matter up, and, as the printed debate has already revealed, introduced the amendment and piloted it through. It is an incident of special interest, because it shows that the way to go to work on all such matters is to arouse in a perfectly legitimate way the personal interest of some man who can carry influence.

For THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE PASSING OF AN ANCIENT MEETING HOUSE.

BY JONATHAN M. STEERE.

There is always something distinctly pathetic about a closed Friends' meeting house. As one sees the barred windows, the grass-grown yard, and perhaps the decaying horse shed, the feeling comes that these things should not be. As one reflects on the long line of worthy men and women who have sought this shelter twice a week, and found that spiritual meat and drink which have enabled them with quiet courage and faith to do their day's work in the world, "Unspotted by its wrong and crime," he hesitates and asks why their children and their children's children do not also find there that same food which has fed and nourished those who have gone before. There is a sense of something lost in the community—a quiet but potent influence which will perhaps never be recovered.

The reason for the closed meeting house is not always an easy one to find; neither does it by any means always indicate a decadence of spiritual life in a community; nor is it a proof that Friends are "dying out," for it has recently been clearly stated in the pages of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that there were probably never more Friends in the world than there are to-day. But since the disposition of the old house herein represented affords a partial explanation of the decline of Friends, it may be of interest to mention it.

It was built at Mapleville, in the town of Glocester, R. I., in 1791, the meeting which was established in 1786 having previously met at the home of the great-grandfather of the writer, in a beautiful little valley through which flows a charming brook. In 1806 the town of Burrillville was set off from the town of Glocester, and for many years this house appears to have been the only place of worship in these two then agricultural towns, which cover together a territory about twelve miles square in the northwestern corner of the State of Rhode Island. The meeting, while never a very large one, was regularly maintained for about one hundred years, and many who were not members of our Society, especially while it was the only meeting house in the town, worshiped within its plain walls.

BURRILLVILLE FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE.
(Mapleville, R. I.)

In time a small manufacturing village grew up beside the meeting house, other churches sprang up about the town with their attractions of music, singing and more ornate buildings, and later on a Methodist meeting was organized in the village in almost the center of which the old house now stands. In the gradual changing from an agricultural to a manufacturing community, with the infusion of a large foreign element into the population, the meeting slowly surrendered its grasp and its influence to the more tangible and entertaining forms of worship of other denominations, and so it has dwindled into decay. And now, under a recent change in ownership of the adjacent factory, and a large increase to the plant, and a consequent growth in the village population, the owner of the mill, a philanthropic man, desiring a better place of entertainment for his employees than the too numerous saloons can furnish, has purchased the property, which has been kept in good repair, for the purpose of making of it a place for their healthy recreation and amusement. Such a use of the building for a reading room, lecture hall and club room indicates a tendency of our life. Men crave amusement and social intercourse, and while the "Quaker of the olden time," whose occupation was agriculture and kindred pursuits, could

"Welcome the silence all unbroken, Nor less the words of fitness spoken."

we all know the practical difficulty of maintaining a flourishing Friends' meeting in a factory village, where some of the membership, at least, has not been reared under the influence of the teaching and traditions of Quakerism. Whether such meetings can be maintained or not, and how Quakerism can be best adapted to present-day life and conditions, and to the needs of men and women who work with their hands, it is not the place to here discuss. But the fact of the transformation of an old Friends' meeting house into a place of innocent and helpful entertainment for laboring men and women is one not without significance, and may there not lie in this change a suggestion for struggling meetings which have not yet seen fit to turn over their property and labors to other workers?

And so, while it was considered far better in this case to sell the property for the uses mentioned, one cannot easily put aside the thought that this town, with its dozen busy mill villages, will lose a distinctive influence for good in the passing of this ancient meeting house, in which the voices of many of the most influential ministers and speakers in the Society of Friends have been lifted up in the cause of Truth.

And so, while it is parted with in sadness, the spirit and the demands of the times cannot be lightly overlooked, and the best wishes are extended for wide usefulness in its new capacity.

Philadelphia.

THE ALTAR OF INCENSE.

BY ALEXANDER MC LAREN.

Ceremonies are embodied thoughts. Religious ceremonies are moulded by, and seek to express, the worshiper's conceptions of his god and of his own relation to him, his aspirations and needs. Scholars busy themselves with studying the religions of savages and explaining rude and repulsive rites by pointing to the often profound and beautiful ideas underlying them. When that process is applied to Australians and Fijians it is honored as a new and important study; when applied to the Old Testament ritual it is pooh-poohed as "foolish spiritualizing." No doubt much ingenuity has been wasted in giving New Testament meanings—or shall we say twists?—to every pin of the Tabernacle, and every detail of the ritual, but though such exaggeration discredits truth, it remains true that great meanings and lessons lie beneath the chief details of both these.

The Tabernacle, and afterwards the Temple, is described as being divided into three compartments, the outermost court, which was accessible to all the people; the second, which was trodden by the priests alone, and the third, where the Shekinah shone in solitude, broken once a year by the entrance of the high priest. In that second or priest's court stood three pieces of ecclesiastical furniture, an altar in the center, flanked on one side by a great lamp-stand and on the other by a table on which were piled loaves. That central altar teaches great lessons. What did it say to Israel and to us?

It shows us what prayer is. If we had been in that court when, in the morning or evening, the priest came with the glowing pan of coals from another altar in the outer court, and laid it on this altar and heaped on it the sticks of incense, we should have seen curling, fragrant wreaths ascending till "the house was filled with smoke," and should not have needed an interpreter to tell what that meant. What could that rising cloud of sweet odors mean but the ascent of the soul towards God? Incense is a natural symbol of prayer, as is stated in several places in Scripture. We are tempted, by our inherent self-regard to think of prayer as mainly petition; but that conception is far too narrow. Of course, so long as we are what we shall always be in this world, needy and sinful creatures, and so long as we are what we shall always be in all worlds, dependent creatures, petition must be a large part of prayer. But the more like Him we grow, and the more we understand what prayer is, the more will the relative proportion of its component parts be changed, and petition will become less and aspiration will become more. The ascent of the soul towards God is the essence of prayer. As one non-Christian seeker after God put it, prayer is "the flight of the lonely soul to the only God." Death is described as the return of the spirit to God who gave it, and the description fits true prayer. The homing pigeon or the migrating bird goes straight through many degrees of latitude, and all sorts of weather, to the place whence it came. Do our spirits thus aspire and soar? Are they like captive balloons, that are ever yearning upwards to the loftiest point permitted them by the cord that tethers them to earth?

This symbol teaches us, too, that the prayer that soars must be kindled. A stick of incense gives forth no fragrance till it is on fire. Prayers not warm with the flame of a love kindled by Christ's love will not be fragrant to God or of benefit to ourselves. The stretched string gives music; the slack one is dumb.

Again, this altar shows us where prayer stands in the Christian life. Its position was significant in several respects. There was another altar in the outer court, on which the daily sacrifice for the nation's sin was offered. That sacrifice had to be offered before the priest came into the inner court, with coals from that altar, and kindled the incense by them. The altar of incense is not approached but by way of the altar of sacrifice. There is no real access to God, in all the fulness of His revealed character, for us sinful men until our sins have been taken away by the Lamb of God, sacrificed for us. We are delivered from the unholiness, which is the perpetual and necessary barrier to our vision of God, by making our very own, through simple faith, the cleansing energy of that great propitiation. "First be reconciled to thy" Father, and "then offer thy" incense of prayer.

But the place of the altar in reference to the other articles in the inner court is significant. It stood between the lamp-stand and the table on which the loaves were piled. The lamp-stand symbolized Israel's function as the light of the world, and the table of shew-bread (as our versions call it), symbolized the consecration to God of the nation's activities and their results. Does not that position of the altar tell us that the light will burn dim and flicker to extinction, and the loaves, which express our activities and their fruit, will become dry or mouldy unless both are sustained and hallowed by prayer. This bustling, hurry-driven generation needs that lesson sorely. We are so engaged in work, secular and religious, that the basis of all wholesome and efficient work, communion with God, is apt to be thrust on one side. The carbon points of the electric arc-light are eaten away very quickly in the act of giving forth their illumination, and they need to be continually approximated and frequently renewed. The oil is exhausted as the light shines, and the lamp needs to be filled again. Our shining in the world and our consecration of our active life depend on our making prayer central to everything. But the place of prayer in the Christian life is further shown by the fact that the altar of incense stood "before the veil." A straight line drawn from the altar of sacrifice in the outer court would have bisected this altar in passing on to the mercy seat and the Shekinah in the Most Holy Place. Prayer is the direct way of coming to God. We shall never lift the veil nor stand in the secret place of the Most High, unless we take the Altar of Incense on our road.

But, further, the altar shows how prayer is to be cultivated. Twice a day, morning and evening, the officiating priest came with his pan of coals and incense, and laid it on the altar, and during all the day a glow lay half-hidden in the embers, and a faint but continuous fragrance came from the smouldering heap, which was replenished morning and evening. There must be definite times of prayer, if the aroma of devotion is to be diffused through our else scentless days. We hear a great deal from certain quarters as to its not being necessary to have set times of prayer, and as to its being far better to have devotion diffused through our lives, and as to how work is worship, and so on. But that is pernicious nonsense, if it means that the incense will glow and be fragrant, though there are no definite times for renewing its flame. What should we think of people who said, "Get your electricity, to run your cars, out of the wires; never mind about having generating stations." Not less foolish are they who think that there can be devotion which permeates a life, and is not concentrated in and replenished by, set seasons of prayer.

But, on the other hand, it is bad to have set seasons of prayer and to leave the rest of our time prayerless. Our religion is not meant to be clotted into lumps. The incense was renewed morning and evening that it might smoulder all day. "Rejoice evermore; pray without ceasing." Such continuous praying will, of course, not be vocal or formal, but reference to God, thoughts of Him, like some melody, "so sweet we know not we are listening to it" may breathe fragrance and warmth through our else cold and senseless lives. When Gideon was threshing wheat the angel appeared to him. When Elisha was ploughing the divine inspiration touched him. When the disciples were fishing they saw the Form on the shore. When we are in the way of common life the Lord may meet us. Then work will be worship; then burdens will be lightened; then our lamps will burn bright; then our activities will be consecrated; then our lives will be noble; then our spirits will rest as well as soar, and we shall have fruition and aspiration perpetually alternating in stable succession and eternal progress.

PIONEER MISSIONARY WORK AMONG FRIENDS.

In 1860 David Tatum procured a minute from Bridgeport Monthly Meeting, Indiana, to which he belonged, to solicit funds for "The American and Foreign Christian Union," to carry on missionary work. One of the first places that he presented the subject was at Milton Monthly Meeting. After he was through, a minister, who some years later became very prominent in advocating missionary labor, said that she was "greatly surprised that our dear friend David Tatum should have entered upon a mission like that, and set at naught our Discipline on the precious testimony against a hireling ministry, that Friends had held so dear from the first rise of the Society. The missionaries were no doubt deeply pious and self-sacrificing men and women, but they are all hirelings, and we can do nothing for them." A large expression of assent was given to that on the part of the older members. He then explained what was defined by Christ as a hireling, and showed from the Scriptures that as the missionaries were deeply pious and self-sacrificing, and stood by the flock in the midst of wolves, they were no more hirelings than ourselves. After some further remarks against the work, he said that both sides had been presented, and he wanted help for the cause, and called on two Friends to pass through the congregation and take a collection. Thirty-seven dollars were freely contributed for that work of the Lord. He then took subscriptions for "The Missionary Journal," that they might become acquainted with the work, and see his report of the funds collected from the different meetings, as he should send every dollar to the Society.

Soon there was published an anonymous circular against him and the work in which he was engaged, and forwarded to Friends in the various meetings, stating that he was trampling under foot our precious testimony against a hireling ministry, and that there was no guarantee that the money would be used for what it was given; that it was currently reported that David Tatum had already applied sixty dollars of it for the purchase of an organ for his daughter! This made a great commotion among the Friends, and on several occasions a delegation waited on him to inquire into the facts of the case. As his only daughter had deceased some years before, they were easily satisfied relative to misapplying the funds.

At a meeting in Ohio he put up with a wealthy farmer, hoping to get him interested in assisting in the work; but before saying anything to him on the subject the farmer gave him a severe reprimanding, and assured him that he would never get a dollar from him or his family. The Lord helped him preach on Sabbath morning, and at the afternoon appointment, when the subject was to be presented, there was a large congregation. The people had received the circulars against him and his work, and they came for miles to see the speaker, and learn what all this talk and trouble was about. The Lord helped him to give a stirring address, which brought tears to the eyes of his farmer host and others, and when he inquired who would give five dollars to this work of the Lord in giving light to those who sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, his host was the first to announce, "I'll give five dollars." His son gave two. A generous collection was given.

At the close of a mid-week meeting in Indiana he presented the cause, when an aged minister entreated Friends not to trample under foot our precious testimony against a hireling ministry. He said that those missionaries were all hirelings, and they would compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when they had made him they make him three-fold more the child of hell than themselves! D. Tatum then showed that the missionaries were not hirelings from a Scripture standpoint, and spoke of the devoted lives of the Judsons and others, and the aged Friend had done them great injustice by preferring such charges against them. He then called for donations and received seven dollars.

There were not very many instances of such strong opposition, but in almost every meeting where he went there were some who doubted the propriety of his mission, with whom he had to talk and reason to convince them of the justice and righteousness of the cause, and as Friends had no missionaries of their own they ought to help other missionary organizations.

He continued in the work for more than six months, and collected over eight hundred dollars, and got many subscribers for the "Missionary Journal."

In the arduous work of heralding the truth and awakening the Church to the importance of engaging in missionary work, he sowed the mission seed and watered it with his tears.

The Baldwin Locomotive Works, in Philadelphia, are being run night and day, with the result that six complete locomotives are now turned out daily. The shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, at Altoona, also turn out one complete locomotive in two days. Much the same story is told elsewhere, but with all this product the demand for motive power by the railroads does not slacken.

EXTRACTS FROM THE DEBATE ON THE MILITIA BILL.

(Concluded from last week.)

Mr. Depew: Mr. President, in reference to the last remark of the Senator from Wisconsin* as to the interest there may be in this amendment, there is a very large body of Quakers in the State of New York. I have received many communications from them, and they are very much alarmed as to the effect of this bill upon their society or Church. It seems to me that it is a highly proper amendment to put on this bill, so as to quiet that alarm among those very worthy and intelligent people and excellent citizens. To prevent any misuse of this exception in case of war by societies being organized merely to escape military duty, I would suggest that in line 3 of this amendment there should be inserted "at present organized and existing," so that it would read:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to require or compel any member of any religious organization at present organized and existing, etc."

Mr. Beveridge: Mr. President, I think that is an admirable suggestion.

Mr. Spooner: The Senator recognizes the distinction of a man being a member of a sect and being a member of some organization within the sect. There might perhaps hereafter be Quakers who would not belong to any particular organization, and yet would belong to a sect. Would you exclude them? In other words, would the exemption be limited to them?

Mr. Depew: I would say for the safety of the militia it ought not to be left to the judgment of any individual citizen who wants to escape military duty to declare to the enrolling officer or to the drafting officer that his religious scruples are against fighting.

Mr. Spooner: No, but if he joined the organization and became a Quaker, which he could not become without some action—

Mr. Beveridge: He certainly could not become a Quaker without the consent of the Quakers, and he could not be a Quaker just by himself. This amendment, if the Senator will permit me, was carefully drawn with that end in view, so that some person could not come up and say, "I am a Quaker," just on his own word. He has to belong to a religious organization as one of its registered members.

Mr. Depew: I have been familiar with the Quakers all my life, and I think there is no religious organization or society which is so rigid in the examination of those who wish to become members as is that society; nor is there a more intelligent one, and in case of war, if there were a rush to join the Quakers in order to be exempt from military duty, the Quakers would show a vigor and patriotism in keeping them out which would be most commendable.

Mr. Spooner: I do not underestimate the patriotism of the Quakers. There is no more intelligent or better class of people than the Quakers. The point I suggested to the Senator was that he limits the operation of this amendment to the organizations of Quakers in existence at the time of the passage of the proposed act. Suppose a new organization of Quakers should spring up after the passage of this act?

Mr. Beveridge: We exclude that by the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York.

Mr. Depew: The object of the amendment I propose is that in case of emergency persons could not organize religious societies in order to escape military duty.

Mr. Beveridge: It says "at present existing."

Mr. Spooner: My suggestion was that, as I understand the amendment, it will exclude organizations of Quakers made subsequent to the passage of the act. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. Depew: It would.

Mr. Beveridge: May I say a word?

Mr. Spooner: Certainly.

The President pro tempore: Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. Depew: Certainly.

Mr. Beveridge: With the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin—

Mr. Spooner: I thought when I rose that the Senator from New York had taken his seat.

Mr. Depew: I had.

The President pro tempore: Then the chair will recognize the Senator from Wisconsin and ask that Senator if he will yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. Spooner: Always, Mr. President.

Mr. Beveridge: Mr. President, I could not agree with the Senator from New York as to the organization of a new society of Quakers within the parent Church. They could establish a new church in the parent sect. There is nothing to prevent that. But if a new and spurious organization of Quakers were gotten up for the express purpose of exempting cowards from participating in war, it would prevent that. However, your question was, Did it prevent any new organization of Quakers within the Church?

Mr. Spooner: Within the Church?

Mr. Beveridge: Certainly not; because it can extend its churches.

Mr. Spooner: Will the Senator kindly read the amendment again?

Mr. Beveridge: It does prevent any new or spurious organization.

Mr. Depew: I will read the whole of the amendment.

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to require or compel any member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing, whose creed forbids its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein, in accordance with the creed of said religious organization, to serve in the militia or any other armed or volunteer force under the jurisdiction and authority of the United States."

Mr. Spooner: I meant, in saying that I did not think the amendment was of any consequence, except in a sentimental way, that there is no compulsory feature in this bill, nor was there in section 24. No man under the provisions of this bill can be forced—

Mr. Beveridge: In my opening and very brief remarks I said that may be so.

Mr. Depew: If I may be permitted, I see no harm in that exception in relieving the anxieties of these estimable people.

Mr. Hoar: Mr. President, I think there ought to be one further, and perhaps a little more comprehensive, statement made in answer to my honorable friend, the Senator from Wisconsin, on my right, than what has been said already. He asks why we do not leave the matter of exemption to the States. We have said that anybody exempted by State authority should be exempt from militia duty without regard to age. That is in the bill now. I understand that the policy of the people of the United States is to secure by national authority, against the local opinion and action of the States, the fundamental rights of religious and political freedom and of commercial integrity. We prohibit the States from impairing the obligation of contracts; we prohibit the States from trying a man twice for the same offense; we prohibit the States from conducting trials except with certain securities for fair trials, and the Fourteenth Amendment has very much extended those provisions, so that no man can be tried by any State without due process of law.

Now, suppose a State undertakes, against the conscience of an individual, to compel him to be a member of the militia and to enter into war. I think when the United States is dealing with that subject we should by our authority exempt him, State or no State. If it should happen that some State should exist hereafter, in the far East, or the far West, or the far North, or the far South, which had a very great prejudice against Quakers, and a war came up, and their opposition to war excited the popular feeling of the majority in the State, they should be protected.

Now, during the war of the Revolution the Quakers, although, as everybody in this debate has said, they are a worthy and patriotic body of people, incurred great animosity by their refusal to take part therein. Dr. Franklin, a man who did not yield much to sentimentalities, as they are called, speaks of them with great dislike and contempt in his writings.

"I think it was Mad Anthony Wayne who, when his soldiers were hard up for shoes, heard of a great Quaker meeting which was being held one evening in the neighborhood, and marched up a body of troops, surrounded the Quaker meeting-house, and made every man in the assembly pull off his shoes or boots or whatever he had on, and used them for his soldiers and left the Quakers to go home barefooted. I will not be sure it was General Wayne, but it was some well-known and famous and popular general in the Revolutionary War.

So it seems to me that as we are declaring who shall constitute the militia, giving definition, we ought to put in our law the definition and not leave it in the power of any State to force a man against his conscience to go into battle.

If the soldiers be called into service and be compelled to serve, it is in consequence of this bill and of nothing else. The bill provides that the President shall order the State militia into the service. For instance, in the fourth section it is provided that whenever the United States is invaded or in danger of invasion or rebellion, the President may call them forth and issue orders to them. That is compulsion, and it is compulsion authorized by this bill, and it is the only compulsion under which these soldiers are constrained to go into the service and do the work.

Then the amendment says nothing in the act contained shall be construed to compel Quakers to serve (I will use that short phrase instead of the phraseology of the amendment) or other persons like them who are described in it. To say that there is nothing in the bill which compels them in any way does not address itself favorably to my understanding. It seems to me we ought to meet the important question of the right of conscience in the proper way, and in the way in which it has been met in the United States from the beginning of the Government of the United States, to wit: That persons belonging to religious bodies who have conscientious scruples against military service shall not be compelled to violate their conscience. It seems to me the proper place for that, the righteous thing to do, is in the act of Congress where we define the persons who shall be compelled by the United States to do that service.

The President pro tempore: The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge].

The amendment was agreed to.

HANNAH E. SLEEPER.

Hannah Elliott Sleeper was born near Centerville, Wayne County, Ind., Eighth month 14th, 1838, and died at Baldwin, Kan., First month 5th, 1903.

When 18 years of age she was joined in marriage to Isaiah Sleeper, of La Fayette, Ind., and at once moved to his home on a farm near Farmers' Institute, a few miles southwest of the city. Here the greater part of her married life was spent caring for a growing family of children and engaging in various lines of church activity, having had a birthright membership in the Friends' Church, and early in life experienced a precious work of grace in her own heart and life. Here were born to them three sons and one daughter, Horace, Warren, Mary and Howard, the three latter of whom survive her. The youngest son, Howard, is now a missionary among the freedmen of the Creek Indians in the Indian Territory. She was called upon to fill many important stations and offices in the church during these younger years of her life in Indiana.

In 1885 she, with her family, moved to Baldwin, Kan., some sixteen miles south of Lawrence.

During the following spring her husband, Isaiah Sleeper, was removed by death.

Her family of children being now grown, and the comfort and solace of her home being removed by death, she gave the greater energies of the remainder of her life to the work of spreading the kingdom of her Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Some three years after the organization of the Women's Board of Foreign Missions for Kansas Yearly Meeting she was chosen to the responsible place of president, which place she continued to fill so long as the women maintained a separate board.

During those eventful and active years of Foreign Mission work the Friends of Kansas were laboring earnestly to open and maintain a mission station on Douglas Island, Alaska. Many complications and difficulties presented themselves in connection with the work, when she felt that it would be desirable to visit the field in person, which she proposed to do at her own expense.

The Board gladly accepted her proposition, and she visited the field on two separate occasions and rendered much valuable counsel and assistance. Upon the first organization of the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions she was chosen as one of Kansas' representatives, which appointment she continued to fill until the time of her death.

She was called upon to fill several important stations in the community in which she lived, being president of the local W. C. T. U. of her town for a number of years; also superintendent of the Peace department both of her own yearly meeting and of the district W. C. T. U.

She made the statement that when a young married woman, upon visiting at the home of Chalkley A. Chawner, near Thorntown, Ind., and while engaged in conversation with him about the life work of his uncle, John Williams, one of the first missionaries to the South Sea Islands, whose portrait was hanging on the wall before them, a great passion, a love for Foreign Mission work, took possession of her soul and mind, and continued with her to the close of her life.

While manifesting loyalty and attachment to her own church, she evinced much liberality towards and unity with other Christian denominations.

Her final sickness was of brief duration, and her decline rapid, and continued from the first.

When the end came she remarked, "How beautiful to be ready!" Cut down in the midst of her activities, we are reminded of the thought that God takes to Himself His workers, but continues to carry on His work.

Some Views on Present Topics.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE CONFEDERATION OF INDIANA'S TEMPERANCE FORCES.

BY RILEY AND MARY L. HUBBARD.

Since the spring of 1902, when E. G. Saunderson came to Indiana, with his zeal and knowledge obtained from the arena of the temperance work in Ohio, and practical work in Illinois, Indiana's temperance forces have been concentrating.

The idea of local, visible temperance leagues has been supplanted by the stronger idea of a united effort of moral and Christian people against the liquor traffic.

Taking the view that the saloon is an enemy to all mankind, therefore the supposition is made that all moral, and especially Christian citizens, desire its overthrow, and are willing and eager, in some manner, to assist in accomplishing its destruction. Considering the fact that, in the present stage of development, all these temperance people cannot be brought into harmonious action along any one definite, organized line, it is thought best that the Christian people represented by delegates from the temperance committees of the various denominations meet at intervals to formulate plans so general that all forces will be interested, and yet so definite, practical and powerful that the liquor power will be defeated.

Immediately on the announcement of the decision of the Supreme and Appellate Courts, upholding the power of attorney remonstrance system, which is the most prominent feature of the famous Nicholson Law, the brewers began raising money to make war against the bill in the present session of the General Assembly. However, the leaders of both political parties declared that it would be unwise to change the existing law. Not heeding this declaration, the brewers introduced House Bill No. 184, which is intended to destroy the power of attorney remonstrance, and thus weaken the temperance people's grip.

For this action the temperance masses were in a measure prepared by a call meeting of the various church temperance committees of Indiana.

Further information and resolutions have been given by the State Board of Trustees, which were elected or appointed by the various denominational temperance committees.

This State Board of Trustees, of which Timothy Nicholson, Richmond, Ind., is president, constitutes the executive authority of the Indiana Anti-Saloon League.

The executive authorities have continued E. G. Saunderson as State Superintendent, and he has charge of the office work, and is associate editor of "The American Issue," which is the official organ of the Ohio, Indiana and Illinois Anti-Saloon Leagues.

The effect of concentration of forces began to be visible at the time the Friends' Church at Knights-town was partially destroyed by dynamite as a result of the infuriated, but overpowered, liquor element.

This event occurred late last autumn. Other evidences of the straitened condition of the liquor element have been an occasional assault on the private property of temperance remonstrators. A special evidence of the liquor men's alarm was recently shown at Winslow, Porter County, Ind. The town had been overrun with saloons, which the citizens removed by means of the remonstrance system. As a means of revenge the liquor element wrecked the business houses and residences of the most active temperance workers, by means of the explosion of large charges of dynamite. Even this did not satisfy the enraged and outlawed liquor dealers. The remonstrance leaders' lives were in danger. Some were assaulted, and Arthur White was assassinated. Although the "wet" newspapers said little of the affair Indiana's moral and Christian people are nerved and equipped for the fray as never before.

CHRISTIAN LOVE.

1 Cor. 13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.—1 Cor. 13: 1.

The conditions under which the Epistles to the Corinthians were written were noticed in the last lesson. The present lesson is, by general consent, one of the gems of the Bible. It is a hymn in praise of Christian love. "This grace of Christian love is exalted as the highest attainment of the Christian life by St. Paul, St. Peter and St. John. . . . St. John's character was tender, emotional, and contemplative. . . . St. Paul was a man of keen intellect, and of soaring and aspiring thought which would endure no shackles on its freedom. . . . St. Peter was remarkable for personal courage. Frank, free, generous, irascible. . . . But each of these men, so different from each other, exalts love above his own peculiar quality."

Paul probably inserted this parenthesis because the Corinthians were lacking in love; great as were the spiritual gifts which have been enumerated in chapter 12, love was more important.

One of the best commentaries on this chapter is Drummond's "The Greatest Thing in the World."

The word "love" should in the Authorized Version, be substituted for "charity" in every place.

1. "If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am become sounding brass or a clanging cymbal." R. V. "Tongues." Referring to the gift of tongues (see 1 Cor. 12: 30). "Of angels." The climax.

2. "And if." R. V. "Prophecy." Another of the great spiritual gifts, "charismata," "understand." "Know." R. V. A "mystery" here means something which belongs to salvation and which can only be known through revelation. "Knowledge" and knowing mysteries seem to be taken together to express "mental grasp and supernatural insight." To what has just been mentioned "faith" in its greatest measure is added. Yet with all these and without love the man would be nothing. "Faith" here means miracle-working faith, not saving faith in Christ.

3. Again, the apostle carries on the contrast. There is a difference between works, which may or may not be works of love, and love itself. Compare Matt. 6: 1-18. "Profiteth me nothing"; of course this means in the way of spiritual benefit.

4-7. These verses Drummond calls the analysis of love. "Love suffereth long." Is long-suffering, slow to take offence. "Kind." Gracious in manner and in spirit. "Vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." The former is the expression in words or bearing of the latter.

5. "Unseemly." With impropriety. So far from the old proverb, "manners make the man" being true, it is really the reverse; the man makes the manners. Love makes things sweet and attractive. "Seeketh not its own." Is unselfish, does not look out for "number one." "Is not provoked." Omit "easily." "Taketh not account of evil." R. V. Does not take into account the evil done to it. Compare Luke 22: 37; Rom. 4: 5, 6, 8; 2 Cor. 5: 19.

6. "Rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth with the truth." "Love rejoices with truth as it sees not iniquity, but righteousness advanced."

7. Love bears up under provocation, is trustful, is hopeful, is enduring.

8-13. In these verses Drummond says we have "Love defended as the supreme gift."

8. "Never faileth." Never ceases; it is an un-failing spring. "Prophecies," "tongues," "knowledge." The apostle chooses three of the greatest of spiritual gifts and contrasts them with "love." These all are temporary, love is eternal. When the need for prophecy, for tongues, for knowledge (in one sense) is done away, love still remains.

9. "For." Because we know in part. Love remains the same in kind, but increases in degree; the others are to be replaced by things of different quality.

10. The fragmentary gives place to the complete.

11. This is an illustration of the previous verse.

12. "For now we see in a mirror darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as I have been known." R. V. The bronze mirrors of antiquity reflected very imperfectly, and so the metaphor of the apostle was much stronger in his day. The literal meaning is, "then shall I know plainly, even as I have been known plainly." "Face to face." Without any intervening medium.

13. "These three." The immortal three; but the greatest is "love."

Farming by the intensive methods practiced in the more densely populated regions of Europe and Asia would multiply the products of our soil many fold, but American farmers have given more thought to adding field to field than to getting the most possible out of a more modest holding. The spirit of adventure lends itself, to a degree at least, to the advancement of foreign missions, while work in the home field may seem very prosaic. But there is a call that must not be unheeded—a call to thoroughness and careful harvesting where seed is already sown. Any work must be systematically and patiently carried on, and long before great results are reached in India or Africa or China the novelty is gone, and method and carefully-wrought plans must operate.

If any of us feel that we could accomplish a great work in a foreign field, let us remember that the surest pledge of success in any conceivable situation is achievement under actual conditions. A recent editorial note on giving, in the "Sunday School Times," presents a view of human nature that it is good to remind ourselves of when we fall to thinking of what we would do if we could choose our circumstances. "One man asked another, 'If you had a hundred sheep, would you give fifty of them for God's work?' 'Yes, I would.' 'Would you do the same if you had a hundred cows, or a hundred horses?' 'Yes, I would.' 'If you had two pigs, would you give one of them to God's cause?' 'No, I wouldn't; and you have no right to ask me when you know I have two pigs.' It is a great deal easier to say you would give fifty horses to the Lord when you haven't any, than to say you will give one pig when it is half your present possessions."

When faithful use of present opportunities has finished our work in one locality, or we have really outgrown our surroundings, there is no reason to doubt that the wise ordering of God will lead us into a larger field; but unless the little near at hand is cared for, and the talents that we have are developed by daily use, there is no suggestion in all His dealings with men that He is going to provide greater things for us. Indeed, there is no greater thing for any servant of Christ than to manifest in just the place where He sets us the spirit of Him who taught and healed and blessed wherever He was.

Some one says that the distinction between home and foreign missions is merely a point of convenience in bookkeeping. As a matter of Church duty and privilege this is true enough; but for us as individuals the distinction may well be that we can each be personally active in the one, but can only deputize a representative in the other. There are localities, too, within our own geographical limits, into which workers must be sent, and we need to be watchful that we make the way open for them to go free of hindering cares as to material things that they may be messengers for us as to spiritual things.

First month, 1903.

Dear Friend Margaret W. Haines:

. . . We are looking forward to our yearly meeting and Mela day after to-morrow, when we expect several hundred Christians to come for the meetings and camp for four days in a mango grove—some in tents, some in grass huts and some in and under carts and under trees. Delia Fistler, from Now-gong, is also coming to be my guest and help us at the meetings, and bring some of her boys, I hope, also.

Anna L. Evens has got back to India, and has been up here for one day to see me. She lives at Seoni Malwa, some thirty miles from here, and works amongst village women. We thought her looking very tired and wonder if she got enough rest after her travels in America before coming back here, but she seems to have kept well since her return. She will be up this week, I expect. On the first of January we had a delightful day and took the girls off in bullock carts six miles to a lovely mango grove by the river for the day. They sat out under the trees for their food, and played in the woods and river and did have a good time.

It was quite cold for a few days, but to-day the thermometer is over 70 degrees in the house. With love, I am

Yours in His glad service,

A LETTER FROM CUBA.

First month, 1903.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

My wife and I arrived here the 18th of last month, found our missionaries all well and the work in good condition.

Charles and Orpah Haworth, who are located at Holguin, are making good progress with the language. The meetings that the workers from here have assisted them in holding from time to time have been well attended and very satisfactory. Santos Trevino has a good day school at this station and is a very valuable worker in other lines of the mission work. We hope to open the new meeting house at Banes in next month, and to commence the buildings at Lanamo soon. E. H. Stranahan, from Sabina, Ohio, arrived here on the 12th inst., under direction of the Mission Committee of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, to assist in the location of a station for that yearly meeting in connection with the general mission work of Friends in the island.

One of the most interesting events of this month was the establishing of the monthly meeting and reception of new members, which occurred on the 4th inst. Clerks, elders, overseers and other officers and committees were appointed. The interest the members are taking in the monthly meeting, and the promptness with which committees attend to their work, is encouraging. One person, who was appointed on a committee to inform some who could not be present that they were received into membership, asked after meeting if she could be excused from attending to it until after she had taken her breakfast, as the meeting had held later than usual—quite a contrast with the reports we so often hear from committees—"Not yet attended to."

But the most impressive part of the meeting was the real Christian fellowship that was manifest, and the feeling of oneness in Christ we experienced as all knelt together in prayer for the dedication of these dear Cuban Friends, in which they took an earnest part.

R. H. Holding and Juan F. Galvez were out last week on a tour of some of the towns, and held meetings in Contimplora, Auras and Holguin. Auras will be remembered as the town of which R. H. Holding wrote last summer. They report the meeting at this time of equal interest with others held there.

AFRICA INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

KISUMA, British East Africa, 12 mo. 7, 1902.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

Amid the awful gloom and darkness that envelops the people here in East Africa there are pictures thrown on nature's canvas that relieve, for a time at least, the depressing effect of the misery and woe that is so constantly about us.

Recently, while prospecting for a location for the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission, we were marching several days across open plains destitute of forest, but swarming with natives as destitute of clothing, degraded and beastly, much nearer the brute in manner of living than I thought possible for human beings to be.

After leaving the plains we plunged into the dense forest that separates the Kavarindo from the Nanda tribe on the east, and for miles our path wound round through one of God's parks, pictures far surpassing any we saw in the art galleries of Europe were constantly bursting into view. Virgin forest undisturbed by man, except what little cutting the natives do, which is little indeed, the scene was beyond description—the mighty giants of the forest towering a hundred feet or more high, many with vines creeping round them, as if for protection; a dense undergrowth of smaller trees and vegetation sheltered under their massive arms. There were steep hills and deep valleys, with numerous springs and rippling streams, overhung with vines and ferns, with gorgeous-colored flowers among them, lading the air with their rich perfume. Singing birds, with bright plumage, and chattering squirrels and monkeys added life to the picture. Occasionally we would step out on some prominence or ridge overlooking a valley bare of forest, but covered with a rich carpet of green, studded with flowers. While in the forest a heavy thunder storm came on, and the fierce lightning's flash and heavy thunder's roll added grandeur and beauty to the scene. But, as the transition from the heavenly to the earthly, so, as we left the glories of the forest, God's undisturbed handiwork, we came upon the natives in their fearful misery and squalor—God's handiwork defiled by the devil. It was from the sublime to the awful, but the same God that still causes nature to glorify Him can transform even these to His praise and glory.

This tribe of fully a million souls are not in this condition because they have refused Christ, but because they have not known of there being a Christ. Then surely those who have known and have not told are the guilty ones, and all this sin, shame and sorrow can be laid to their charge. May God help the Church to arise and shake off her lethargy, step out of her pleasure and self-ease and endeavor to atone for her past neglect and disobedience of her Lord's last command and promise, "Go," and "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." Who would not go to the ends of the earth with such blessed companionship? Surely not one who has tasted and known of His blessed presence.

ARTHUR B. CHILSON.

She spoke of those who had walked with her long ago in her garden, and for whose sake, now that they had all gone into the world of light, every flower was doubly dear. Would it be a true proof of loyalty to them if she lived gloomily or despondently because they were away? She spoke of the duty of being ready to welcome happiness as well as to endure pain, and of the strength that endurance wins by being grateful for small daily joys, like the evening light, and the smell of roses, and the singing of birds. She spoke of the faith that rests on the Unseen Wisdom and Love like a child on its mother's breast, and the melting away of doubts in the warmth of an effort to do some good in the world.—Henry van Dyke.

PROMISED REST.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11: 28.

O erring, sad, remorseful, troubled heart,
Writhing beneath accusing conscience's smart,
With dire distress, One bore this long ago,
On Christ, was laid the burden of thy woe,
And, now, His gracious yearning, "Come to me,"
Provides a certain rest to sinner's plea.

O toiler, weighted with earth's crowding care,
Till life's stern duties seem too hard to bear,
There's One, who left His court of glory bright,
That He might serve, and gain divinest right
To say, "Come unto me, thou laboring one,
I'll give thee rest; in me thy toils are done."

O sufferer weak, upon thy bed of pain,
With throbbing pulse and fever-heated brain,
There's One, deep touched with thy infirmity.
In accents sweet, of tenderest sympathy,
I hear His voice, "Come unto me, tried heart.
I'll patience, rest, enduring strength impart."

O soul, assailed by foe of deadly might,
Storm-tossed, o'erwhelmed by Satan's blackest night,
There's One, indeed, who foiled the tempter's power,
And vanquished him in his vile scheming hour.
Above the din, I hear this, "Come to me;
By faith, thou more than conqueror shalt be."

O grief-torn weeper, stricken, lonely hearted,
Mourning o'er new-made grave thy dear departed,
There's One who knows and truly weighs thy sorrow,
Has borne its sting, and will not wait the morrow
To give thee rest—just heed His "Come to me"—
But will thy secret balm of healing be.

O pilgrim stranger, in time's weary race,
Before whose feet, hope's mirage flees apace,
Look up, 'tis but the training of God's love
To fit thee for a holier sphere above.
Thy Shepherd Lord, with arms outstretched to thee,
Gives victory and rest—says, "Come to me."

At length, with life's brief records filled complete,
Each trophy lowly laid at Jesus' feet,
All these, if blood-washed claimants of His grace,
Shall look upon the shining of His face,
And hear, "Come unto me;" those words so blest,
That lift the gates to heaven's eternal rest.

Correspondence.

[The article by F. S. Blair on "Keeping in Touch With Our Isolated Members" has called out the following letter.—ED.]

"Victoria, B. C., January 13th, 1903.

"F. S. BLAIR,

"Guilford College, N. C.

"Thy concern for Friends' isolated members has been read with deep feeling by one Victoria, British Columbia, Friend, and every word thee felt inspired to write is only too real—those that are truly Friends have drifted away—many we meet in this far-away place, were at one time members of the body of Friends; it is sad that there are but two or three—where, had the home meetings kept in touch with those that were isolated themselves and impressed upon them their individual responsibility in gathering together any Friends where'er they might wander, so that there could be that love of fellowship felt and concern to gather more into the one fold—what grand meetings I might have found ready established, instead of sitting alone the greater part of the time for the past six years, looking unto my elders for examples who did not feel the responsibility of assembling themselves together, having been isolated so long—they had gotten over the loneliness or homesickness—while I, coming from the death-bed of both father and mother, felt a loneliness that could not be obliterated until I found myself in a room where others could assemble and enter into that beautiful silence where God can teach us.

"He has taught us, and while we have waited for Him to lead others to us, He has opened the way for us to go out into the harvest and gather in the little ones, whose parents, many of them are careless, prayerless and indifferent. Our Sabbath School enrolls over 50, and yet two and a half months ago it started with one, and so the good work is going on into broader fields. Last evening was the beginning of our Friends' night school, as there was not any in town. Twenty-four boys came. Many could not read or write. To-day we learn there are many more nearly grown men that would like to attend, and so the Lord is leading us, and even though the work has fallen upon R. W. Clark, a British Friend, and myself, still the Lord is sending other laborers into the field, of all denominations, to teach. One is a principal of one of the day schools; the others are teachers and ex-teachers, numbering five in all. Their services are given gratuitously.

"It is our desire to maintain this as a Friends' School, and I feel Robert Clark should be encouraged in this good work, as he has discharged the duty laid upon him faithfully, working zealously for the Lord, meeting in silence to first know His will, each step he has taken. I can only give my services First-day morn to the infant class.

"Is there not some way we can receive material help, such as a library suitable for children? We ask for the Friends' prayers and that the Lord's blessing may rest upon this grand opening for Friends' work to be done in His name.

"Ever desirous to be in touch with Friends,

"I am, sincerely,
"FRANKIE SMITH."

Friendswood, Texas, Second month 1st, 1903.

Perry Hadley, Superintendent of Christian Endeavor of Kansas Yearly Meeting, recently spent five days at this place. His preaching was under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and productive of much good. His influence over the young was especially noticeable.

There were two conversions and some renewals, and all were greatly blessed.

Our Academy is doing very satisfactory work, under the conduct of Edna Goodwin and Alfred T. White, though it is being done under very unfavorable circumstances, such as unfinished rooms, the entire lack of apparatus, and without the help of even a good dictionary.

We are still receiving a little money to be applied upon our building, and we hope soon to complete the outside, so it will be preserved, as lumber, if exposed in this climate, soon decays.

ALFRED T. WHITE.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Mary Mendenhall Hobbs has just returned home from a visit to Minneapolis.

Quarterly Meeting was well attended at Pasadena, Cal., the 24th ultimo. Levi Mills, of Whittier, and other ministers, preached.

The regular mid-year recital by the School of Music of Friends' University, Wichita, Kan., was given in Russell Hall the evening of the 7th inst.

Dr. A. H. and Eliza Lindley, who are now on a visit on the Pacific Coast, recently entertained in their home the entire membership of Minneapolis Meeting.

Our dear aged friend, J. Bevan Braithwaite, has an article in the London "Friend" of First month 23d on "The Blessedness of the Lord's Discipline of Love."

It was Senator Beveridge who telegraphed congratulations to the Friends at Coloma, Ind., on the passage of the exemption amendment, not Senator Fairbanks, as our previous item stated.

Charles N. Replogle and wife have just closed a series of meetings at Cowan, Ind. The spiritual condition of the meeting was improved, many testifying to a deeper spiritual experience.

Beginning on the 1st inst. Ellison R. Purdy, of Marshalltown, Iowa, is holding a series of revival meetings at Oska-loosa for the help of the church members and the students of Penn College.

A staunch committee of Indiana Friends are working against the Brewers' bill which is before the Indiana Legislature. So far their efforts are proving successful. We shall present the matter more fully next week.

Spiceland Meeting, Ind., has just had a visit from Harriet Green and Sophia Fry. Their messages were given in the life and power of the Spirit, and were most helpful and instructive and appreciated by all.

White Oak Meeting, Jay County, Ind., has been revived through the efforts of Homer and Levi Cox. Friends showed their appreciation of the efforts put forth by the evangelists in giving them liberal financial support.

Friends of Friendswood, Texas, wish to announce that the name of their postoffice has not been changed, as was stated in a previous item, but that the money order office of their treasurer, Dr. J. M. Wright, is now changed to League City.

Wm. Brenner, a Friend minister, living in Des Moines, Iowa, accompanied by Brother Drury, of the same place, lately held a ten-days' meeting in a school house five miles southwest from Ackworth, Iowa. Twelve gave their hearts to Christ.

Evi Sharpless did not return to his home in Iowa, as was reported in a former issue, but remained in evangelistic work in Kansas. He visited friends in Wichita a few days near the close of last month, and is now engaged in a meeting at Hesper, Kan.

Harry R. Keates, of Glens Falls, N. Y., has just closed a two-weeks' meeting at Knightstown, Ind., in which a number were definitely blessed. His teaching was very much enjoyed by those who heard him. He goes from there to New Castle, Ind., to continue his Christian service.

Susie Fox labored for two weeks at Sterling, Kan., in a very successful revival meeting, holding two sessions a day, which closed the 1st inst. There were sixteen professions in all, and the meeting was greatly helped. Her manner of delivery carried conviction with it. The interest manifested was great, many being turned away for lack of room in the meeting house. Six applied for membership, with more to follow.

It turns out that there are 28 States which by constitution or statute exempt persons with conscientious scruples from military service. The list of these States was made out by Lindley D. Clark, and was printed as follows in the "Interchange": Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Washington and Wyoming.

Mary Ann Malone died at her home in Cleveland, Ohio, on the 24th ult., in her 83d year. She was a very interesting and remarkable woman, and she had a great mission in her earthly life, which she faithfully fulfilled. She was a person of striking faith, and she had learned the great art of living by her faith. Her married life began in a log house, but her religious activities found a way to make this poor house a place of blessing to many souls. She brought up a family of eight children, who are all examples of this devoted mother's influence. J. Walter Malone is, among Friends, the best known of the children.

Elwood Hinshaw, of Lynn, Ind., held a series of meetings at Barber's Mill, Ind., from First month 22d to Second month 2d. The meeting closed with 48 renewals and conversions; 27 accessions to our branch of the church. The preaching was strong and clear, and the interest good.

Ellison R. Purdy attended Minneapolis Quarterly Meeting on the 24th and 25th ult., and was engaged in ministry Seventh-day night and First-day morning and evening. The business meeting, which was held in the evening for the first time, was much larger than it has been for a number of years, a number who could not attend in the daytime being present.

The Friends at West Milton, Ohio, held a two-weeks' revival, closing the 25th ult. Daisy Barr was present ten days of the time, and was very efficient in her service. Forty-five persons made decision for Christ. The whole community seemed to be under the power that was in the meeting, and the three other denominations in the town were all more or less revived. At one time one hundred testimonies were given in eighteen minutes. Twenty-three names were given for membership with Friends, and more will follow. Much good was done which cannot be counted by numbers.

A series of revival meetings, conducted by J. W. Elder, assisted by his wife, the pastor, and B. S. Morris and wife, lasting about four weeks, closed at Emporia, Kan., on the 27th ult., with good results. Emporia Meeting was without a pastor for some months, but about two months before the revival Asher Mott located in the meeting in that capacity, and a renewed interest was manifested in church work before the meeting began. About one hundred claimed definite blessings, and twenty-four have applied for membership. All feel that the meetings resulted in much good, having strengthened the church.

Stella Academy, Oklahoma, under the supervision of John Howard, with Anna Ramsay and Myrtle Glaze, assisting, is having the most prosperous year in its history. The enrollment has reached sixty-five, and the students are very prompt and energetic in their school work. Nearly all of them are earnest Christians, thus giving the Academy life an excellent spiritual tone. J. Morris Lemon recently labored in a revival effort among them and in the local meeting, and 56 souls were led to take definite steps in their religious experience. Several influential Friends have recently bought farms in the vicinity and the "Orient" railroad has just completed its track to Cherokee, and will probably put in a flag station near the Academy for the accommodation of the students. These and other things point to greater prosperity for next year, which will necessitate an increase in the buildings, teaching force and library.

The anniversary of the birth of George Fox was observed by Minneapolis Meeting with very appropriate exercises, the effort being to revive the memory of the early struggles and the wonderful triumphs of the founder of our Society. Dr. J. H. Stuart dwelt upon the life and labors of George Fox, showing how he stood for liberty of conscience, and how the world now regarded his positions, quoting from several eminent authors most appreciative utterances in regard to his service. He read from Prof. William James the statement in regard to him. Eliza Lindley's paper upon the work of English Friends was carefully prepared and full of stirring information. R. J. Mendenhall's paper dealt with the influence of American Friends, showing their position in regard to slavery, war, temperance. The history of Minneapolis Meeting was given by Barney Trueman, who is himself not a member of the meeting, but one of several regular attenders who are much interested in Friends. The evening was closed by an informal social hour, during which tea was served in the committee room of the meeting house. These Friends have a complete arrangement for these teas in this room and in the basement, which is reached from it. There is the same sweet-spirited feeling of kinship existing among the members, which is one of the distinguishing marks of the Quakers, and comes down to us from the days of persecution, when our enemies were forced to exclaim, "How those do love one another!"

Oscar Roberts, who has spent several years as civil engineer and missionary in South Africa and on the West African Coast, was at Penn College on the 25th and 26th ult. In the regular meetings of the church, the Christian Associations, the Christian Endeavor and the College, his addresses were very helpful, as were also his more private interviews and conversations, manifesting a living, vigorous, fruit-bearing faith and a clear conception of the call to foreign mission work. The principles governing true Christian service, at home or abroad, were set forth. Incidentally many pictures of African life were given the hearers.

BORN.

GARDNER.—To the wife of Jay M. Gardner, Portland, Oregon, a boy, Twelfth month 28th, 1902.

ISENHOUR.—At Whitestown, Ind., First month 31st, 1903, to Wilber H. and Cora E. Fraizer Isenhour, an eight-pound girl.

MARRIED.

ALLEN—HIATT.—At the home of the bride's father, Thomas Hiatt, near Ackworth, Iowa, First month 15th, 1903, Job H. Allen and Nettie V. Hiatt.

BARNETT—CATTERLIN.—At the home of the bride's parents, Winterset, Iowa, First month 21st, 1903, Ivey W. Barnett, of Earlham, Iowa, and Daisy Catterlin. Their future home will be at Velva, North Dakota.

KIRK—CHAMBERLIN.—At Newberg, Oregon, First month 9th, 1903, Rollin W. Kirk, principal of the Newberg Public School, to Helen Chamberlin, daughter of Mrs. Helen D. Hartford, State President of Oregon W. C. T. U., widely known for her temperance lectures. Their home will be Newberg, Oregon.

SOLBACK—PAYNE.—At Friends' Meeting House in Washington, D. C., on the 29th of First month, 1903, Mary Elizabeth Payne, of Washington Monthly Meeting, and George H. Solback, of Baltimore.

DIED.

BUTLER.—At Newberg, Oregon, Eleventh month 23d, 1902, Malissa Butler, aged 45 years. She was a birthright member of Friends, daughter of William C. and Sarah H. Morris, of Bloomingdale, Ind. She had for many years been a Christian, and lived that she might be ready for His summons.

COSAND.—At New London, Ind., Tenth month 23d, 1902, Nixon Cosand, aged 74 years. He was a birthright Friend and a member of Sugar River Monthly Meeting, Thorntown Quarter, at the time of his decease.

COURTNEY.—At her home in Excelsior Springs, Mo., First month 18th, 1903, Ina E., wife of Jessie E. Courtney, and daughter of Robert L. and Amy Betts, in her 28th year. She left a bright testimony of her acceptance of Jesus.

MARIS.—Julia A. Maris, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Achsa Morris, Newberg, Oregon, Tenth month 10th, 1902, aged 80 years. She was a lifelong member of Bloomingdale Monthly Meeting, Bloomingdale, Ind., but she spent most of the ten years since her husband's death in Oregon. It was a pleasure to see her active mind and beautiful spirit kept fresh by being in touch with the interests of the church, the temperance cause and in other lines of work.

OSBORN.—At Quaker Hill, N. Y., First month 19th, 1903, Raby Osborn, wife of Richard T. Osborn, aged 82 years. She was a beloved member and elder of Oblong Monthly Meeting. The 60th anniversary of their marriage was on the 23d of Eleventh month last.

RHOADS.—At his home in Haddonfield, N. J., First month 25th, 1903, Charles Rhoads, a beloved member and minister of Haddonfield Particular and Monthly Meeting, aged 75 years. His life was a shining example of devoted service to his Lord, and his last words were Hallelujahs to his king.

"Haworths in America." Edited by the President of the Haworth Association. Price, 25 cents. Wm. P. Haworth, 502 West Fifteenth Street, Kansas City, Mo.

Few people realize the vast amount of labor put forth in gathering data from old records and musty letter files which is necessary in the preparation of family history, and fewer people have the courage to carry forward the work to a finish, yet such is the task undertaken by the Haworth Association of America, and a large degree of success has already attended its efforts. The work was inaugurated by the present president of the association, Wm. P. Haworth, and its progress is largely due to his personal supervision and encouragement. Two national family reunions have been held which have been the means of bringing representatives of all the different branches of the family together, thus enabling them to supplement each other's work so that an interesting family history has been compiled.

The present volume contains a record of these national reunions, in which are

THE LUNCH QUESTION.

How a Big Chicago Firm Solved It.

So many employees "bolt the lunch" and eat what they should not, that they soon show the effect in nervousness and dyspepsia. This has attracted the attention of managers of the big stores and shops. In one Chicago firm an experiment on some of the girls resulted in a complete solution of the question.

The woman that made the experiment tells the tale as follows: "About a year ago I became alarmed at the state of my daughter's health. She was employed by a big firm here, and for some reason steadily lost flesh, grew very nervous, had no appetite, and could not sleep.

"Questioning her I found she ate but little lunch, for at that busy hour she was seldom served promptly, and the time being short she just 'bolted' the food and rushed back. She ate very light breakfasts, and I could see she suffered from lack of nourishment. I felt responsible for this, and finally got her some Grape-Nuts for breakfast.

"I also got a neat leather case holding two pint flasks. One I filled with milk, the other with cold Postum Coffee which had been properly made. She also carried a package of Grape-Nuts. The Postum she drank iced with a dash of lemon. She followed the Grape-Nuts with some fruit and this made up her lunch.

"In spite of the warm weather she improved greatly in two weeks' time. She gained in flesh, her nerves were steady and she slept sweetly at night. She never felt the old weakness from hunger.

"In a short time a few other girls in the office tried it, and the effect was so marked upon all that still others were persuaded. Finally a room was cleared out, and the one hundred and odd girls were served daily with Grape-Nuts and hot Postum. It was a revolution, but the manager saw the good result and adopted the plan, greatly to the benefit of the health of the employees and at a saving in expense." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

many valuable papers, giving the history of the movement and telling the story of the family from 1799, when "Geo., the emigrant," came to America with Wm. Penn, till the present time.

The Haworths have always been a substantial family among Friends, and while some of them have identified themselves with other denominations, yet the vast majority have remained loyal to Quaker principles. A number of them have been prominent workers in the church, and for this reason the present volume will be of interest to a wide number of readers and of great value to religious historians.

THINGS THAT CANNOT FAIL.

When the anchors that faith have cast
Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
To the things that cannot fail.

I know that right is right;
That it is not good to lie;
That love is better than spite,
And a neighbor than a spy.

I know that passion needs
The leash of sober mind;
I know that generous deeds
Some sure reward will find;

That the rulers must obey;
That the givers shall increase;
That duty lights the way
For the beautiful feet of Peace;

In the darkest night of the year,
When the stars have all gone out,
That courage is better than fear,
That faith is truer than doubt.

And fierce though the fiends may fight,
And long though the angel hide,
I know that truth and right
Have the universe on their side.

KNOWS NO DISTINCTION.

Rich and Poor Alike Suffer from Catarrh in This Climate.

All observant physicians have noticed the enormous increase in catarrhal diseases in recent years, and the most liberal and enlightened have cheerfully given their approval to the new internal remedy, Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, as the most successful and by far the safest remedy for catarrh yet produced.

One well-known catarrh specialist, as soon as he had made a thorough test of this preparation, discarded inhalers, washes and sprays, and now depends entirely upon Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in treating catarrh, whether in the head, throat or stomach.

Dr. Risdell says, "In patients who had lost the sense of smell entirely, and even where the hearing has begun to be affected from catarrh, I have had fine results after only a few weeks' use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets. I can only explain their action on the theory that the cleansing and antiseptic properties of the tablets destroy the catarrhal germs wherever found, because I have found the tablets equally valuable in catarrh of the throat and stomach as in nasal catarrh."

Dr. Estabrook says, "Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are especially useful in nasal catarrh and catarrh of the throat, clearing the membranes of mucus and speedily overcoming the hawking, coughing and expectorating."

Any sufferer from catarrh will find Stuart's Catarrh Tablets will give immediate relief and being in tablet form and pleasant to the taste, are convenient and always ready for use, as they can be carried in the pocket and used at any time as they contain no poisonous drugs, but only the cleansing, antiseptic properties of Eucalyptus, bark, blood root and Hydrastin.

All druggists sell the tablets at 50 cents for complete treatment.

He who would be strong in resisting public evils must see to it that his own personal and private record is pure.

*I heard a star at morning sing—
A little, soft, six-sided star;
It seemed to sing of everything
Impossible and pure and far.*

*I said, if only I might live
A little nearer to that ray,
If I might only climb to it
A little nearer every day.*

*God said, “There is a way less hard:
That star is not so undefiled
As one that shall be born to you—
The spirit of a little child.”*

*O little star that came to me

Nearer remains that morning star
Than you to me, than me to you.*

Events and Comments.

A heavy snow storm, amounting to a blizzard, visited several of the Rocky Mountain States last week. Traffic was delayed in many sections, and the loss of live stock was great.

The price of garden seeds has advanced to a higher point than at any other time for more than thirty years, on account of last year's unfavorable weather, and this may have some effect on the price of garden stuffs next fall.

When the steamship Minneapolis reached London, England, last week, her passengers brought ashore copies of the "Inter-Continental Wireless Daily," the first newspaper ever published at sea. Those on board the Minneapolis got the news of the world in brief form each day by means of Marconi's wireless telegraph system.

A bill has just passed the South Carolina Legislature, after a contest extending over some years, which prohibits the employment in factories and mines of children under 10 years of age after Fifth month 1st next; of children under 11 years after Fifth month 1st, 1904, and of children under 12 years after Fifth month 1st, 1905.

During the fiscal year 1882 immigrants into the United States numbered 788,992, and the nearest approach to that figure before or since has been made in the past calendar year, there being from all countries 522,573 immigrants. The present incoming is more than three times what it was five and six years ago, and more than twice what it was for the average of the two years 1900 and 1899.

The railroad companies that penetrate the Southwest are working up systematically an immigration movement into Missouri, Louisiana and Texas from the upper part of the Mississippi and Ohio valleys. The New Orleans press regards it as a counterpoise to the movement of the northwestern farmers into Canada. The cheap farm lands of Louisiana and Texas are exceedingly plentiful and fertile, and they could easily sustain a much larger population.

After more than three months of tedious and strenuous investigation the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission adjourned its public hearings on the 13th, and began its private sessions for the consideration of the mountain of recorded testimony before it in Washington, D. C., on the 17th. It is possible that it will call before it there representatives of the parties in interest to add to its information on certain points. Chairman Gray has announced that it will be at least a month before the Commission will be able to make even a preliminary decision.

The tide of public sentiment in Pennsylvania against legalizing the sale of intoxicating liquors in public parks, aroused by the introduction of a bill into the State Legislature providing for the sale of such liquors in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, is said to have been responsible for the death of the measure. It is also an encouraging evidence that the good people of the State are not all asleep when issues involving civic righteousness call for their action.

The new Department of Commerce, which has just been formed, with its secretary as a member of the Cabinet, and which comprises twelve bureaus, will have the unique distinction of dealing with the largest commercial interests of the world. In domestic exports, in manufactures, in transportation, and in internal commerce, the United States is at the head of the world's list of great nations. Some figures just compiled by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, which by the new law becomes a part of the Department, estimate the internal commerce of the country at twenty billions of dollars, or equal to the entire international commerce of the world.

Protocols providing for the immediate raising of the Venezuelan blockade, and for the reference of the question of preferential treatment of the claims of the allies against Venezuela to The Hague arbitration tribunal, were signed by Herbert W. Bowen on behalf of Venezuela, and the representatives of each of the allies, at Washington, D. C., on the 13th inst. By the provisions of these preliminary protocols, which have required more than three weeks of constant negotiations, Venezuela makes two distinct gains, the immediate raising of a blockade from which she has been suffering for some weeks, and the return of all her vessels, war and merchant, which have been captured by the allied fleet.

Great Britain, Germany and Italy receive payments of £5,500 each. Germany in addition will receive five monthly payments until the full amount paid her in advance aggregates $340,000. As a guaranty for the satisfaction of their claims, Minister Bowen pledges the allies a share with the other creditor nations in 30 per cent. of the customs receipts of the two ports of La Guayra and Porto Cabello. This percentage will be set aside in the Venezuelan Treasury until The Hague tribunal shall decide whether it shall be distributed without preference among the claimant nations, or whether the allied Powers of Great Britain, Germany and Italy shall receive preferential payments.

THE BEATITUDE TO THOSE WHO MOURN.

It used to be held by them of old time that prosperity was a sure sign of divine favor. It was, under this theory, staggering to the faith of a good man when misfortune came upon him, and from the lips of the most saintly the questioning cry sometimes escaped, "Dost thou well, Lord?" It was almost as difficult, too, to understand how it could be that the wicked should ever flourish like a green bay-tree. Little by little it grew clear to the most spiritual Hebrews that the theory was not true. They could not make it fit the facts of the world. Bad men often prospered and good men were often overtaken by adversity. In Job, in some of the Psalms, and in the messages of the great Prophets, there is a dawning of the true solution of this baffling problem.

Christ reverses the whole conception of antiquity. He nowhere makes prosperity a sign of God's favor. God sends His favors of nature—rain and sun and harvest—alike on the evil and on the good. A man who fares sumptuously is discovered to be out of the kingdom, and a loathsome beggar is in it. A man whose barns were bursting with crops was pronounced lost because he was not rich in God. A poor widow whose last mite was dedicated to the Lord was recognized as a recipient of divine favor. Outward prosperity, outward adversity, is in the Gospel never a test of the right or the wrong inward state. But Christ does not stop here. He goes very much farther. In the list of His "blesseds" the balance swings in favor of those who are having a hard time. There is not one beatitude for the worldly prosperous, not one congratulation for the man whose life is soft-cushioned.

He picks out, too, just the condition which seems most undesirable, for His blessing: "Those that mourn." What an enormous group it is! Losses and crosses, pains and burdens, heartaches and bereavements, empty chairs and broken faiths. How many are living with some window to their life darkened by one of these shadows. The tale is so long and the colors so deep that some even cry out, "It is better not to be born. This is not a good world." Let us hear Christ talk. He does not overlook the woe. He never won His happy view by refusing to see the hard facts. He knew them all, and saw how deep they went into life. It was He who cried, "My God, why hast thou forsaken me!"

But He knows that the life which can be truly called "blessed" can never be made by an easy process. You cannot polish diamonds with soft white chalk. Their beauty comes out only when they are rubbed by some material which will cut their surface and make them a glorious medium for the light. There seems to be no easier way to make a saint—a true life. If no hard paths are traveled, if no heavy burdens are borne, if no difficulties are fought, the life lacks fiber and power. We instinctively go for help and comfort to those who have kept the faith through deep testings and in hard experiences. When we hear a man say, "I reckon that sufferings are not worthy to be compared to the glory," we want to know whether he speaks out of the authority of experience, and the moment we are convinced that he has come through into the light we believe in him.

The beatitude to those who mourn means at once that God's purpose is very large toward us. On the theory that prosperity is a test of the goodness of life most of us would refuse to admit that it is good. The test is infinitely deeper. Life is a workshop for making spiritual beings. Living is tremendously significant business. It is so natural to watch for the easy chances—to slide along, as the boys say, with a "hitch" behind somebody else. No, that does not make a spiritual life. You must expect that there will be deep wading. You must look for bitter cups, but you must never miss this supreme comfort that if your soul is throbbing with the love of God, and your chief aim is to be one of His children in very fact you will be able to turn the hardest obstacle in your path into a stepping stone, and your mournings will soften into hallelujahs.

A LENTEN GOSPEL CAMPAIGN.

WE feel hearty sympathy with the work which is being done by National Committee of the Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign, and we are united with them in their spirit and purpose. We would gladly join in any effective gospel campaign at any season of the year, but we would do nothing to encourage the keeping of Lent. It is true, as they say, that Christians are more and more observing Lent. But it is a fact for which we are sorry. The keeping of Lent has a decided tendency to concentrate positive religion into forty days of the year. It is supposed that one may indulge in almost any frivolity, or run to any lengths of worldly enjoyment, if one only scrupulously cuts all these things off and does some disagreeable charity work in these special forty days. It is our old enemy, "the double standard." "I cannot do it, because it is Lent," is a phrase we frequently hear. There cannot be any satisfactory Christian life on such a basis, for sooner or later life sags down to its lowest standard. Friends have always held (and may they always continue to hold) that every day should be as good as the best day, and every activity as high as the highest. If we can join the other churches in any way to spread the kingdom let us do it, but let us not sanction the idea that a different standard of life should prevail for the special forty days called Lent than during the three hundred and twenty-five days which are left.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

As we reported last week, Friends in Indiana are exerting their influence against the Brewers' bill, which is at present before the Legislature of that State. It is a bill prepared at the request of the brewers of that State to amend the remonstrance section of the Nicholson law so that it will be easy for saloons to secure licenses in wards and townships in which the majority of the voters are opposed to the liquor traffic. A paper was drawn up, remonstrating against the bill, and signed by Timothy Nicholson, Francis W. Thomas, Amos K. Hallowell and William Trueblood. Printed copies were given to all the members of the two branches, and it was read in a careful and weighty manner in both House and Senate. Francis W. Thomas offered prayer at the opening of the session in the House on the morning that the paper was read. When the Brewers' bill came up for vote it was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 65 to 27. The same paper which urged the defeat of the Brewers' bill commended the bill to establish juvenile courts, the bill forbidding saloons within one mile of soldiers' homes, the bill providing an asylum for inebriates, and other desirable bills.

We would not willingly pass over without comment the death of Edward Richie Strawbridge, of Philadelphia. At the age of 36 he found himself the head of the great department store known as Strawbridge & Clothier. He was faithful to all his duties as a business man, watching for every opportunity to increase his proper business as a man should, but in all this complex work which falls to the head of such a great house, he kept the life and spirit of a meek and simple Christian. His faith was as pure and noble as though he never had the jarring perplexities of his busy life. He found time always for his religious needs. With true modesty he kept his gifts and benefactions to himself as far as he could, but those who know realize that his soul was a liberal one. What an example to the present-day man of business.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

"THAT I WILL STRIVE TO DO."

BY LINDLEY D. CLARK.

Wu Ting Fang, ex-Minister from China to this country, makes a very suggestive remark in a late magazine article, in which he charges the spirit of activity and expansion which characterizes our nation to the positive "Do" of the Golden Rule. He says that the rule of Confucius, "Do nothing to another that you would not wish him to do to you" is better, because it leads to no intermeddling with the affairs of others, and leaves each one free to go on his own way so long as no one else is injured.

When we look at China, with her thousands of years of history, and her unchanging civilization, we may wonder whether Confucius directed or merely echoed the spirit of his race. So, when we see the progressive character and the aggressiveness of the Aryan, we may question whether they are racial characteristics or whether they do indeed result from the stimulating "Do" of our Lord's rule of life. To attempt to answer this inquiry would be to undertake a student's task, but an illustration is at hand that is at least suggestive.

Some years ago a converted Hindoo was introduced to a meeting of clergymen in the city of Philadelphia. In the course of the introduction his friend remarked, "If ever any of us had a doubt as to the value of foreign missions, that doubt would surely be dispelled as we see before us this evening something of the results of missionary effort." The Hindoo came forward with a grace and dignity inherited from two thousand years of cultured ancestors, and said, "If ever I had the least doubt as to the importance of foreign missions, that doubt would vanish as I see before me, with all the marks of culture and refinement, men whose forefathers lived in caves and forests, clad in the skins of wild beasts, hardly more savage than themselves, while my ancestors, their contemporaries, dwelt in cities and practiced the arts of a highly-developed civilization, esteeming themselves and being esteemed by those about them as gods. To your forefathers the gospel was brought by the early missionaries, and this is the change that is wrought."

As a reminder of our own grounds for thankfulness and for a deep feeling of obligation, this reply is almost unsurpassable. If it was meant as a retort, it would at first seem most effective; but, after all, what a confession it involves! Through all the ages of struggle in Aryan Europe, Aryan India stood aloof. Within her own borders were thousands who were beneath the notice of her wise and great; much less would she send to the wild races of the West missionaries to carry the "light of Asia." It was Christ, not Buddha, who taught that God made of one all nations of the earth, and gave the commandment, "Go ye into all the world and teach."

The spirit of Christianity is not essentially meditative and introspective; nor is it quiescent and fatalistic. It is the spirit of an active love that is not content without manifesting itself. Our Pattern "went about doing good." His test of friendship is obedience in doing. Paul's first question was, "What wilt thou have me to do?" and his life was full of an activity that imitated that of his Master. Whether we observe individuals or nations, we find that it is the most Christian that are the most active for good. America and England lead in the efforts for the world's enlightenment. The great evangelists are the active, aggressive workers. The Golden Rule is at least in accord with Christ's other words and His life example.

We are pledged to action,—not, indeed, doing for the mere sake of doing. "Creaturely activity" stands for a real danger, though it may well be that our Church has suffered more from a fear of it than from an indulgence in it. Of this we may rest assured, that our purpose to strive to do for Him is in harmony with all that we know of Him who went from nights of prayer to full and busy days.

FUEL AND FIRE FOR PRAYER MEETINGS.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Over a large part of our country there has been a serious apprehension of a famine of fuel. To the familiar and stereotyped question, "What shall we get to eat and drink?" has been added the questions, "Where shall we find a supply of fuel?" and "How shall we keep our houses warm?" Christian brethren, if the want of physical heat in our dwellings is a calamity, it is equally a calamity to have a famine of spiritual fuel in our prayer rooms. I know of no surer thermometer for the average church than its prayer meeting. Frigidity there pretty certainly indicates a cold and unfruitful church; it is at once the cause and the effect of a spiritual declension. If the appointed place for meeting the Master and for fellowship with each other and for invoking divine blessings is well nigh deserted; if the prayers offered are only from the throat outward, and without any pith, or point, or purpose; if formality chills the tongues and the hearts, then the pastor of such a frigid flock has abundant cause for discouragement and despair. The worst thing of all is that the conduit-pipe of spiritual blessings becomes frozen up.

Whenever a prayer meeting has become cold, formal and lifeless, the first step is to bring in fuel. Those who attend the meeting must bring it. A devotional meeting without any purpose is a pious sham. It must have a meaning, a definite aim, and Christian people must go there with just as definite an idea of what they are after as brokers have when they go to a stock board, or voters have when they go to the ballot-box. We never can drift aimlessly into spiritual blessings. "Why am I here to-night? What soul-want have I brought here to be supplied? What thought or word have I brought here as my contribution to this meeting?" These are the questions that every honest Christian ought to ask of himself or herself. The leader ought also to prepare himself for his work as carefully as a minister prepares to preach. Many a prayer meeting is ruined by utter aimlessness on the part of the leader; and the people become just as "scattering" in their remarks or their petitions. One good method of correcting this vice is to select some important practical topic—which may be announced on the previous Sabbath, or be presented by the leader. This tends to directness in speech and prayer; this concentrates the meeting; there is some profitable instruction afforded, as well as a kindling of devotional fervor. The praying and speaking are "at a mark."

Prayer meetings should never be frozen by formality. They are family gatherings; let every one of the household, old or young, male or female, be allowed to bear his or her part. If anyone monopolizes too much time, let the pastor or the leader kindly admonish such offender. Absolute freedom should be encouraged—in exhortation, in confession of sin, in asking for prayers, in stating questions of conscience, in personal experiences, and in suggesting lines of Christian effort. Intellect is not so much in demand as heart. Pastors had better not turn devotional meetings into preaching services; they are the people's meetings for their spiritual development and for their direct personal converse with God.

Prayer—and of the right kind—is the main thing in these family gatherings of Christ's household. But as when a family hold a reunion at a Thanksgiving Day dinner, each one contributes the fuel of his or her personal experiences and feelings to the warmth of the feast, just in like manner the individual members of the church ought to bring their increment to the interest of the prayer meeting. Much is made in the New Testament of witness-bearing. Those early meetings for social worship which Paul and Peter and John and Silas held must have been largely occupied with personal testimonies. They testified of the saving grace of Jesus Christ. What a prodigious power there is in the narrative of our actual and deep experience of Christ's goodness and indwelling grace! No skeptic can answer that.

There is a sadly large number of tongue-tied church members. They can talk fast enough elsewhere—in a social company, or at the table, or behind a counter in a store or a shop. They can use their tongues when they want to gain a customer, or secure a bargain, or a vote. It is only when a good word is to be said for their Master and His cause that their lips are sealed; or if they speak at all, it is too often in a formal and half-hearted fashion. The fuel they bring is only water-soaked wood, or burnt-out cinders.

When a church is under the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit, there is no place that feels the baptism of fire more than the devotional meetings. The "gift of tongues" descends there abundantly. New converts give their testimonies; restored backsliders make penitent confessions, and a single sentence or two spoken by a new recruit thrills an assembly more than an elaborate sermon. "Come aboard, all hands!" I once heard a young sailor shout out in a revival meeting; "whosoever will, let him come and be saved—captain and mate, cook and cabin boy!" That nautical paraphrase by the enthusiastic "blue-jacket" gave a fresh idea of the comprehensiveness of the gospel invitation.

This leads me to say that all the revivals in the churches under my pastoral charge began in the prayer meeting; certainly the first tokens of them appeared there. Let it not be forgotten that as all the coal in the mines of Pennsylvania is of no use until it is kindled, so all our methods and measures and movements are of no avail without the "power from on high." We may bring in the fuel, but the baptism of fire is from heaven. The seed of fire is often in one or two, or in half a dozen hearts; then the flame spreads. The most powerful revival my beloved church ever experienced began in this house where I am writing, and at a prayer meeting held on a bitter mid-winter evening. When the spark kindles, then we must fan the flame; never despise the day of small things.

Bonfires of pine shavings and tar barrels are sometimes lighted by human hands and make a transient blaze; but "the Lord is not in the fire." Prayers for the Holy Spirit, working with the Holy Spirit, and with the simple desire to honor Christ and save souls is the only sure way to secure the indispensably precious blessing. Bring in the fuel, and beseech the infinitely loving Jesus to kindle the fire. The new year opens with a "week of prayer." Follow it with many weeks of praying, giving, working, and clean, honest Christian living. God never broke His promises. Pray without ceasing; labor without ceasing; and, above all, quench not the Holy Spirit!

Some Views on Present Topics.

THE POSITION AND DUTIES OF ELDERS.*

BY JOHN ELLWOOD PAIGE.

Your architect will give you the plan of your dwelling complete in all its details; the outside appearance will be beautiful, symmetrical and in keeping with its surroundings; all the interior appointments will be such as shall minister to your taste, your convenience and your comfort; the plan, so far as it goes, is entirely satisfactory. But if you fail to provide the kind of material that his specifications demand, or if your artisans bungle in their task, the finished product will fall many points short of the original design.

The Uniform Discipline gives us a most excellent elder on paper—an elder in sharp contrast with that officer as he has been set up in the mind of the average Quaker in times past. Too largely has the impression gone abroad that your elder is a sleuth—keen-scented for heresy, keen-eyed for whatever may be amiss in doctrine, in manner, in life in the minister, particularly the minister in embryo, and when he finds it (and people generally find what they persistently search for), he pounces upon his victim with a vigor in which the element of mercy is conspicuously wanting.

He has been regarded as a supervisor of the ministry, and we have sometimes repeated the folly of the early disciples and questioned among ourselves which is the greater, the elder or the minister, forgetting, possibly, for the moment that service is the gauge of greatness as laid down by Jesus Christ.

To be sure, the elder, if he have that essential requisite of his office, discernment, will feel most keenly every discordant note that jars upon the harmonious working of the Spirit's power, and his anointed wisdom and skill will be taxed to their utmost to effect a remedy, and even then in the application of the remedy somebody will be hurt—himself quite as severely as any one—he must use the knife, but in doing it he summons all his skill, and thinks less of the present pain than the hoped-for result, which result is the saving of the member as well as saving the body of which the member is a part. Our peculiar method of worship, giving as it does opportunity for promiscuous speaking, furnishes occasion for the exercise of that portion of the eldership referred to; and it will always be so as long as people's minds are not well balanced, as long as nervous emotion is mistaken for religious fervor, and the wisdom of men with its characteristics, for the wisdom "which is from above," which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits. Safety in dealing with cases of this kind lies in the elder being very close to the Master, and being filled with His spirit. It may be very important that his brain be clear upon the delicate points of theological belief, but it is immeasurably more important that his spiritual ear be attuned to detect without mistake the ring of the true metal.

Fortunately the functions of the elder, as thus far outlined, form a part, and a very small part, of his duties. His work is that of building up along all lines. Living close to the heart of the Master on the one hand, he should be very, very close in unity, sympathy and loving helpfulness to the heart of the people on the other. Especially close should be the bond of union between the elder and the minister. The minister should be able to feel, as happily he often does, that the elder is one upon whom he can rely—one in whom he feels that he has a sympathizing friend, as well as a wise counsellor. His relation to the minister ought to be supplementary as well as advisory; nor should this be confined to the time or the matter of public worship.

There are a thousand ways in which he may co-operate—notably in lending his sympathy to such as are in trouble, speaking a word in season to them that are weary, entering into the hopes and aspirations of the younger members, seeking by tactful and unobtrusive methods to promote and maintain harmony in the body, giving a hand of hearty welcome to those who are standing on the outer border, letting them know of his deep personal interest in them, and his all-absorbing desire that they may get the very most out of life and become assured of an unfaltering hope of the life to come. Like the minister, he is to feel that his mission is to serve—to give the best energies of his being for others, knowing that in thus doing he is serving the Lord Christ.

In the public meeting for worship the elder's part is no idle one; he is not placed upon a pedestal to be looked upon by the congregation as the exponent of dignity and solidity, but both dignified and solid he will be if he magnifies his office, and if he have a right comprehension of the exalted nature of religious worship. He will be deeply engaged in prayer, for himself, for the congregation and for those upon whom the ministry of the word chiefly devolves; and such prayer will be very likely upon occasion to find vocal utterance. The minister is keenly sensitive to the spiritual atmosphere by which he is surrounded, and he has a right to expect that his associates in the ministry, if any are present, and the elders, will be a tower of strength on his right hand and on his left. There is a certain unexplainable, but none the less real, wireless telegraphy in the ideal Friends' meeting; it runs from heart to heart, and the harmony of the service is broken only when the current is obstructed. This same harmony in service is something admirable, oftentimes wonderful, and it does not come solely because some one has the gift of adaptation—it is a "unity of exercise," and it will always exist when the voice of the Spirit is correctly heard and closely followed. I very much doubt whether in a brief hour of worship a variety of unrelated subjects is in order. It is not infrequently the case that a word from the elder in life and power opens the way for the minister and gives him the freedom which he could not otherwise have had. It is often the case that people get in the way by unwise utterances; it is possible that they may be equally in the way by withholding more than is meet.

The Uniform Discipline makes the recommendation that the elders from time to time give public endorsement to the minister's message—a very wise suggestion, provided it is wisely carried out; this, however, was, of course, presupposed in making the suggestion. It is a somewhat delicate thing to follow a minister when his service has evidently taken hold of the heart of the congregation, and one needs to be very sure of his ground before attempting it. If it is brief, well chosen, thoroughly adapted and really called for, it will be a fit setting to a rare jewel; otherwise an ugly excrescence. I doubt if there is a minister who is listening to this paper whose spirit has not at some time dropped into his boots, when he has been given a message as he feels straight from headquarters, a message which evidently found its way to the inner sanctuary of his hearers' souls, and then was quickly followed by something weak, vapid, inopportune. He feels sure that if his own service has accomplished in any degree that whereunto it was sent, it has been in spite of the addendum and not because of any helpfulness from it.

There is another thing in which the good offices of the elder should be brought to bear so far as they can be without danger, viz.: that in turning away from an old practice that would seem to idolize silence as an end, we do not fly to the other extreme of leaving no opportunity for utilizing it as a means. We need the little intervals of quiet for thought and collective meditation, and it is a significant fact that many wise and thoughtful Christian people who have been accustomed to forms of worship as practiced by other churches have felt a yearning of heart for precisely what the Friend's manner of worship—as held in theory, and, I am thankful to say, in many places in practice—can furnish, a collective communion in collective silence. The elder may do something at least in seeing that this part of worship is neither overlooked nor overworked.

The minister needs our prayers, the people need our prayers, but don't let it be forgotten that the elder needs the prayers of the people; if he is strong he needs your prayers that his strength be judiciously expended; if he is weak, he needs your prayers that he may take a firm grip on the infinite strength of God; he needs your prayers that his patience may have its perfect work; patience with those who set at nought his counsel, patience with those who slight his entreaties, patience with those whose volunteered suggestions his judgment does not allow him to follow, patience with those who urge drastic measures whenever their fastidious ears are offended. He needs to know how to yield gracefully as well as to insist vigorously; in short, he needs to be swallowed up in the sweet will of God, whatever may become of his own will.

PAUL AND APOLLOS.

Acts 18: 24 to 19: 6.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him.—Luke 11: 13.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Second mo. 23.—The homeward journey. Acts 18: 18-23.
Third-day, Second mo. 24.—Paul and Apollos. Acts 18: 24-28.
Fourth-day, Second mo. 25.—Paul and Apollos. Acts 19: 1-7.
Fifth-day, Second mo. 26.—Simon's sin. Acts 8: 14-25.
Sixth-day, Second mo. 27.—The promise. Acts 1: 4-9.
Seventh-day, Second mo. 28.—The pentecostal outpouring. Acts 2: 1-13.
First-day, Third mo. 1.—Gentiles receive the Spirit. Acts 10: 34-48.

The lessons now return to the Acts, and take up the narrative of Paul's second missionary journey. In Lesson 7 we left Paul in Corinth, preaching and teaching in the house of Justus, near the synagogue. His ministry was greatly blessed. So successful was he that, as at Thessalonica, the Jews were greatly displeased and tried to bring him under the ban of the Roman law. But the Roman Proconsul was a shrewd man and saw through their plans, and would have nothing to do with them. Paul continued his preaching and missionary work until he felt that the time to leave had come. The interesting details of his journey, given in verses 18 to 23, should be read.

Paul hastened to Jerusalem, which he reached in due time, thus completing his second missionary journey. He soon went to Antioch, and, staying there probably only a short time, he started on his third great missionary journey. This was probably some time in A.D. 53, or 54.

The writer of the Acts now gives in parenthesis an account of Apollos.

24. "Apollos." Nothing more is known of him than is here told. Luther suggested that he might be the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews. Apollos certainly fulfills the requirements far better than most. Alexandria was a great center of Judaism, and here was made the Greek translation of the Old Testament, known as the Septuagint, made about the third century before Christ. "Learned." Perhaps "eloquent" is better. The word includes both meanings.

25. "The things of the Lord." "Concerning Jesus." Revised Version. "Knowing only the baptism of John." How this should be is strange, especially as he is said to have taught "carefully (accurately) the things concerning Jesus." Revised Version. No thoroughly satisfactory explanation has been given. The one clear thing is that told in the next verse.

26. In the best manuscripts Priscilla is put first. She was evidently the more important of the two. "Perfectly." "Carefully." Revised Version. The same word (in the comparative degree) as that used of Apollos (verse 25).

27. "Wrote, exhorting." Better as in Revised Version. "Encouraged him and wrote." That is, "united with his concern and gave him a minute."

28. "Powerfully confuted the Jews." Revised Version.

19: 1. The narrative comes back to Paul. Ephesus was to Asia Minor what Corinth was to Greece.

2, 3. "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" Revised Version. There is no doubt that this is the correct translation of the Greek, which will not bear that given in the Authorized Version. "Nay we did not so much as hear whether the Holy Ghost was given." Revised Version. This translation conforms to that of the passage in John (7: 39) where the original is the same.

What these disciples had not heard of was, apparently, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost and on subsequent occasions. They did not know that the prophecy of Joel had been fulfilled. As in the case of Apollos, there is no very satisfactory explanation why these men having known so much, should not know more. They may have been converted by Christians who left Palestine before the Day of Pentecost, or as some think they were disciples of John looking for the Messiah and ignorant that He had come. This latter is rather in accord with verse 4. "Into." Revised Version. This is the correct translation and means more than "in."

4. "John indeed preached repentance and a Saviour to come; but the Messiah whom he announced has appeared in Jesus, and you are now to believe in him as John directed." Paul was evidently surprised that they should claim to be disciples and yet not know of the bestowal of the great gift of the Holy Spirit.

5. "Baptized into." Revised Version. "Of the Lord Jesus." There is no record in the New Testament of any one being baptized in the name of "Father, Son and Holy Spirit." It is as here, "into the name of the Lord Jesus," or some similar phrase. It was the confession that He was accepted as Lord and Christ. Compare Gal. 3: 27.

6. "Laid his hands upon them," etc. The gift was bestowed through Paul, as was the case on other occasions, and with other evangelists and teachers. There is nothing to show that this was a gift to be handed down by succession. These men received the confirmation in their hearts, and gave outward manifestation in the gift of tongues, and prophecy (preaching), speaking under the immediate inspiration of God.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Do not be discouraged because all have not the whole truth.
2. Be willing to be instructed.

LESSONS FROM THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT; WHAT CHRIST TEACHES ABOUT BLESSEDNESS.

Matt. 5: 1-12.

Second-day, Second mo. 23.—Rich toward God. Isa. 66: 1, 2.

Third-day, Second mo. 24.—The oil of joy. Isa. 61: 1-3.

Fourth-day, Second mo. 25.—The inheritance of the meek. Ps. 37: 7-11.

Seventh-day, Second mo. 28.—Whoso shall see God. Ps. 24: 3-5.

But one teacher that the world has ever known could venture to proclaim such conditions of happiness as those our Lord sets up. He who could empty Himself of the eternal glory and look past the unutterable anguish and sorrow of the years on earth to "the joy that was set before Him,"—only such divinely wise and far-seeing Teacher could declare the blessedness of self-sacrifice and humility and apparent defeat.

The world says they are the successful and happy ones who are strong to hold their own, spirited, quick to resent insult and able to compel retraction, who can set walls of marble and defenses of gold and fine raiment between themselves and the chill and hardness, the sadness and suffering of this existence. Jesus says that the meek and sorrowing, those who are full of compassion for others, willing to endure reproach and persecution, are the truly blessed. By His standard, indeed, they must be the only happy ones, for if happiness is found in such company as He describes, it is hard to conceive its finding a home with the haughty and self-centered and violent.

Like every gift of God, these blessings are for those about us as well as for ourselves. Out of a realized poverty which leads us to dependence upon the prolific Source of all good, springs a tree of blessings. Upon its alternating branches hang the fruits of comfort for my mourning and of meekness before my brethren, of the supply for all my spiritual needs and out-breathing mercy toward the sinful and erring round about; of the glorious vision of God as the reward of the pure in heart, and the glorious ministry of peace to a struggling, aggrandizing world; while the crowning gift is, not popularity with men, but acceptance with God.

Who but Christ could draw from weakness and humility such a store of riches? Exceedingly abundant above all our thoughts are His bestowments, and we are utterly unable to compensate. There is no wiser answer to the Psalmist's question than the one he himself gave when he asked: "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me?" and answered by pledging a full acceptance of the gifts and a perfect obedience to the will of His benefactor.

PHILADELPHIA FRIENDS IN MISSION WORK.

[A brief statement of the work of the Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia for the year 1902.]

The year about to close has been one of progress spiritually as well as intellectually, although we have had our share in the disasters from storm and fire. In the autumn a violent storm of wind and rain damaged the mission buildings in Tokyo to the extent of about four hundred dollars, and in Twelfth month a worse calamity visited us in the total destruction by fire of the Girl's School building, and class work was suspended for a month until arrangements could be made for its continuance.

Our missionaries, five in number, have faithfully been at work educating and moulding the lives of those placed under their care, and we hear through letters of the increased attendance at the schools, and of the earnest inquiries after truth among the young men and women with whom they have been associated. Valuable assistance has been rendered by Anna C. Hartshorne, who has taught one morning a week, thereby giving Gilbert Bowles and Sarah Ellis more time for the study of the language.

The enrollment in the Girls' School the past year has been sixty-eight, with an attendance of fifty-four, and there have been more applications for scholarships than could be supplied. Four graduations were reported in Sixth month.

In Fourth month Sarah Ellis, of Ames, Iowa, was accepted as a missionary to Tokyo, where she arrived early in the summer. She has taken up her work with deep interest, and is teaching several classes. She is wisely spending much time in acquiring the language.

Large and interesting meetings have been held through the year in Tokyo, Mito, Ishioka and Tsuchiura. There have been six applications for evangelists to work on behalf of Friends, and an appeal has come to the Board to send workers to needy districts. The annual expense would amount to two hundred and fifty dollars. The Board has not been able to respond to this appeal. Does not some one feel called to take up this work?

A long-felt need for books to be used in the work of the Japan Missions was partially supplied this summer. About two hundred volumes were sent, consisting of Bibles, Gospels, Friends' writings and books of reference.

Gurney and Elizabeth Binford, supported by Canada Friends, have been carrying on the work in Mito with unfailing earnestness. A new building has been purchased for them nearer the central part of the town than the old site, and here they can continue their work to better advantage.

Two evangelists are supported this year by the W. F. M. A. of Canada and one by the W. F. M. A. of New York. The Indiana Board continues to support a Bible reader and the "Earnest Workers" the mission at Tsuchiura. The co-operation of all these organizations we greatly appreciate.

Thirty-five children have received support in the day school in Ramallah, Syria, and one in the Training Home at that place. About eighty girls have been supported at the day school in Ras-el-Metu, Syria, and three children in the Training Homes. A residuary legacy of Rachel Grellet, amounting to $7,343.05, has been received and invested, adding materially to the income of the Association.

All the Branches—Philadelphia, Germantown, Haverford, Downingtown and Trenton—report regular meetings held and continued interest in the work in Japan, Syria, India and Mexico. Two children's bands were added the past year, making a total of six in the Association. Beside the money contributions, the Branches have given generously to the missionary boxes, and have sent leaflets, as well as papers, on Temperance and Peace, which speaks well for the committees having these departments in charge. Visiting missionaries have been a source of much encouragement and inspiration to them, and letters from the field have been gladly received.

One hundred and fifty dollars have been raised and sent to Daniel Oliver for the translation into Arabic and circulation of Jane Budge's book on "Kindness to Animals." The committee having this in charge are now soliciting money for the publication of a third edition of Charles Foster's "Story of the Gospel," which is also much valued in Syria.

It is with sorrow that we record the loss by death of a valued member of our Board, Abby A. Longstreth. Her wise counsel, her sweet and loving sympathy, and her joyfulness in every earthly service, have made a lasting impress upon those who were associated with her in this work.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF THE FRIENDS' AFRICA INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

The Board of the Friends' African Industrial Mission held its annual meeting at the home of the secretary in Cleveland, O., January 16th and 17th, 1903. Members were present from New England, New York, Western, Indiana and Ohio Yearly Meetings, while absent members in other yearly meetings wrote expressing their interest in the work.

All the officers were re-elected except a few vice-presidents, who were changed. Interesting reports were received from the field, full extracts of which will be given in another article that Friends may see how their efforts are being blessed.

The Board believed the time had come for the mission to be permanently organized, and also recognized the Master's wisdom in His choice of the men who are now on the field, for Willis R. Hotchkiss is especially qualified both by experience and by natural ability for mastering the language and reducing it to writing, which work, with the daily evangelistic service, occupies a large part of his time; likewise the long and thorough business training of Edgar T. Hole prepared him for the position of superintendent and treasurer, to which he was appointed; and the mechanical ability of Arthur R. Chilson makes him especially useful in the industrial department.

On account of the urgent need for medical assistance, the Board, after careful and prayerful deliberation, decided to send as soon as possible Dr. Elisha Blackburn and his wife, Virginia Hole, of Salem, O. Adelaide W. and Leona May, the wife and child of Edgar T. Hole, will accompany them.

Vermillion Grove Quarterly Meeting of Western Yearly Meeting have been supporting Emery J. Rees and wife in an independent work in South Africa, but felt that more permanent results would be attained if their missionaries were associated with others under a regularly incorporated board of the yearly meetings. After consulting Emery J. Rees and wife and receiving their approval, the Board of the quarterly meeting proposed that Emery J. Rees and wife work under the auspices of the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission, Vermillion Grove Quarterly Meeting continuing their support. The Board of the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission having previously consulted its missionaries, carefully considered this proposition, unanimously accepted it and took steps to accomplish the change as soon as possible. The treasurer's report showed enough funds on hand to supply the present demands; but, since the work is rapidly growing, the Board were glad to note that $550 are pledged to be paid each year for the next five years, and they hope this amount will be largely increased, so that the multiplying needs may be met. Other young people who are called and well equipped, are asking to go to this field, so the Board is ready to receive the offers of individuals or groups of individuals who wish to support missionaries.

Throughout the session all present felt their utter dependence on Him who is infinite in wisdom and power, and gratefully acknowledged His guidance.

With a feeling of thanksgiving because Friends are permitted to share in promoting the evangelization of Africa, the Board adjourned to meet in one year, "if the Lord wills."

A pamphlet will soon be published, containing the latest information of the work, map, pictures, etc. Any one desiring this will please address the secretary, EMMA B. MALONE, 702 East Prospect Street, Cleveland, O.

JULIA B. ESTES DEAD.

At Nankin, China, Twelfth month 4th, Julia B., wife of Wilbur A. Estes, passed away. The first adult member of the Nankin Friends' Mission to be called into the immediate presence of the Lord, it was felt that even here she had known much of the glory of the Unseen, for, during the three years and more that she lived amongst us, her life had the sweet aroma of the fruits of the Spirit.

Apt and conscientious in the study of the language, she early commenced to use it in prayer and praise and exhortation, and in the power of the Spirit was a great blessing to the Chinese and a great encouragement to her co-laborers. The deep peace that ruled in her heart was so apparent that one of the Chinese women, in giving her first impression of her, said, "The lady has a great deal of peace in her face." Her life was characterized by a deep love for souls and an earnest devotion to God. Resourceful and untiring in her efforts, she counted not her life dear unto herself. With rare skill she taught and won the little children and told them of Jesus and His power to save. With unusual tact she made her way to the hearts of the women and overcame their fear and prejudice. She added an industrial department to the women's school that by this means more might come under the teaching of the gospel.

One could not wonder that blessing was upon her work, knowing that to her the most important part of the day was the time she spent in communion with the Lord that she might have the mind of the Spirit. In simple faith she brought her perplexities to the Lord, confident that while she might not understand at once, He would care for that which was committed unto Him.

To the abiding presence of the Lord she gave the following beautiful testimony in a letter. She mentioned that they had been singing "I need Thee every hour," and added, "I was so thankful that I could say 'I have Thee every hour.'"

The tributes to her memory have been both numerous and touching, and are an added seal that her labors have not been in vain in the Lord.

PENN COLLEGE NOTES.

The winter term shows about thirty new students enrolled. The work in the several departments is progressing nicely, and good, solid work generally marks the college body. The need of a new main college building is more apparent than any former year—since the classes are larger than usual, and also under the present courses offered, more subjects are taught than any former year. The Y. M. C. A. room, the college office, society halls, etc., have been called into use to some extent for recitation purposes.

The State Oratorical Association and contest comes to Penn this year. This fact has added materially to the interest taken in oratory. Extensive plans are being arranged to entertain the meeting the 26th and 27th of this month.

Extemporaneous speaking continues to receive due attention at the college. The annual ex tempore contest of the Alcimian Society occurred the evening of the 27th. Luther Carter, class of '04, won first honors.

The College and City Christian Associations are still maintaining the union lecture course. This was established by the college ten years ago, and later its management was shared with the city Association. Six excellent numbers are given each season.

On the evening of the 30th ult. the Young Women's Christian Association gave a "Chafing Dish Social." An evening of much pleasure resulted, and about $45 was netted for their "Geneva Fund."

The Young Men's Christian Association arranged and held a very interesting Bible Institute on the 17th and 18th ult. Three sessions were held, and addresses were given by two State secretaries and others. The three addresses given by R. A. Marsh, of Burlington, were particularly strong and inspiring. His address on "Why Study the Bible?" was especially enjoyed.

Oscar Roberts, recently from South and West Africa, was also at the college on the 25th ult., on the invitation of the Missionary Committee of the Christian Associations. He gave three forcible addresses at the college. His practical, business-like way of treating missionary topics added a new interest in many minds in matters pertaining to the foreign field. With no intention on his part to relieve churches from supporting workers—and many workers in the foreign field—if their church life at home is to be blessed, yet in his own work he has demonstrated what business and professional men may accomplish while pursuing their vocations in the foreign field. While at the college he also held an interesting meeting with the missionary volunteers.

The college body this year is also doing more religious work than usual in the neighboring localities, school houses and adjacent towns. Seven from the college body, ministers and others, go out to regular meetings of this kind. It is very evident that the missionary zeal at the college, which appears to be still increasing, is accompanied with a greater earnestness in looking after the work at home.

To the Departed.

"Whereas, It has pleased the Lord to remove from her labors our beloved sister, Hannah E. Sleeper, who has been a member of the Friends' Missionary Board of Kansas Yearly Meeting almost from its commencement, we desire to place on record our appreciation of her faithful service in that capacity.

"She was constant in her attendance of the meetings of the Board, rarely missing one, no matter where held, unless absent from the State; and under all circumstances she maintained an active correspondence with the other members of the Board, with the workers at the mission and with the superintendents of the quarterly meetings in the interests of the work. On two different occasions she made the long journey to Douglas, Alaska, at her own expense, that she might be familiar with the needs of the work there. The knowledge thus gained of the existing conditions in Alaska was of great value to the Board. She was president of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of Kansas Yearly Meeting from 1888 until that organization was merged in the Missionary Union of Kansas Yearly Meeting, and during that time she visited most of the meetings of the yearly meeting in the interest of the work.

"She occupied the very important position of superintendent of field work until the end, a position requiring much time, careful planning and wise direction.

"If the action of the Board was not entirely in accord with her judgment, yet her interest and zeal were in no wise abated. Almost the last acts of her life were in the same line of devotion to Foreign Mission work, and especially the loved mission at Douglas.

"And so a standard bearer is taken from her place. Prayerfully we are asking who will take up this mantle that is fallen!"

By order of the Executive Committee of Missionary Work, ELIZA H. CAREY, Secretary.

The following tribute of respect concerning the death of William L. Wilson was adopted by Spring Temperance Union:

"Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove by death on December 21st, 1902, our brother and co-worker, William L. Wilson, by whose death our Society and community has sustained a heavy loss, the sacred desk one of its faithful members and his children a loving and devoted father—we are told in the Scriptures that this earth is not our eternal home,

"Therefore, we humbly submit to the Divine Hand that overrules all for good, trusting that our loss is his eternal gain, and that he has gone to join his dear companion, who has preceded him only a few years, in the glory land, therefore,

"Resolved, (1) That we extend to the bereaved family our sympathy in their loss.

"(2) That we send a copy of these resolutions to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, with a request that they be published.

"(3) That we dedicate a page of our journal to his memory and send a copy of these resolutions to the family."

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Nereus M. Hodgins still remains in Bridgeport Meeting, Indiana.

Harriet Green's address is now Guilford College, N. C., care L. L. Hobbs.

John Henry Douglas is very much improved in health since his recent illness.

Mary Cox is doing very successful work in the meeting in West Indianapolis.

Charles Babcock, of Ohio, is to commence revival meetings at Long Beach, Cal., on the 20th.

Eli Reece's work at High Point is prospering, and we hear gratifying reports of the outlook there.

Zeno Doan is much blessed of the Lord in his ministerial services in the meeting at Danville, Ind.

Susie Fox has been at her home at Leavenworth, Kan., for a short time, but will be in the field until spring.

Good reports have been received from Penn College, Iowa, concerning Ellison R. Purdie's recent labors in that meeting.

Over twenty-five new subscribers to THE AMERICAN FRIEND were secured at Pasadena Quarterly Meeting by Levi D. Barr.

Edwin Loft closed a series of meetings at Oak Run, Iowa, on the evening of Second month 1st, with much definite work done.

A series of meetings followed the dedication of the meeting house at High Point, Iowa, which was wonderfully blessed of the Lord.

The meetings recently held at Lynnville, Iowa, were very helpful in the ingathering of the unsaved and in building up believers.

Mary Nichols Cox has been much blessed in her work at West Union, in the limits of White Lick Quarterly Meeting, Indiana.

Irving King, who has been studying in Chicago University, is teaching psychology in the Oshkosh Normal School, at Oshkosh, Wis.

John and Sallie Woodard are engaged in religious work in the limits of Fairfield Meeting, where the latter is located permanently.

David Hadley, in addition to his pastoral work at Mooresville, Ind., is soliciting funds in Western Yearly Meeting for Earlham College.

The meeting at Nettle Creek, Ind., has been much revived through the labors of Charles D. W. Hiatt, of Fairmount, and Ephraim Allen, of Upland, Ind.

George H. Farr, a minister in Lewiston Monthly Meeting, Maine, has been holding meetings for some time at Brunswick Village, Maine, near Bowdoin College.

Calvin Bray, in company with Lydia Taylor Painter, recently held a very interesting series of meetings at North Branch, in White Lick Quarterly Meeting, Ind.

New Driftwood, Ind., has experienced a revival through the preaching of James W. Pearce. A number were converted, and four new members were received in the meeting.

The Training School for Christian workers in Los Angeles has begun the building of a large three-story house on their lot near Friends' Meeting House, in the city of Los Angeles.

At Olive Branch Monthly Meeting, Ind., held Second month 7th, Francis J. Wright was appointed correspondent in place of Albert Martin, deceased. Address, Portland, Ind., R. F. D. No. 2.

Perry Hadley, superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in Kansas Yearly Meeting, attended services at Friends' University, Wichita, the 8th instant, and preached an inspiring sermon.

The Friends and Methodists in Mooresville, Ind., recently united in a joint series of meetings lasting four weeks. The spirit of unity prevailed in these meetings. Some definite results attended the work.

Plainfield Quarterly Meeting for Second month, held at Indianapolis, Ind., was an interesting and profitable occasion. Martilla Cox was one of the helpful speakers, with short exhortations from several other ministers.

A two-weeks' revival at Hopewell Meeting, Quaker, Ind., closed on Sabbath night, Second month 1st. As a result of the meetings twenty-four persons were brought to Christ. Charles R. Axton, from Amboy, Ind., assisted in the meetings.

There are ten students in the Senior Normal Class at Friends' University this year who will receive three-year State certificates upon graduation. Several of the college Seniors are also taking the pedagogical work required for a State certificate.

On Second month 1st Leanah Hobson concluded a four-weeks' series of meetings at New Garden and Fountain City, Ind. There were ten conversions and some renewals. The entire membership was revived and encouraged to greater activity.

Van Wert Quarterly Meeting, held at Van Wert, Ohio, Second month 7th and 8th, was a time of great blessing to all who attended. The ministers present from a distance were Joseph O. Binford, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, and L. E. Speer.

Bloomington Academy, Ind., has stopped school work for three weeks on account of smallpox. One student having contracted the disease, others were accidentally exposed. All persons exposed have been vaccinated, and no serious results are expected.

The missionary delegation to Japan started on the long journey from Philadelphia on Third-day, the 10th. Asa S. Wing and Margaret W. Haines were the two Friends selected. They were also accompanied by Mary Morton Haines and Catherine W. Morris.

Our dear aged friend, Nathan Douglas, of Durham Monthly Meeting, Maine, is as well as could be expected for a man 91 years old, though he does not get out to meeting any this winter. His sister, Mary D. Goddard, who is two years older than he, attends meeting frequently.

The conference held at Greensboro, N. C., early in the winter under the auspices of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee, was a very successful undertaking, and we only regret that more has not been heard of it in these columns. It is the kind of work which we want to encourage.

A course of lectures was given last month at the Old First Church in Boston on "The Pioneers of Religious Liberty in America." Our friend, Benjamin F. Trueblood, was one of the lecturers, his subject being "William Penn and the Gospel of the Inner Light." The course is to continue during this month and next.

Fred T. Coppock, of Iowa, has just closed his labors in the limits of Elk River Quarterly Meeting, Kansas. He began services at Independence on the 12th ult., then went to Bolton, then to Skiatook Mission, and finally to Farm Ridge. He continued a week at each point, with a number of conversions at all of them. More than a score have already united with Friends.

Robert C. Root has prepared the best study plan for young Friends that we have yet seen. His outline study includes (1) The Origin of Friends, (2) The Early Friends, (3) The Friends as Pioneers, (4) The Principles and Practices of Early Friends Compared with Present-day Standards, (5) The Beliefs of Early Friends Compared with the Highest Standards To-day. He gives a list of thirty-seven books of reference. It is an admirable list, and those who care to know more of the subject should write to Robert C. Root, Berkeley, Cal.

Elbert Russell has been elected by the Board of Trustees of Earlham College to be professor of Biblical Study and college pastor in that institution. He enters on his duties at the opening of the next college year. The department is put on a secure and permanent basis, and the course of study will be very thorough and comprehensive, and will be open to all college students.

Harry R. Keates, of New York, had acceptable evangelistic service in Knightstown Meeting, Ind., beginning on First month 19th and continuing until the 3d inst., and embracing sixteen evening and twelve day services. All the membership were blessed, and nearly a score took steps to enter a Christian life. The practical presentation of the book of Ephesians, which the brother gave in the afternoon meetings, was a means of great blessing to the church.

Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting, Vt., held on the 7th inst., was a delightful occasion, as well as a spiritual feast. The following day the meeting house was nearly filled notwithstanding a driving storm raged without. Charles H. Jones, Superintendent of the State Institution for the Blind at Hartford, Conn., was present and gave an inspiring address. He expects to return with his wife, who feels a call for the work, and labor in the meeting in the near future.

Falmouth Quarterly Meeting was held at Lewiston, Maine, First month 31st and Second month 1st, and was a season of divine favor. The business meeting was larger than usual, and more young people attended the meetings for worship than heretofore. The meeting on Seventh-day afternoon was made very inspiring by several heartfelt talks, and the evening service, which was a Bible School conference, was rendered very helpful by an address from W. W. Stetson, Superintendent of the Bible School Work of Maine. W. J. Sayers, the resident minister, occupied the time in the meeting for worship on First-day.

Fairfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Fairfield, near Leesburg, Ohio, First month 30th and 31st. Josephus Hoskins, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present, and gave helpful service. The attendance was good and the meeting was one of spiritual quickening. Mont Milener, the local minister, has been engaged in a protracted effort in the meeting for nearly five weeks, which has resulted in the conversion of several and the renewal of others. The "Quarterly Meeting Institute Committee" gave a very satisfactory report of the Institute held at New Vienna in Eleventh month, and a committee was appointed to arrange for and hold another this year. The Institute is growing in favor, and is proving very helpful to those who attended.

Swansea congregation, Massachusetts, held a roll-call meeting on the evening of the 9th instant. Tables were spread by the ladies in the Sabbath School rooms, and fellowship in the breaking of bread was enjoyed by about 125 before the meeting proper assembled. The calling of the roll was interspersed with singing. In all 95 members answered to their names. Absent members and shut-ins sent greetings. A special feature of the meeting was a historical sketch by Obadiah Chace. He said that the history of the meeting runs back about 230 years, and that the family of Mary Dyer was among the founders. The monthly meeting was established the same year that George Washington was born. At one time there were about 500 members, 160 of whom were Chaces and about 70 Buffintons. The membership subsequently declined to about 100, but the preparative meeting alone has more than twice that number at present.

Brooklyn Friends have just expended about $9,000 on their meeting house, with very interesting results. A stone portico has been erected, which greatly improves the front. The meeting room itself has been entirely reconstructed. The work has been done in perfect taste, giving one of the most restful and attractive meeting rooms Friends possess anywhere. If there is an influence in harmonious surroundings, the gatherings here ought to be harmonious and peaceful. The reopening of the meeting house was celebrated by the holding of a tea meeting, attended by most of the Brooklyn Friends and by many from New York city. The meeting was addressed by Rufus M. Jones on the "Meaning of Quakerism and the Responsibilities of Friends." Two large meetings were held on the Sabbath following, the 8th. Amos Sanders gave a fitting statement of our principles as a church of Christ, and Rufus M. Jones followed. In the evening James Wood, of Mount Kisco, had the leading part in the service.

Nathaniel Schmidt addressed the Ethical Culture Society of New York in Carnegie Hall on the 8th, taking for his subject "The Legacy of the Quakers." "The world," he said, "is in accord with almost all the tenets of the Quakers, but from different causes than those which actuated William Penn and his followers. The sect," he went on to say, "has about outlived its usefulness by not recognizing its own victories. Their adoption of the 'thee' and 'thou' was a protest against the invidious distinction that made that form the address of a superior to an inferior. To-day everybody uses the plural pronoun, and the distinction prevails no longer. The Friend kept his hat on as a protest against making obeisance to those who claimed to be the superiors. To-day everybody takes his hat off to everybody. The essential point has been gained, but the Friend still maintains the old form. The doctrine of the inner light prevails everywhere, but not for the reason that the Quaker fathers held it. Regarding the Quaker refusal to swear, he said: "We feel that the Quaker was right in his attitude to the taking of an oath, but not for the reason the Quaker gave. His argument was and is that the Bible says the Lord said you may not swear."

BORN.

WOODARD.—Second month 4th, 1903, to Dr. M. F. and Inez D. Woodard, a son, Paul Davis Woodard, at Bloomingdale, Ind.

MARRIED.

BERRIER—COPE.—At the home of the bride's parents, G. U. and Ellen Cope, Augusta, N. C., Second month 5th, 1903, I. Clinton Berrier and Annie Cope. Both are members of Friends' Meeting at Augusta, N. C.

DIED.

EBRITE.—At the home of her mother, Pauline Storer, Muncie, Ind., Second month 4th, 1903, Pearl Storer Ebrite, age 27 years. She was a consistent member of Muncie Meeting of Friends for twenty-two years, was a charter member of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, and a faithful worker in the Sabbath School. She was married to D. Oral Ebrite, Sixth month 27th, 1902.

ESTES.—At Nankin, China, Twelfth month 22d, 1902, Paul Wadsworth, infant son of Wilbur A. and Julia B. Estes, aged one month and three days.

HOLE.—At Fairland, Ind., Second month 3d, 1903, Benjamin Hole, in his 83d year. He was a member of Sand Creek Monthly Meeting of Friends, Bartholomew County, Ind. Interment took place at Bridgeport, Marion County, Ind., Second month 5th, 1903.

LONGSTRETH.—Joseph Longstreth, at his home, in Wichita, Kan., First month 8th, 1903, aged about 70 years. He was not a member of Friends, but belonged to the large family of that name who are Friends.

RUSH.—At the home of her son, Nixon Rush, near Haviland, Kansas, Second month 5th, 1903, Keturah Jay Rush, wife of John B. Rush (deceased), in her 69th year. She was a birth-right Friend, and died in the triumphs of living faith.

WHITNEY.—In Jay, Franklin County, Maine, First month 18th, 1903, Martha Hacker-Whitney, aged 76 years. She was converted about thirty-five years ago, and united with Friends in Durham Monthly Meeting. Though she was deprived by circumstances from regular and frequent attendance at meeting she has let her light shine by word and deed wherever her lot has been cast.

A PRESENT HELP.

We may not climb the heavenly steeps
To bring the Lord Christ down;
In vain we search the lowest deeps;
For Him no depths can drown.

But warm, sweet, tender, even yet
A present help is He;
And faith has yet its Olivet,
And love its Galilee.

The healing of the seamless dress
Is by our beds of pain;
We touch Him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again.

Through Him the first fond prayers are said
Our lips of childhood frame;
The last low whispers of our dead
Are burdened with His name.

O Lord and Master of us all,
Whate'er our name or sign,
We own Thy sway, we hear Thy call,
We test our lives by Thine!

—John G. Whittier.

SUBMISSION.

If, dear Lord, it pleaseth Thee
Affliction's shaft to send,
Though to me a mystery,
And my heart they almost rend,
I will not pray Thy hand to stay,
But O, that grace be given,
That I may show myself to be
A faithful child of heaven.

APPETITE COAXING.

Not Necessary When Proper Food is Used.

Coaxing up an appetite is hard work and unnecessary when a little thought is given to scientific feeding.

Fill the stomach with the wrong stuff and it is not long before the palate too is affected, and even the sight of food is nauseating. Stomach and nervous ills of all kinds soon come, and the body is left without nourishment.

Then take on Grape-Nuts for a few days and see the difference. Eating is no longer a duty but a delight, for the food is made of the proper grains prepared in a natural, scientific manner, and the flavor is delicious. The case of a schoolma'am of Cedar Mills, Minn., is interesting. She writes: "I used to go without lunch many a day, not finding it tasty. In consequence I usually had a severe headache before the afternoon session was over, and felt nervous and cross.

"I had almost concluded to give up teaching on this account when a friend induced me to try Grape-Nuts. I will say frankly I did not care for it at first, but tried it two or three times, and then found myself beginning to enjoy the crisp, nutty flavor.

"The food has changed the order of my life. I carry it for lunch every day now. The color has come back to my cheeks and lips, and I have no more headaches or nervous spells.

"My body is full of energy and new life, and life seems worth the living, now that I have found the proper food."
Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

In the latter part of the second volume of "The Life of Phillips Brooks," by Alexander V. G. Allen, headed "Written hastily in a notebook," these lines are found:

The while I listened came a word,
I knew not whence, I could not see,
But while my waiting spirit heard,
I cried, "Lord, here am I, send me."

For in that word was all contained
The Master's wish, the servant's joy,
Worth of the prize to be attained,
And sweetness of the times employ.

I turned and went along the way—
That word was food and air and light;
I feasted on it all the day,
And rested on it all the night.

I wondered, but when soon I came
To where the word complete must be,
I called my wonder by its name,
For lo! the word I sought was He.

LOOK UP!

It is wise for us to look at the dangers, to be fully aware of the perils, to be tremblingly conscious of our own weakness; but it is folly and faithless-ness to look at the danger so exclusively, or to feel our weakness so keenly, as that either one or the other, or both of them combined, shall obscure to our sight the far greater and confidence-giving truth of the knowledge, the sympathy and the extended protecting hand of our Brother and our Lord. We belong to Him, if we have yielded our hearts to Him, and He will not "suffer His holy one to see corruption," here and hereafter.

If you look down from the narrow ledge of the Alpine heights to the thousand feet of precipice on either side of the two or three inches where you have your footing, you will get dizzy and fall.
If you look up you will walk steadily.
Do not ignore the danger, nor presump-tuously forget your own weakness; but "when I said my foot slippeth, Thy mercy held me up." Recognize the slippery ice and the feeble foot, and couple with them the other thought: "The Lord knoweth them that are His."—Alexander MacLaren.

It is character that counts in a nation as in a man. It is a good thing to have a clean, fine, intellectual development in a nation, to produce orators, artists, successful business men; but it is an infinitely greater thing to have those solid qualities which we group together under the name of character—sobriety, stead-fastness, the sense of obligation towards one's neighbor and one's God, hard, common sense, and combined with it the gift of generous enthusiasm toward whatever is right. These are the qualities which go to make up true national greatness.—Roosevelt.

"If I could only get a bite to eat," he whined. "Why don't you work?" she asked. "Nothin' doin' in my line," he answered. "I'm a dime museum glass eater, an' they're gettin' too common."
"Poor man!" she said, sympathetically.
"Come right in, and you can have the two goblets and the glass dish the girl broke this morning."—"Chicago Evening Post."

VERY FEW PEOPLE

Are Free from Some Form of Indigestion.

Very few people are free from some form of indigestion, but scarcely two will have the same symptoms.

Some suffer most directly after eating, bloating from gas in stomach and bowels, others have heartburn or sour risings, still others have palpitation of heart, headaches, sleeplessness, pains in chest and under shoulder blades, some have extreme nervousness, as in nervous dyspepsia.

But whatever the symptoms may be, the cause in all cases of indigestion is the same, that is, the stomach for some reason fails to properly and promptly digest what is eaten.

This is the whole story of stomach troubles in a nutshell. The stomach must have rest and assistance, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets give it both by supplying those natural digestives which every weak stomach lacks, owing to the failure of the peptic glands in the stomach to secrete sufficient acid and pepsin to thoroughly digest and assimilate the food eaten.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest
3,000 grains of meat, eggs or other wholesome food, and this claim has been proven by actual experiment, which anyone can perform for himself in the following manner: Cut a hard-boiled egg into very small pieces, as it would be if masticated; place the egg and two or three of the tablets in a bottle or jar containing warm water heated to 98 degrees (the temperature of the body) and keep it at this temperature for three and one-half hours, at the end of which time the egg will be as completely digested as it would have been in the healthy stomach of a hungry boy.

The point of this experiment is that what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do to the egg in the bottle it will do to the egg or meat in the stomach, and nothing else will rest and invigorate the stomach so safely and effectually. Even a little child can take Stuart's Tablets with safety and benefit if its digestion is weak and the thousands of cures accomplished by their regular daily use are easily explained when it is understood that they are composed of vegetable essences, aseptic, pepsin, diastase and Golden Seal, which mingle with the food and digest it thoroughly, giving the overworked stomach a chance to recuperate.

Dieting never cures dyspepsia, neither do pills and cathartic medicines, which simply irritate and inflame the intestines.

When enough food is eaten and promptly digested there will be no constipation, nor in fact will there be disease of any kind because good digestion means good health in every organ.

The merit and success of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are world-wide and they are sold at the moderate price of 50 cents for full-sized package in every drug store in the United States and Canada, as well as in Europe.

MORAVIANS OUTDONE.

It has been customary to credit the Moravians with contributing more than any other denomination to foreign missions; but the following paragraph, taken from the January number of "Record of Christian Work," makes it appear that English Friends now enjoy this distinction: "It is said that the English 'Friends,' who number approximately 16,000, support 90 foreign missionaries, with their native helpers (969), at a cost of $100,000 a year. This means that each 'Friend' annually contributes over six dollars to the work of Christ in heathen lands, an average which no other denomination in the world can show."

For no man owns the whole Bible. It is too large for that, and our experience is too small. Every man makes his own Bible—a Bible constantly growing, if he grows, but always a smaller Bible than the Scriptures. It is a great thing to make a Bible—one of the greatest things any man ever does. For no one can make a Bible, except through making his own, one by one, the experiences of the Bible heroes and saints. Did any one ever add all the Psalms to his Bible? or all of the letter to the Romans?—Amos R. Wells.

Shoes at POPULAR PRICES

EVERYTHING that goes into them is good—the leather, the findings, the workmanship; and every pair is subject to the closest scrutiny before it goes into our stock. We are as careful about the little things as about the big things in the making of our shoes; that is one reason why they are the best popular-priced shoes to be had in Philadelphia.

WOMEN'S "S. & C. SPECIALS."—The spring styles are now ready; thirty different shapes, and values even greater than before. They are far ahead of the shoes one ordinarily expects to secure at $3.00. We see to it that the standard of excellence is never lowered. $3.00 a pair.

MISSSES' "S. & C. SCHOOL" SHOES.—Made in shapes that are especially adapted for growing feet; good, serviceable leathers with the "S. & C." stamp on each pair. McKay-sewed—$1.50 a pair; Goodyear welt—$2.00 a pair.

LITTLE BOYS' SHOES.—Neat and serviceable little shoes for the youngsters, with all the little style touches that go with the older boys' shoes, and made with just as much care. McKay-sewed—$1.50 a pair; Goodyear welt—$2.00 a pair.

MEN'S "S. & C. SPECIALS."—This line includes everything that is up-to-date; all kinds of desirable leathers, and every pair made to our exacting order. We guarantee them—another pair if they break through in the uppers before the first sole is worn through. $3.50 a pair.

LETTER FROM WHITTIER.

"They fail to read clearly the signs of the times who do not see that the hour is coming when, under the searching eye of philosophy and the terrible analysis of science, the letter and the outward evidence will not altogether avail us; when the surest dependence must be upon the light of Christ within, disclosing the law and the prophets in our own souls, and confirming the truth of outward scripture by inward experience; when smooth stones from the book of present revelation shall prove mightier than the weapons of Saul; when the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, as proclaimed by George Fox and lived by John Woolman, shall be recognized as the only efficient solvent of doubts raised by an age of restless enquiry.

Marshall Field has offered to provide any sum up to $10,000,000 which may be needed to build the finest art museum in the world, in the city of Chicago, and plans are being discussed by the Park Commissioners. There are no reservations and no conditions to be met by the city, except that the donor requires that a suitable site be presented.

A joint note to Turkey on the subject of reforms has received the endorsement of every Power in Europe. It strikes out all reference to Macedonia, and is generalized so as to cover all the localities where Christians reside, the only locality specified being three villages in Northern Turkey, in which most of the Christians reside. The protection of the lives and the complete safeguarding of the interests of the Christians form the chief features of the note.

The Japanese market can be educated to consume a vast amount of Indian corn. A dietary expert from the Japanese government has been in the United States for many months studying the question. Something has already been done to introduce maize into China, in some provinces of which this crop is already grown to considerable extent, but the time is ripe for a much wider extension of the use of corn in Japan, and indeed throughout the Orient. If a small government appropriation were devoted to a great maize propaganda under the auspices of the United States Department of Agriculture, it could doubtless accomplish as much good in the Orient as similar work has already accomplished in the Occident.

A convention of great importance was held in Chicago, the 10th, 11th and 12th inst. It was originated by the Council of Seventy of the American Institute of Sacred Literature, and its object was to effect a national organization for the improvement of religious and moral education through the Bible school and other agencies. All the leading denominations were represented by some of their most eminent men. There are four prime reasons for the movement: the religious and moral instruction of the young is at present inadequate, the Bible school should be conformed to a higher ideal, the home and the day school should be developed to assist in the education of the young in religion, and this improvement in religious and moral instruction can be best promoted by a national organization, and its object is to meet these needs.

It is a long time since the temperance party in New Zealand has received so much encouragement as has been given them lately by the results of the local option polls in the islands. Under the New Zealand Act a vote is taken on these questions: (1) continuance of licenses, (2) reduction, (3) no license. In the past six years, while the vote for continuance increased by 4,960, the vote for reduction increased by 34,273, and for no license by 50,465. The North Island carried prohibition in one district and reduction in three; and the South Island, prohibition in five districts and reductions in nine. The total number of votes was, for reduction, 130,145; for continuance, 146,291; for no license, 149,585. The success of the temperance party in New Zealand will lead to further agitation, amongst other things for the abolition of the limitation of a three-fifths majority now necessary in order to an alteration in the law. It will also assist the temperance party in Australia in their demand for an alteration in the liquor law.

The tenth annual conference of Foreign Missions Boards in the United States and Canada, which met in the Bible House, New York, First month 14th and 15th, decided to invite the Christian people in the two countries to unite in a week of special prayer for the evangelization of the world. The time selected is Fourth month 5-12, inclusive. This period is felt to be a peculiarly appropriate time for simultaneous prayer on behalf of missions, and it is hoped that to thus direct the thought and prayer to this subject of the Christian people of America and Canada, with their Christian converts on the foreign field, will result in more constant prayer for missions throughout the year. The committee appointed by the Conference expects to distribute through the various mission boards a leaflet containing suggestions which will be helpful to individuals and Christian congregations observing the week in this way. Any one desiring to share in these observances can apply to the foreign missions board of their own denomination, or to the Committee on Simultaneous Prayer, Room 25, Bible House, Astor Place, New York.

The Conference of Foreign Missions Boards in the United States and Canada, issuing this call, is composed of the officers and representatives annually appointed of some thirty to thirty-five missionary boards. It includes Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, Moravians, Presbyterians, Reformed, United Brethren, Christians and Disciples. The members of the committee appointed to represent the Conference are: William I. Haven, chairman; H. K. Carroll, A. W. Halsey, Robert E. Speer, Henry N. Cobb, J. W. Conklin, Arthur S. Lloyd, J. W. Wood, James Wood and W. Henry Grant, secretary.

NOT TIME TO DIE YET.

NEARLY everybody who addresses the public on "the Quakers and their work," or "the Quakers and their Legacy," or "the Contribution of the Quakers," takes it for granted that the work of Friends is done. All the good things that are said are in the nature of an obituary notice, or an epitaph. Everything is put into the past tense. The main note which sounds through all these comments, whether in the address of the scholar or in the phrase of the newspaper editor, is to the effect that the world has been leavened with the truth for which the Quakers suffered, and that their work is therefore done and they may as well disband and become absorbed in other bodies. We sincerely wish that the world were so leavened with truth that Friends were no longer needed with their message, their service and their protests. Friends would rejoice, like John the baptizer, to decrease if they might see their truth increase and prevail.

It is true, as so many of these Quaker epitaphs say, that all churches now proclaim many of the principles which once the Quaker championed almost or quite alone. All except the "high church" Christians, in all the Protestant denominations, have come to regard "ordinances" as secondary and unimportant as compared with a life of obedience to the Spirit. Peace is slowly being accepted as a part of Christianity. Oaths in court are recognized as unsatisfactory, and are kept mainly for the hold they have over the ignorant and superstitious. The great truth—it is more than a doctrine—of the in-speaking and in-dwelling Christ—the communion of the Holy Spirit—is recognized by almost every spiritually-minded Christian in our country.

In very many churches the ministry is as fresh and vital and as quick with the power of the Spirit as it ever has been in the best Friends' meetings, though it must be said that the Quaker ideal of worship seems as far as ever from being realized. The world has taken up every great social reform which early Friends championed.

But is there nothing more to do? Imagine a mother who had lived to see her child able to creep and walk and talk words, saying, "Now let me depart in peace; I am no more needed!" Christianity is only in the creeping stage, as any one will admit who has discovered Christ's ideal. The "religion of spiritual inwardness," which Professor James says the Quakers illustrate, was never more needed than now. The Church is dropping off much that was formal and traditional,—but will it go on into the vital and spiritual, or will it stop with a negative attitude?

If it does not take up the positive gospel and enter with its new life into all our present social unrest and tremendous problems of crowded city life then the outlook is surely dark. If the scholar is to be left with nothing but his higher criticism, his evolution and his materialism, he is of all men to be pitied. The Church has the task of carrying Christ both to the working man in his unrest and the scholar in his.

It is a harder task than that which the early Friend took up. When this work is well done we may talk of disbanding, though possibly by that time some new work may open beyond that! The Quaker blunder for so these many years has been a too great absorption in the undertaking to hold what the fathers gained. It is for this reason that the epitaphs get written. If we want to be recognized as alive and likely to stay so, we must become breathers and utterers of God's ever-advancing, continuous truth. In short, we must take up the tasks of to-day in the same valiant spirit as our forefathers took up theirs.

DID YE RECEIVE THE HOLY SPIRIT
WHEN YE BELIEVED?

A FRIEND asks us to explain the incident mentioned in Acts 19: 1-7, which is the account of the Ephesian disciples who had not heard of the Holy Spirit—a passage which comes up for Bible study the first Sabbath of next month. The account is exceedingly brief, and none too clear, but the facts are probably these: Paul found in Ephesus a little group of persons who had had only John's baptism. We know that some of John's disciples continued his work after he was beheaded. Evidently here were some of the fruits of their labors. These persons had believed in John's message of righteousness, and they had accepted his baptism and were waiting for the fulfilment of his promise that the kingdom was at hand. They had not been instructed in the facts of the power and privileges for the believer in Christ who had more than fulfilled John's expectations. Paul hears of them and meets them with this question: "Did you receive the Holy Spirit when (not "since" or "after"; see Am. Rev.) you believed?" That is to say, did your faith bring immediate power with it? "No, it did not," they reply. "We never heard before that there was a Holy Spirit." Then Paul gave them their lesson. He showed them how great was the difference between believing on a Person and believing on a mere abstract righteousness. Then "They were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus," and they entered into the experience which had previously come upon the apostles. It is what happens to-day when a man gives up a religion which is a mere head-theory and takes Jesus Christ definitely and actually for his Saviour, Lord and King.

THE ANAKIM AGAIN.

To our sincere regret and grief, some of our readers have misinterpreted the recent editorial on "The Sons of the Anakim." It seemed to them to reflect upon good, honest persons who had opposed the course of things during the past, and to others it seemed to make too light of present difficulties. It ought not to be necessary to say that THE AMERICAN FRIEND never indulges in personal references, nor belittles the honest attitude of any sincere, earnest human soul. It should be noted that the Anakim are put for difficulties. In saying that they turned out to be "little men on stilts" has no reference to anybody. It only means that the difficulties proved not to be as great as they seemed at first. We did not mean in the slightest to make light of the serious problems now before the entire Christian Church. Nobody who knows what is before us can for a moment treat the situation lightly. Our point was this, that we must go boldly on, and when we have actually taken the city and won our battle, we shall find, when all the facts are known, that the Anakim were not as large as they looked. But Friends, whether they are great or small, let us devote our energies to fighting the common enemy.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SABBATH SCHOOL PEDAGOGY, THE NATURE OF THE EDUCATIVE PROCESS.

BY IRVING KING.

In a previous article (Twelfth month 4th), with a view to emphasizing the necessity of Sabbath School pedagogy, it was pointed out that the reason for there being no more real progress in Sabbath School teaching is that a superficial idea is commonly held as to the nature of the problem it involves. The Bible, as matter to be taught, is set over against other sorts of subject-matter and is thus deprived of the advantage of methods developed in ordinary school work. In fact, it is thus made so unique that it is regarded as essentially independent of method and teacher. Even where a teacher is admitted as a necessity, the preparation required is usually confined to subject-matter and certain spiritual exercises, while the method by which these things are to be worked out is regarded as of minor importance. It was pointed out that the spiritual preparation of the teacher logically carries with it an equal preparation in the best ways of teaching. By good methods of teaching we mean not methods out of relation to the child, but such as grow out of a clear and sympathetic understanding of the child nature itself and its method of growth.

When we turn to the subject of methods we thus see that before we can construct anything really valuable we must have clear ideas of the development of the child-mind and of the nature of the process of education; that is, we must know what it is we really are doing when we are teaching. Not until we know what we are supposed to be after as teachers, nor until we know the character of the child we are to teach, his attitude as a child, and the method of his mental growth, can we know how to select our methods and use them intelligently.

It will be impossible to work out any of these points adequately in a few short papers. To answer the question, "What are we after as teachers?" would require a course in the philosophy of education. To have any adequate appreciation of the child-nature requires more than the instinct of the average mother or the native tact of the lover of childhood. It requires years of observation under the guidance, either personal or through books, of those who have made a life study of the child. It requires an acquaintance with the psychology of child-development such as few yet possess. Pardon me if I emphasize the magnitude of the task before the Sabbath School teacher. We have been looking at it too lightly and need to be aroused to its magnitude. When we hitherto have thought of the greatness of the teacher's work, it has usually been with reference to the results. The teacher is lectured as to how responsible she should feel, entrusted with the training in spiritual things of little children, as to how much their future lives depend upon it, etc. The greatness we emphasize is that of the preparation she must make to have great results and not great failures.

Manifestly we can here attempt to define only a point of view, or method of procedure, which the earnest teacher will use as a starting point. A great lesson does not consist so much in the actual information conveyed as in the giving of an advantageous point of view. Many a teacher struggles for years to improve, but makes little progress, because she does not have a fruitful point of view. She tries in vain to interpret and control the facts she meets day by day by means of some partially true or false hypothesis. Because of this inadequate point of view her work is constantly cramped and impaired. Perhaps it is a wrong conception of school government, so that her well-meant efforts in discipline result in disorganization, where a different attitude would have promoted harmony and good-will. It may be a false idea regarding the characteristics of a certain period of childhood, and she tries grimly for years to make the children in her charge assume a certain attitude in certain studies, and, as she fails, growing ever more convinced of the stubbornness of childhood and of the thankfulness of her own lot. A different understanding of the child might have brought out ready responses and a harmony of development that would have made the teacher's life an ever-increasing joy.

We shall try, then, to present a point of view regarding education and the child-nature that has proved helpful to many, and which, if thoroughly grasped, will put the teacher in a position to work out for herself the proper procedure in many a difficult question of Sabbath School teaching. We can define the problem at least, and the teacher who realizes definitely her problem, has at any rate ceased to be a routine teacher. Notwithstanding the magnitude of the preparation that the teacher needs to make, it is not beyond the power of even the humblest or the one with the least opportunity to get started in the right direction.

Let us see what light we can get upon the special field of Sabbath School work from modern theories of what education is in general. Education means, first of all, the process of making over or changing experience in some way, so that it becomes more adequate for the situations of life. Every child that comes to the Sabbath or public school has some sort of experience, some sort of ideas; but they are usually such as have been acquired in the narrow environment of the home and only a few playmates. The child comes to school to have this experience enriched. How shall this enrichment, this remaking of experience, be accomplished? Not by the mere transfer of information to the child's mind, if such a thing as mere transfer is possible. Too many teachers, however, act on the assumption that this is all that education really is.

In answer to our question let us see how the experience of society has been enriched. In the course of its development it has accumulated a great store of material that it regards as valuable and necessary for the experience of each one of its members. Geography, mathematics, history, etc., are the crystallized forms in which the teacher usually gets these accumulated social values, and the danger is that she may come to look on it as so much information that is good in and of itself. To get its true significance we must find out why society has come to have it, and what does it mean to society?

In brief, the crystallized studies of the school represent the products of many makings over of experience. Certain things had to be done; the old experience was inadequate, must be worked over with reference to the new needs. For instance, India must be reached by sea, and the hardy navigators of the fifteenth century carefully reviewed the facts of their old experience, making hypothetical reconstructions of them to the end that a new and better experience might result. From these reconstructions of the past through the force of new needs the modern science of geography has grown up. Every branch of knowledge is a systematization of the reconstruction men have been forced to make to meet the needs that social progress is continually bringing to their consciousness. To the men who faced the needs, these generalizations were vital and necessary. The novice in any line is glad to avail himself of the previous solutions of the difficulties he is to meet. By availing himself of the experience of others, he cannot only do what they did, but he can also advance into regions into which they could not enter.

The child at school must acquire the results of this experience in much the same way that it was first acquired; that is, it must come to him as the solution of felt difficulties. If it comes in such a form, it is not mere information, in fact the emphasis is not on it at all, but on the growing experience. The school studies are simply one means for helping it to grow adequately and in the right direction. If the material of the books comes to the child as solutions of real problems, he must feel the problems as his own. The child can feel the significance of it only by taking it in the same way that it came to society; that is, not as so much information, but as material to assist in further activity.

The child's experience, then, grows in much the same way as the adult's, and if these values that have been accumulated by adults are to be placed at the disposal of the child, it must be by the reconstruction of his experience in the face of realized needs just as it has been in the case of the adult.

Now, with every making over of experience, the child is made more fully conscious of the significance of his activity, of its relationship to that of others. His made-over experience is not as narrow or selfish as the old. It has now more social significance. It is impossible for an experience to be made over so as to have at its disposal the values of society without its becoming more conscious of social meanings themselves. Of course this is not the result where education is conceived as merely a process of conveying information. Under such a conception there is no making over of experience; there is no emphasis on the relation of the information to further activity that must needs bring the child into closer relations with others. It is simply a matter of transferring so much dead weight to the child.

We have two things, then, that the process of education involves: First, a making over of experience, and, second, an increased consciousness of the social values involved in the broader experience. But this is not all. An education would be incomplete unless a third result were accomplished. The child, who is simply having his experience made over with reference to values already existent, is not being truly educated in the modern sense. He must be learning the art of continuing the process whenever there is need for it. He must learn to see needs for himself, to feel problems and to take the material others have accumulated and readjust it of himself to new circumstances.

In ancient times and among many races at present this last aspect of education is unrecognized. It is sufficient for the child's experience to be enriched by the crystallizations of the past. Indeed, he has no right to attempt any solutions of needs on his own account. Thus, in the Malay Peninsula, to-day, who ever mines tin must do it in the same way it was done by the first tribes that engaged in this occupation hundreds of years ago. Even their ancient language must be used, and nothing can be brought into or near the mines that these primitive tribes did not use. It is the same in the harvesting of rice. The work must be carried on, even in trivial details, as it was first done. So rigid is custom that here, as usual, it has attained a religious sanctity. It would be impious to try to improve on the traditional ways.

In our modern life all this is different. We place a premium on him who can do, not only as society in the past has done, but who can find new and better ways of meeting the varied problems of life. Every education that is in line with modern needs must, then, give the child a broader experience, and it must be one that is not only consciously more social, but one that gives the child power to reconstruct his activity for himself; an education, in other words, that sets the child on his own feet.

This is true of religious as well as of secular education. Humanity has accumulated a great amount of material relating to the more ultimate values of life. The Bible is a storehouse of such material. It contains a record of the attitudes of men at various times toward the most ultimate problems of conduct. If what has been said above is true, it is not educating the child in religious things to simply transfer to him these solutions of the past. His experience cannot be made over by them except as he realizes in his own life the sort of problems that these men of old struggled with. The first and greatest fault of our Sabbath School teaching is that it is largely shaped for conveying information rather than for making over the child's experience so that he may have a deeper appreciation of the ultimate values contained in it. We have stated what a religious education should do in terms of the general process of education, for if we can only get clearly in mind that all education is essentially a similar process, we will be in a better position to take advantage, in our Sabbath School work, of the progress in general educational theory.

In conclusion, we may state the connection of this rather abstract discussion with what is to follow. As we have seen, if the study of the Bible is to result in a real religious growth, it must be presented, not as so much information, but as the solution worked out by various peoples in great moral crises, which, as such, is of value to us at present in our own moral conflicts. The problem of the Sabbath School is, then, to discover the organization of the child's experience at its various stages of growth, and with this knowledge to lead him to an appreciation of religious values and religious truth that can really have significance to him in his narrow and relatively unorganized world. We shall try next to show how the organization of the child's world and of his experience conditions his attitude in religious matters and how it must therefore be taken into account in our methods of teaching.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WHEN BABY PLEADS.

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Baby is learning to talk—real, understandable talk now, and not the gurgles and goos we once tried to persuade ourselves were speech. How quickly a baby's cooing and crowing—sweetest of music to a parent's ears—are left behind! For a year now our baby has been saying words, to the delight and pride of the persons whose names he early condescended to utter. Now, as his second birthday draws on apace, he is advancing into sentences, and truly there is no more interesting study than a baby's early attempts at consecutive speech.

Months ago he manifested a disposition to use more than one name for each parent. Thus "daddy" was soon followed by "farver," which is his word for all-round use; and to these two was added an attempt to pronounce the Christian name. Curiously, this last he employs only in farewells. He has also picked up the word "dear," and, of his own accord, rendering it "dearie," he has made it his most affectionate term of address for both parents.

When "dearie" is heard in the home it is understood as a sign that the little ruler of the house is in need of sympathy, or that he wants something which probably he should not have. When he runs up to his father, and, putting his little hand confidently in mine, says, in most beguiling tones, "Come, dearie; please, dearie, come," I feel reasonably certain that he wants me to go with him into some forbidden pasture. Or a "come, look, dearie," accompanied by a ravishing smile of affection, means, when freely interpreted, "Come and inspect the mischief I have wrought and forgive me for it. How can you have the heart to reprove me for anything so interesting as this?"

With shame I confess—while I lay the blame on some blarneying Irish ancestor—that my son is tenderest and most loving when he is to an especial degree looking out for number one. He is never so devoted as when he wants something. His affection is showered most lavishly when he has some end of his own to gain.

But, ah me! Is it not so in the case of my own relations with the Father above? Is it not when I have needs to be satisfied that I tell Him most freely of my love and trust? Want and sin turn me to Him; then it is that I quickly remember what a dear Father He is. Is this because I am as yet but a child? Is the day coming when my best offerings of love will be given Him, not for the sake of return, but only for His pleasure and praise?

Wyncote, Pa.

Pray modestly as to the things of this life; earnestly for what may be helps to your salvation; intensely for salvation itself, that you may ever behold God, love God. Practice in life whatever you pray for, and God will give it you more abundantly.—
E. B. Pusey.

THE STRENGTH OF THE FRIENDS.

Philadelphia long since ceased to have the outer aspect of a place founded by Friends. Thirty, still more, fifty years ago, one often saw their costumes on the streets, their presence and personality were everywhere apparent and the Philadelphian still daily reminded the stranger within her gates of the city's origin.

But no one to-day goes below the passing surface without realizing how much of the silent strength, security and beneficence of the city rests on this small population of Friends. A few scores of families in all they are—yet the Friends support two colleges, and yearly increase their endowment, maintain the largest hospitals, conduct great schools, yearly growing, and are perpetually behind banking and business at its best.

Why this small population so leavens and influences a great city of 1,400,000, which has outgrown so many fold the Friends, to which it owes its beginnings, becomes clear and plain and unmistakable when death sets in review in its earlier years of ascending manhood a life and character like that of Edward Richie Strawbridge, whose going was recorded a week ago to-day. Still young, at the head of a great business, faithful even in the weekday attendance of his faith, living by its serene and silent strength, measuring the world's values by a gauge more lasting than that of the day, maintaining the stainless repute of a long line of men of like mind and meeting all the multifarious duties of a business life with the fundamental accuracy which regards punctuality, fidelity, one price, one word and a promise as but a part of keeping to the truth—these things all, when they appear in a single life, reveal the strength of Friends, a strength which makes mere numbers of small consequence.—Editorial in the "Philadelphia Press."

The International Lesson.

FIRST QUARTER.

LESSON X.

THIRD MONTH 8, 1903.

PAUL AT EPHESUS.

Acts 19: 13-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.—Acts 19: 17.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Third mo. 2.—Paul at Ephesus. Acts 19: 8-12.

Third-day, Third mo. 3.—Paul at Ephesus. Acts 19: 13-20.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 4.—Elmas the sorcerer. Acts 13: 4-13.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 5.—Simon's sin. Acts 8: 14-24.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 6.—Paul writing to the Ephesians. Eph. 2: 8-22.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 7.—The Ephesians admonished. Eph. 4: 20-32.

First-day, Third mo. 8.—Their former state. Eph. 5: 1-16.

The city of Ephesus was the most important in Asia Minor. Though, like many of the commercial cities of antiquity, it was situated a short distance from the sea, it was still a seaport. It was large and populous, rich and luxurious. "It was pre-eminently the city of astrology, sorcery, incantations, amulets, exorcisms, and every form of magical impostures." It was especially celebrated for the great temple in honor of Diana, one of the wonders of the world. It had a large amphitheatre, capable of seating 50,000 people. Among the inhabitants might be found almost every kind of belief and superstition current at that day. In this city, Paul says, "A great door, and effectual, is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries" (1 Cor. 16: 9). Here he dwelt about three years, laboring in the Gospel and doing some of his most important work. Ephesus was also the abode of the Apostle John, and, by tradition, of Mary, the mother of Jesus. This great city of old time is now a total ruin, and it is only within the last fifty years that even the site of the great temple has been identified.

The verses preceding the lesson should be read, as also verses 17-38 of chapter 20. From these we can gather a few very definite details of Paul's life and work in Ephesus. He taught the Gospel on every day of the week; he taught in public and from house to house; the central point of his teaching was "repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ"; he supported himself while in Ephesus and assisted those who were with him.

13. "Then." Referring to what is described in the verses immediately preceding. "Vagabond." Better, as in R. V., "strolling"; as the other word has changed its meaning. The reference is to Jews who went about from country to country practicing exorcism, or sorcery. "Exorcists." Those who by work, or so-called charm or magic, claimed to have the power of expelling evil spirits. It is evident that these men considered the name of Jesus as a charm and ranked Paul as one of themselves. They appear to have "believed a lie" (2 Thess. 2: 11). At the same time it is clear that many of these exorcists and those who employed them were perfectly conscious of their fraud (verse 18).

14. "Sceva." There is no other mention of him. There is no special reason to suppose that he was an impostor. "Chief priest" should be "chief of the priests." "Did this." Literally, kept doing this.

15. Literally, "The Jesus [whom ye speak of] I know; and the Paul I am acquainted with." "Who are ye?" Scornfully.

16. "Mastered both of them." R. V. The Greek shows that two were thus mastered. Like insane persons, the man doubtless showed great strength. "Naked." The original Greek word does not necessarily imply more than that the outer garment was torn off.

17. "And this became known to all, both Jews and Greeks, that dwelt at Ephesus." R. V. Ephesus was full of sorcerers and magicians, and such an incident would soon become known. "Was magnified." This was doubtless mainly among the believers. It was specially important in a city like Ephesus that there should be no doubt in the minds of any that Jesus was ruler of evil spirits, but also that His power was only with those who really believed in Him. It would never do for the Christians to be mixed up with fraud or unrighteousness.

18. "Many also of them that had believed came confessing and declaring their deeds." R. V. This would seem to imply that though these had become Christians they had still believed in magic, etc., until the incident just related took place. This so affected them that they confessed their participation in such things. This verse seems to refer to those who had consulted magicians.

19. "And not a few of them that practiced curious [magical] arts brought their books," etc. R. V. This verse appears to speak of those who were sorcerers themselves. "Books." Those which contained their mysteries, magical signs, formulas of incantations, and the like. "Burned them." A definite, unmistakable proof that they had given up their former belief and practice. It was no half-hearted repentance; it was giving up that which had been their means of livelihood. "Fifty thousand pieces of silver." This was the Greek drachma, worth about seventeen cents each, or in all about $9,000; but, owing to the difference in values, it would mean in these days about $75,000. A drachma was a day's wage.

20. "Grew . . . and prevailed." "The first verb refers to the general extension of the Gospel; the second to its influence on the conduct of those who embraced it."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Really evil things should be destroyed.
2. Sacrifice at personal loss for what is right is a proof of genuineness of belief.

TOPIC FOR THIRD MONTH EIGHTH.

LESSONS FROM THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT: WHAT CHRIST TEACHES ABOUT HEART-RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Matt. 5: 20-48; 6: 16-18.

Second-day, Third mo. 2.—The righteousness of faith. Rom. 10: 1-10.
Third-day, Third mo. 3.—The ungodliness of hatred. 1 John 4: 19-21.
Fourth-day, Third mo. 4.—The forgiving spirit. Matt. 18: 21-35.
Fifth-day, Third mo. 5.—Cleansing the fountain. Matt. 12: 34-37.
Sixth-day, Third mo. 6.—Fruit of a good tree. Matt. 7: 16-20.
Seventh-day, Third mo. 7.—False fasting and true. Isa. 58: 1-7.

What was the righteousness of the Pharisees? Christ depicts one of them commending himself to God for certain observances which had come to be all of religion to him. These acts called for watchfulness; they were onerous and demanded an outlay of time and money that many were unwilling to give. Doubtless "the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees" was a known standard, and the question may have been put to Jesus whether it was really necessary to be so strict and attentive to matters of religious observance.

But He came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill. He says, therefore, that we must go beyond them in righteousness if we would enter the kingdom; we must excel them in the very point of their boasted superiority or our case is hopeless. Why? Because with them there is no heart—no core, but only a shell of profession. What the law says they had examined closely, but they had not gone beneath the surface.

The idea is not yet extinct that the chief part of piety is a good appearance in the eyes of men; the wife or servant may see quite a different side of some twentieth century Pharisee's character from that which the world at large has knowledge of. How such men underestimate the omniscient God! How will they meet Him whom He hath appointed to judge the world? Above all, if they are such as seek to undermine and deceive and ruin those whose confidence they gain by professions of sanctity? For those "hidden rocks in the love-feasts" of the Church there must be some such fate as that depicted at Jude 12, 13.

Another class is made up of those who lack heart experience and conceive religion to be a perpetual repression, a covering up of the fermenting impurity and evil within. They attach an importance to right living and seek to impose it upon themselves by force of will while the fountain of a corrupt nature remains uncleansed. For such as these there is both condemnation and hope in the teaching of Christ; condemnation for their lack of a thorough work, and hope in the very fact of the condemnation; for what He judges men for He delivers them from—if they will have it so.

The supreme quality of heart righteousness is love. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." It cannot be simulated; it cannot remain hidden; its outworking will be a spontaneous and sincere conformity to all rules of right living. Christ teaches the renewal of life at its source. Righteousness is then the sequence without struggle. The good tree violates none of its tendencies in the bearing of good fruit.

EXTRACTS FROM THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE AFRICA INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

Kaimosi, B. E. Africa, 11th mo. 13th, 1902.

Emma B. Malone, Sec'y.

Dear Friend: The time having come to send a report for the annual meeting of our Board, our hearts are full of praise to our Heavenly Father for the definite and clear leadings of his Holy Spirit, which enables us to submit what to us is a very gratifying account. We have not been and are not now free from trials, by any means, but He who has promised to be with us alway, even unto the end, has verified His promise thus far, and has given grace sufficient. All praise to His name. . . .

After spending nearly five weeks in prospecting, we found this location, which is about twenty miles northeast of Kisumu (Port Florence), the terminus of the Uganda Railway at Lake Victoria Nyanza.

We are a few miles north of the equator at an altitude of 5,300 feet, a favorable equatorial location.

Going back to Kisumu, we made arrangements with the government for locating, and returned here about the 1st of Ninth month. The government officials were very kind and helpful to us. There has been considerable delay in closing the bargain for the land, but we have cut a boundary path, as requested by C. W. Hobley, the sub-commissioner, to aid in surveying the land. The sub-commissioner wants to do the surveying himself.

We have about forty natives now working on the place. Approximately seven or eight acres of land have been cleared, about two of which are dug up and planted with wheat, millet, potatoes and various garden vegetables. We are using green beans, radishes and turnips from the garden now. Will soon have beets, lettuce, peas and potatoes.

We have two milch cows, with calves, two bullocks just purchased, which we expect to break in to work, fourteen sheep, four goats and sixty chickens.

The following necessary buildings have been erected: Store house, 12x22 feet; cow and sheep house, 15x30 feet; chicken house, 10x12 feet, with enclosed yard, 20x60 feet; house, 10x12 feet, near our cow and chicken houses, for the use of some of our men, who, sleeping there at night, make better protection for our live stock; two sanitary buildings, one for missionaries and one for natives. These are all thatched buildings, roof and sides. The other natives on the station have thus far built their own little circular grass huts. We have set twenty-four good, solid posts, which will be required as a foundation for our iron house. We expected it here much before this, but it has been very slow in coming up from Mombasa. However, we are very comfortable for the present. Willis R. Hotchkiss has his living room in one end of the store house, and Arthur and I are in our tents.

We purchase native flour (for our men's rations), chickens, eggs, sweet potatoes, etc., from the natives, paying them in pice (1 pice equals one-half cent), and then sell them cloth, salt, soap, etc., as they desire. This teaches them the use and value of money, about which most of them have heretofore known little or nothing.

We purchased a good, strong ox-cart at Kisumu in Ninth month. Arthur Chilson, our mechanic, has already made quite a number of very useful articles, such as a wheelbarrow, ten-foot ladder, grind-stone frame and reel for our rope. The portable forge given by the Baltimore Friends has made it possible for him to do much work and repairing that could not otherwise have been done here.

Willis Hotchkiss is now spending most of his time on the language. We have a daily morning gospel service in Swahili, with all hands on the station. This is held from about 6.30 to 7 o'clock, before beginning the day's work. We usually sing a couple of hymns in Swahili, with the organ or guitar, and then Willis reads and explains the Scripture; then a hymn, and all kneel, and, led by Willis, we repeat the Lord's Prayer in concert, after which Willis usually offers a short closing prayer. C. W. Hobley, the sub-commissioner at Kisumu, very kindly loaned Willis a vocabulary of Kavirondo words, which he had compiled. Willis Hotchkiss also attends to most of the dispensary work, sometimes assisted by Arthur Chilson, who also looks after it in Willis' absence. Some days we have quite a line of patients for treatment, and other days few. We encourage them to bring something to pay for the treatment received, and, while the fees don't amount to much, we believe it is for their own good. Sometimes the fee received will be a chicken, a little flour, a few vegetables, or a gourd of milk.

Arthur Chilson has charge of the men employed, directing and overseeing them in their work, which is no light or easy task, as they are scattered here and there at various kinds of work. This is by far the heaviest job on the station, but is being executed very satisfactorily.

My time is fully occupied in trading with the natives that swarm the station daily, looking after the garden, keeping the mission accounts, and helping generally wherever most needed. Of course, we all have a great deal of work in general, and we also work interchangeably enough so that when anyone is away the work goes on about as usual, but the above outline is given that you may know in a general way how the work is divided.

The Lord has graciously kept us in good health for the most part, none of us having had any long, tedious sickness. Willis Hotchkiss and I have each had one light and one quite severe attack of fever, lasting for a few days, but Arthur Chilson has been spared thus far. We are all in splendid health at this writing.

The needs of these poor, neglected multitudes are many and great. First of all, they need God, for they are "without hope and without God in the world," being under the power of Satan in fetishism and superstition. They need clothing, as most of them are nearly or entirely naked. They need an earthly physician as well as a heavenly; their impure lives and manner of living being conducive to corruption of body, which manifests itself largely in great open sores. They need to be taught habits of industry, which, if practiced, would enable them to fare better than they do at present.

The Nandi Tribe, a few miles east of us, beyond the forest, are very treacherous and warlike. We had not been here long when various Kavirondo chiefs told us that the Nandi were planning to come over some night and exterminate us and take our cattle and sheep. The rumors came in thick and fast for a few days, but we believed we were in our right place, and prayed that the Lord might bring the wicked devices of the heathen to naught. Not long after this a few of the Nandi were seen lurking about during the daytime, as though spying out the land. We paid no attention to them, but kept prayerfully about our work, and set no watch at night other than the Lord. After a few days some of our Kavirondo men living on the station told us that they saw the Nandi come in the dead of night, when we were asleep, and by the light of the moon looked over all our camp, about out tents, our cattle, sheep, etc. (we had no building for our stock at that time), but went quietly away without molesting a thing or even awakening us out of our sleep. Truly "the desire of the wicked shall perish," and we have been "delivered from unreasonable and wicked men." We thank God with full hearts for answering prayer and setting bounds about us.

The Kavirondo, with few exceptions, have appeared friendly to us, and we are daily asking the Lord to help us live with and before them in such a way that we may have their confidence and friendship and soon be permitted to lead them to a saving knowledge of our Saviour.

Very sincerely, for Christ in Africa,

EDGAR T. HOLE,

On behalf of the Mission.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Leannah Hobson, of Westfield, Ind., assisted by her husband, is engaged in revival work in Centerville, Ind.

It will interest our readers to know that J. Rendel Harris has accepted a professorship in the Friends' Settlement at Woodbrooke, near Birmingham.

Mary Sibbitt, of Kansas, has been doing work for temperance and social purity in and about Richmond, Ind., where she brought these causes to the thought of many.

William P. Henley, of Carthage, Indiana, spent a few days in Philadelphia last week on his way to Europe with his two daughters. They hope to attend London Yearly Meeting.

Evi Sharpless is engaged in a series of revival meetings at Hesper, Kansas. In answer to earnest prayer the Lord is blessing his labors to the conversion of a number of the students in the Academy.

We have received a copy of John F. Hanson's "Light and Shade: or, The History of Friends in Norway." The book is well illustrated and is full of interest. We shall have more to say of it later.

Harriet Green and Sophia Fry spent the past week in Greenfield, Ind., holding afternoon and evening services. Their clear Bible teaching and spiritual talks were appreciated by the members, and will be of lasting benefit to the Church.

John L. Kittrell, of Center Quarterly Meeting, Ohio, is engaged in evangelistic work at Westboro, Ohio. He has been in the work constantly since last yearly meeting, with a demand for his services which exceeds the limits of his strength.

Prof. Cyrus W. Hodgkin delivered the third Christian Endeavor lecture in the Christian Endeavor Course at Knightstown, Ind. His subject was "The Friends' Church vs. War." It was a forceful address, and was well received by a large audience.

Farmington Quarterly Meeting, held in First month at Colma, N. Y., was a season of refreshing, although delegates from two meetings were unable to attend, on account of the smallpox, which caused a quarantine at Elba and a scare at Batavia.

Muncie Monthly Meeting, Ind., was held on the 18th instant, at which time two members were received by certificate, four by letter and eight by request, making fourteen in all. Harry R. Keates, formerly of Glens Falls, N. Y., began a series of meetings there on the 21st.

Milton Kenworthy, who has been engaged in the erection of a suitable school building for boys at Worcester Place, Jamaica, and his wife, Neita, who has been teaching in the Happy Grove Girls' School, in the same place, are now visiting in the United States in the interest of the Jamaica Mission.

Tillman Hobson, an evangelist from California Yearly Meeting, began a series of meetings at New London, Ind., on the 20th ult., which continued nearly three weeks. Quite a number were definitely blessed in conversion and renewal. Some consecrated themselves to the Lord, and rejoice in a Spirit-filled life.

Emma Coffin, of Spencer, Iowa, recently spent two weeks in evangelistic work in the meeting at Lynnvile, Iowa. Eli G. Parker and wife, resident ministers, rendered valuable assistance. Some of the visible results of the meetings are the testimonies of forty-five who were definitely blessed, and ten accessions to our Branch of the Church.

The Friends' Meeting House at Minneapolis, Minn., is very unique in its design, resembling a "little Greek temple." It seems to be so satisfactory in service that Friends who visit it recommend it as a model to those contemplating the construction of a new meeting house. For particulars of the plan of construction write Clarkson Lindley, Minneapolis.

Raysville, Ind., Friends were greatly blessed by the five meetings held at that place by Harriet Green in the three days from First month 26th to 28th. Her work was mostly for the members, and was most spiritual and helpful. At her suggestion a large committee has since been appointed for visiting families in the interest of their souls and the Church.

The Friends' Historical Society (general, incorporated in Indianapolis, Ind.) has recently come into possession of a collection of valuable old books from the library of Sallie Anne Wright, deceased. It is the object of this organization to collect all kinds of historical material pertaining to Friends, and preserve it for the use of the general or local historian.

Minneapolis Meeting, on the 15th instant, was addressed by Professor Maria L. Sanford, of the State University, on "The Open Door." She declared it was incumbent upon Friends as upon no other Christian body to bring to the people the gospel message of the light within, the leading of the Holy Spirit and the obligation of simplicity and honesty in daily living.

David G. Taber, of New York city, sends us the following information: Attention is called to an error in the statistical report in the Pocket Almanac, 1903, regarding the membership of Oregon Yearly Meeting. The present number of Friends reported by that yearly meeting is 1,650, instead of the number printed, 1,162. This makes the total membership in America and Canada 93,289.

Marion Reisinger, a minister, and Mary Reisinger, his wife, an elder of Albion, Iowa, labored three weeks in a revival meeting at Mount Ayr, Kan., most of the time holding two sessions a day, which closed on the 15th instant. There were 22 who professed conversion and renewal; 11 professed sanctification. The meeting was brought into better unity. Two applications for membership have been received.

Dedication Day at "Old Blue River Meeting," near Salem, Ind., was a success both spiritually and financially. Thomas C. Brown preached an inspiring sermon and took charge of raising the money. Fourteen hundred and twenty-five dollars were raised in cash and subscriptions. Samuel Trueblood, for more than fifty years a resident minister in the meeting, very fittingly conducted the dedicatory service.

The meeting at Anderson, Ind., with a membership of 240, is making steady progress. The local minister, F. H. Tormohlen, and the aggressive members in the meeting have been engaged in a revival effort for more than six weeks. More than threescore have been led to take definite steps for Christ, and the end is not yet in sight. Anderson is a town of about 25,000 people, and Friends have an opportunity of doing much good.

Fred L. and Olive A. Ryon closed their evangelistic efforts at Batavia, N. Y., on the 11th instant. They labored in the meeting for about three weeks with much power. One evening of the time was devoted to special temperance talks, and another to the work among the Indians. The monthly meeting occurred on the 10th inst. Mina L. Harkness, from Nine Partners Quarterly Meeting, was in attendance.

Seth W. Osborn, of Columbus, Ohio, recently closed a series of meetings at Ogden, Ohio. A number were saved; others were reclaimed, and the church was strengthened by several accessions to the meeting and Christian Endeavor Society. Ogden was Seth W. Osborn's home meeting nineteen years ago, but everything has so changed that he was almost overcome at times when memory brought up old associations.

New Hope Meeting, Okla., recently received 13 new members, thus making their total membership 33. The meeting is only about three months old, but has been doing excellent work. Alvin George closed a series of meetings there the 8th inst. with 25 conversions. The local minister, Ernest Howard, wishes to express the thanks of the meeting to Richard Harris, of Ontario, Canada, for his contribution in helping to purchase the meeting house.

Joseph B. Davy, instructor in botany at the University of California, has been appointed chief agriculturist and botanist of the Transvaal Government, at an initial salary of $5,000 a year and expenses. He has been spending some time recently in Washington, D. C., preparing a work on "Commercial Botany," which he leaves incomplete for the present. He and his wife started on the 9th instant for a short visit in California before going to South Africa.

Ellen M. Stone, who was captured by Turkish brigands, spoke for two hours of her thrilling experiences, at East Main Street Friends' Meeting, Richmond, Ind., the 11th inst. She had a large and appreciative audience, about fifteen hundred persons being present. The lecture was illustrated with stereopticon views. Miss Stone's powers of description are rarely excelled, and she gathers the hearts of her hearers in the closest sympathy as she moves on from one tragic event to another in her remarkable story.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting, Michigan, was held Second month 7th and 8th. No visiting ministers were present, but the Lord blessed the labors of the home ministers. On First-day S. Adelbert Wood's theme was "Christ Who is Our Life" (Col. 3: 4). Several came to the altar unasked to seek more abundant life, as they realized that they were not bearing as much fruit as they desired to. On First-day afternoon Jacob Baker gave a temperance address from 2 Kings 14: 9, comparing the thistle to the liquor traffic, and the cedar to Christian civilization, and showing the incongruity of a marriage between a thistle and a cedar.

Evangelistic work in Wilmington Yearly Meeting is being blessed abundantly. In the past three months the following series of meetings have been held within its limits: New Lexington and New Burlington Meetings, by Robert Luttrell; Fairview and Grasseys Run Meetings, by Mary A. Sibbitt, of Kansas Yearly Meeting; Wilmington, by Tillman Hobson; Center and Fall Creek and Westboro, by John L. Kittrell; Jamestown, by Charles Moorman and J. L. Kittrell; Ogden, by Seth Osborn, of Columbus, Ohio; New Vienna and Salt Creek, by A. M. Gibson, and other meetings are in progress. These meetings have resulted in about 250 persons seeking and finding Christ in the forgiveness of sin. The meetings have been greatly blessed, and a large number added to the church.

Joseph Sturge is collecting facts to show the demoralizing effect of war. He has published in the London dailies the following notice:

"Sir:—I am collecting records of acts and utterances illustrating the demoralizing influence of the late war upon individual and national character. It has occurred to me that it would be useful to have a selection of these in permanent form. I should welcome the co-operation of your readers in this work. All information, newspaper cuttings, etc., should be accompanied by names and dates for purposes of authentication, and should be addressed to me at "The New Age Press," 8 John Street, Adelphi, London, W. C. Yours, etc.,

"JOSEPH STURGE.

"Birmingham, January 15th."

The eleven days' series of meetings at Penn College, conducted by Ellison R. Purdy, of Marshalltown, Iowa, were closed on the 10th instant. The meetings were very helpful to all attending them. In the twenty-five sermons and prayer-meeting talks the gospel was preached with breadth, depth and definiteness, and with simplicity and power, unto the edification of believers and the conversion of a number. Many testify to the goodness of God and the Redeemer's definite blessings. Permanent good has certainly been done, and Christ and the truth have been honored. Characteristic of this work at Penn is the body of active Christian workers among the students. It is expected that the work will continue through these and other Christian workers. These were all mentioned with appreciation at the last meeting, when Brother Purdy preached on "Seeking First the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness," and exhorted all to faithfulness. His own faithful appeals and sound teachings, enforced with admirable candor and Christian courage, leave an example to all.

The first general meeting of Friends in Australia was held in Melbourne, beginning with a meeting of the Committee of Arrangements, on Seventh-day, Eleventh month 1st. On First-day there were meetings for worship at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m., and at 4 p.m. a Bible class was held under the leadership of John Morland. On Second-day, at 3 p.m., there was a general meeting on ministry and oversight, at which there was an attendance of 29, each of the established meetings in Australia being represented. The general meeting commenced on Second-day, Eleventh month 3d, at 7.30 p.m., with an assemblage of 94 Friends. The largest number present at any of the meetings was 105; the smallest 70, and the average 92. Considering the distance to be traveled, and the difficulties of leaving home and business, this attendance was very inspiring, and the interest was well maintained throughout the eight sittings. Twelve members came from New South Wales, ten from Tasmania, six from South Australia and two from Queensland. About twenty Victorian Friends, not resident near Melbourne, were also present. There were special messengers of love from London Yearly Meeting in the persons of John Morland (its clerk), Joshua Rowntree and Isabella Rowntree, and the meeting was greatly helped by the presence of Henrietta Brown and E. Maria Bishop, who have for about two years been traveling amongst Australian Friends; also by that of Priscilla and Susannah E. Wells, from Birmingham, and of Thomas E. Grubb, a minister of Cork Monthly Meeting.

DIED.

HILL.—At Las Cruces, New Mexico, Second month 11th, 1903, Abbie S., wife of Fowell B. Hill, of Chicago. She was a member of Chicago Monthly Meeting, and a strong Christian character.

IRWIN.—At Lick Run Mills, Pa., Fifth month 10th, 1902, Ellis Irwin, in his 98th year. He was a Friend by birth and by choice.

REECE.—At the home of her daughter, Sophronia Haworth, near New London, Ind., Second month 5th, 1903, Abigail Reece, aged 85 years. She was the oldest member of New London Monthly Meeting, Ind. She was a beloved "mother in Israel," and died happy in the Lord.

WRIGHT.—At her home in Indianapolis, First month 12th, 1903, Sally Anne Wright, aged 77 years. She was the daughter of Charles and Susan Stroud; born at Stroudsburg, Pa., 1825. She was married to Benjamin Wright on her 21st birthday. She was a lifelong member of Friends, and active in the work, having served in many important positions.

There once was a man from Nantucket,
Who kept all his cash in a bucket;
But his daughter, named Nan,
Ran away with a man;
While as for the bucket, Nantucket.
—“Princeton Tiger.”

But he followed the pair to Pawtucket—
The man and the girl with the bucket;
And he said to the man
He was welcome to Nan;
But as for the bucket, Pawtucket.
—“Chicago Tribune.”

Then the pair followed Pa to Manhasset,
Where he still kept the cash as an asset;
But Nan and the man
Stole the money and ran,
And as for the bucket, Manhasset.
—“New York Press.”

The glory glistens in our view, but we are not always ready to consider its cost. The only path to the glory is that which lies through the tangled thorn-brake of sorrow. The corn of wheat must fall into the ground and die, lying alone and forsaken through the winter, with its pitiless blasts and frost.—F. B.
Meyer.

“I see the scoundrel in your face!”
exclaimed the angry man.

“That,” replied the other calmly, “is a personal reflection.”

BUILDING BONES.

Of Great Importance That Children Have Proper Food.

A child will grow up with weak and small bones or strong and sturdy frame, depending on the kind of food given.

That's why feeding the youngsters is of such great importance. The children do not select the food—the responsibility rests with the parent or guardian, or with you if you select the food for a boy or girl.

The scientific selection of this food should begin as early as possible. That's when the delicate little plant needs the tenderest care. A well-known lady of Calistoga, Cal., says: “About two years ago my little niece was taken sick.
When medical aid was called one physician pronounced the case curvature of the spine; another called it softening of the bones and gave but little hope of her recovery. For weeks she had been failing before her parents thought it anything but trouble from her teething.

“She had been fed on mushes and soft foods of different kinds, but at last her stomach could retain scarcely anything.
At this time she had become a weak little skeleton of humanity that could not much more than stand alone.

“The doctors changed her food several times until finally she was put on Grape-Nuts which she relished from the first and ate at almost every meal and her recovery has been wonderful. She has been gaining ever since in strength and weight.

“She has eaten dozens of packages of Grape-Nuts in the last year and a half, and the child is now a rosy-cheeked and healthy little girl, still clinging to her Grape-Nuts.

“It is plain the food has saved her life by giving her body the needed material to keep it well and the bone material to build with.” Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

PRAYER.

I bow my forehead in the dust,
I veil mine eyes for shame,
And urge, in trembling self-distrust,
A prayer without a claim.

I see the wrong that round me lies,
I feel the guilt within;
I hear, with groan and travail cries,
The world confess its sin.

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

No offering of my own I have,
Nor works my faith to prove;
I can but give the gifts He gave
And plead His love for love.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

And Thou, O Lord, by whom are seen
Thy creatures as they be,
Forgive me if too close I lean
My human heart on Thee!

—John G. Whittier.

A MEDIEVAL APOSTLE OF LOVE.

In his introduction to S. M. Zwemer's biography of Raymund Lull, the first missionary to the Moslems, Robert E. Speer, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, writes glowingly of this medieval apostle of love.

“Lull,” he says, “was the greatest missionary who has ever gone out to the Moslem world. He was one of the outstanding figures of the Catholic Church in the thirteenth century—he was a Christian of the modern spirit of Catholicity—neither Roman nor Protestant—a man of spiritual judgment, of divine love. He saw the futility of authority in matters of religion at the time that other men were busy with the most devilish expression of belief in authority ever conceived—the Inquisition. He loved Christ with a passionate love, and saw that the only true missionary method was the method of love. . . . It sets forth the greatness of Lull's character the more strikingly to see how sharply he rose above the world and church of his day, anticipating by many centuries moral standards, intellectual conceptions, and missionary ambitions, to which we have grown only slowly
since the Reformation.”

Let us not be of those who discourage others by telling them how bad the way is, or that it is not for them, or that the sacrifice is terrible, or that they can never succeed. Let us go out of our way to cheer others up; let us make the entrance to the church and the Christian life as easy as we can for the little children, of whom the Saviour thinks a good deal more highly than he can of us.—
Robert E. Speer.

“Don't you wish you had an automobile?” said Miss Miami Brown.

“Oh, I dunno,” answered Erastus Pinkly. “A mule doesn't cost near so much money an' it's purty near as dangerous.”—“Washington Star.”

THE SAILOR'S SONG.

Oh, the wind's to the west and the sails are filling free!

Take your head from my breast; you must say good-bye to me.

You'd my heart in both hands, but you did not hold it fast,

And the mill cannot grind with the water that is past.

Oh, it's I must away, and it's you must bide at home!

I am sped like the spray, I am fickle as the foam;

It was sweet, my dear, 'twas sweet, but 'twas all too sweet to last,

For the mill cannot grind with the water that is past.

We have clasped, we have kissed, but you would not give me more:

I must win what we missed on some other, farther shore.

You can never hold the gray gull that swings about the mast,

And the mill cannot grind with the water that is past.

You will mourn, you will mate, but 'twill never be with me:

I am off to my fate, and it lies across the sea,

For it's God alone that knows where my anchor will be cast,

And the mill cannot grind with the water that is past.

—Josephine Dodge Daskam, in the January "Scribner's."

A ROOSEVELT LINE ON CROMWELL.

Dr. David James Burrell, the pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, has a happy knack of illumining old historical scenes and personages with the light of modern instances or hypotheses. Thus, in a sermon upon Oliver Cromwell, epitomized in his recent book, "A Quiver of Arrows," Dr. Burrell makes his readers grasp at once the autocracy of the great protector's methods and character by this illustration, which is most felicitous in that reference is made to one who is both the biographer and discriminating admirer of Cromwell:

"If President Roosevelt should enter Congress and dissolve it with a word, take command of an army and march through Georgia to vindicate the rights of the colored people, eject all the ministers from their pulpits who did not agree with him, and usurp all the functions of the legislative, judicial, and executive departments of the government, he would do very much as Cromwell did."

"Fight you must. Are you going to win or be beaten? Conflict, not progress, is the word that defines man's path from darkness into light. No holiness is won by any other means than this, that wickedness should be slain day by day and hour by hour."—Alexander MacLaren.

KNOWS NO DISTINCTION.

Rich and Poor Alike Suffer from Catarrh in This Climate.

All observant physicians have noticed the enormous increase in catarrhal diseases in recent years, and the most liberal and enlightened have cheerfully given their approval to the new internal remedy, Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, as the most successful and by far the safest remedy for catarrh yet produced.

One well-known catarrh specialist, as soon as he had made a thorough test of this preparation, discarded inhalera, washes and sprays, and now depends entirely upon Stuart's Catarrh Tablets in treating catarrh, whether in the head, throat or stomach.

Dr. Risdell says, "In patients who had lost the sense of smell entirely, and even where the hearing has begun to be affected from catarrh, I have had fine results after only a few weeks' use of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets. I can only explain their action on the theory that the cleansing and antiseptic properties of the tablets destroy the catarrhal germs wherever found, because I have found the tablets equally valuable in catarrh of the throat and stomach as in nasal catarrh."

Dr. Estabrook says, "Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are especially useful in nasal catarrh and catarrh of the throat, clearing the membranes of mucus and speedily overcoming the hawking, coughing and expectorating."

Any sufferer from catarrh will find Stuart's Catarrh Tablets will give immediate relief and being in tablet form and pleasant to the taste, are convenient and always ready for use, as they can be carried in the pocket and used at any time as they contain no poisonous drugs, but only the cleansing, antiseptic properties of Eucalyptus bark, blood root and Hydrastin.

All druggists sell the tablets at 50 cents for complete treatment.

"Are these real down pillows?" "Oh, no; they're only marked down for the day."—Exchange.

A bright little fellow was turning over the dusty leaves of the family Bible, when suddenly he asked his mother, "Mother, is this God's Book?" "Yes." "Why, then," said the tiny little fellow, "hadn't we better send it back to God; for we never use it."

GONE.

Gone? and the world to go on as before?
Gone with a smile, from the old homestead door,
Dear, faithful heart, to come back, nevermore?

Oh, sad nevermore.

Gone? and the seasons to come and to go,
Wreathing her grave in blossom and snow?

Snow on the bosom that sheltered us so!
Cruel and pitiless snow!

Home is not home; mother's not there!
Dark is her room, empty her chair;
Angels have taken her out from our care;

Lifted her over life's stair.

Sleep, mother, sleep, with your hands on your breast,
Poor weary hands, they needed their rest,

Well have we loved you, but God loved you best,

Dear heart! He's given you rest.
—Agnes Haskell.

PHILADELPHIA, THIRD MONTH 5, 1903.

No. 10.

Events and Comments.

Plans are in the making for a celebration next Fifth month of the 250th anniversary of the original city of New York, and the 100th anniversary of the City Hall.

The German Government has decided to readmit the Jesuits, who, since 1872, have been excluded from the country. The proposed reform permits them to reside in the land, but will not allow them to found their chapters there.

An appropriate and lasting monument to Susan B. Anthony is assured by the setting aside of an alcove in the library of Congress for the largest collection of woman-suffrage literature in the world. The books were given by her on the occasion of her 83d birthday.

The jubilee celebration of the completion by Leo XIII., of his twenty-fifth year as Pontiff, recently took place in Rome. The Pope is nearly ninety-three years old, and has attained to the years in his office which tradition attributes to the Apostle Peter.

The D. O. Mills astronomical expedition to the southern hemisphere, after two years of preparatory work, sailed for Chili on the 28th ult. The observations will be conducted by University of California astronomers, headed by William H. Wright of the Lick Observatory.

The announcement is public that Andrew Carnegie has decided to give $100,000 to the Western Reserve University of Cleveland, Ohio, for the establishment of a department for the training of librarians. It is also reported he has opened negotiations with a financial syndicate of The Hague for the sale of an estate there, which formerly belonged to the grand ducal family of Saxe-Weimar, upon which he proposes to erect a "Palace of Peace."

What is bound to become one of the greatest problems of the twentieth century has suddenly confronted London in a rather peculiar form. Dr. Colingridge, the chief medical officer of London, has issued a report in which he announces that all of the Thames fisheries, including the estuary, are contaminated with the bacilli of typhoid fever. It is one of nature's warnings that the limit has been reached, beyond which it is not wise to crowd together a greater population than is now comprised in the world's metropolis.

The new Chinese minister, Cheng Tung Liang Cheng, is bringing a large suite to Washington. It comprises seventeen persons, and is absolutely unique, not only in size, but in personnel. Besides these seventeen persons the new minister is bringing with him twelve young men, of whom ten are coming to study at their own expense. They include the grandson and two grand nephews of the Chinese grand secretary, Sun Chia-Nia, formerly chancellor of the Peking University and imperial tutor to the present emperor of China.

The Sultan has agreed to adopt the scheme for reforms in Macedonia. In the plan, as proposed and accepted, the Powers recommend, in addition to the appointment of an inspector general of the gendarmerie for three years, with ample powers to act independently and to requisition troops in case of emergency, and the reorganization of the gendarmerie and police under European instructors, that Christians be admitted into the gendarmerie in numbers proportionate to the population, without being required to read and write the Turkish language. Amnesty is also demanded for all persons who have been arrested for political offenses.

The Western Alaska Construction Company, of Chicago, has filed maps and surveys with the Interior Department at Washington for the construction of the Council City and Solomon River Railway in Alaska. The system will connect all the principal mineral-producing areas and centers of population and mining. A franchise has also been granted to the Manila Railway Company, of the Philippine Islands, giving them the right to construct a branch road forty miles long from a station named Guiguinto to Cabanatuan, a town lying northwest of Manila. This concession marks the beginning of an epoch of railway development which it is expected will open up the agricultural resources of the interior.

The medical world is much interested in the new theory recently advanced by Dr. C. E. de M. Sajous, concerning "the ductless glands" and their relation to disease. He has been investigating the subject since 1889, and has found among other things that the supra-renal capsules have a most intimate connection with the vital elements of the physiological system; that their secretion is carried directly to the lungs, and that it is this that takes up the oxygen introduced through the breathing apparatus, forming a new substance, named by him "andrenoxin," which becomes mixed with the fluid part of the blood, and courses through all the blood channels of the body, even the minutest. It is this "andrenoxin," and not the red corpuscles, as formerly believed, which, according to Dr. Sajous, supply all the tissues with oxygen.

THE REJOICING OF HOPE.

Hope always follows faith, as the shadow does the body. You cannot have faith and not have hope. It makes no difference how hard the circumstances, how unpromising the earthly situation, the man of faith will find an occasion for hope in it, as the farmer does in these bleak days as he walks over his frozen fields. He sees how hard and cold the soil is, but he sees also that the sun is climbing higher in the heavens every day, and he rejoices in the hope of a good harvest when the time comes for it. It was just this "confidence of hope," this "assurance of hope," which gave the early Christians such power in their battle with the sin and evil which lay everywhere like a dead weight on the Roman world. They knew that the sun was in the heavens, and they kept their minds on that. One of these valiant souls, who wrote evidently in a period of persecution and danger, tells us that his "hope is an anchor, sure and steadfast." It always is. No man is beaten so long as he keeps up hope. His life is anchored and will not drag. This same man cries out, "We are Christ's house, if we keep rejoicing in our hope firm unto the end." (Heb. 3: 6.)

It might be well for us to take account of stock right here, to see how much hope we are carrying. It is, too, not only important to "abound in hope," but we need to remember that other word which has already been repeated, "rejoicing" in our hope—clear to the end. Hope changes the face, and filters all through the being. It is impossible to hide it.

Almost everybody agrees with all this so long as we talk of hope in the abstract. He "hopes for the best," and he "hopes things will turn out right." Yes, but that is not enough. Nobody rejoices much in such a vague hope as that. One would think to hear some preaching that the minister believed the world pretty much a hopeless affair. He dwells on imperfections; he draws his illustrations from the failures and the misguided; he describes, often with sensational minuteness, the bad condition of his own neighborhood; he denounces until you almost forget that there are beatitudes. It is hard to tell who is helped by this. Bad persons never are, and it is doubtful if good persons are. To be dragged through the world's mire and doubt, seldom adds power and strength. What we all want to know is what the gospel of Christ can do for us. We want to hear of its victories and its triumphs. We want to have the great examples and types of life set before us. We want to see something which will kindle us and encourage us to press on in the fight for a holier life and a holier world. But the worst of this other gloomy view is that those who have grown so hopeless of their neighborhoods, and of men generally, are doing almost nothing to help the condition. In the first place, it is impossible to help a poor fellow if you see only the bad in him, and draw up your own clean skirts from contact with him. The moment you draw a hard and fast line between yourself and him you can have no influence upon him. He must be touched first with sympathy, and that means that he must be understood. The sinner is not reached until somebody believes in him.

In this method of dealing with men Christ gives us a great lesson. The common people were glad to hear Him. The men and women who had been struggling in sin loved Him. It was because they saw that He loved them, and had hope for them. He reached through their sin and mistake and failure, and touched anew the inner springs of hope. "I do not condemn thee; go and sin no more." Who would not try again, after such a word! The warm, penetrating sun breaks up the ice and frost much better than an iron sledge will do it. Gentleness and hope and love go deeper than the rough blow of judgment.

THE LESSON OF A BUSINESS MAN'S FAITH.

WE hear much less nowadays than formerly of death-bed experiences, for we realize that the way a man lives is more important than the way he dies. But it is always comforting to have a high and noble testimony from lips which are becoming dumb, and when a young man with a life of great prospects and great issues before him faces death without a sign of fear and without a single murmur it is a fact to be recorded with reverence. In the hope that his experience may be a lesson to some of our young Friends who are engaging in active and engrossing careers, we wish to touch again upon the religious life of Edward R. Strawbridge, and particularly upon his dying testimony. "When I am walking through the store," he once said to a friend, "I sometimes feel almost overcome with the love of my Heavenly Father." This is an excellent illustration of the true power of religion. It enables a man under the heaviest press and burden of work and responsibility to feel his life interlaced in the life and the love of God. His joy flows like a river and he has in the midst of difficulties the sense of victory. And when this young man, who had extraordinary future prospects on earth, came to his death-bed and realized that his time of departure was at hand, he was entirely at peace and possessed of a patience, sweetness and resignation which touched all who saw him. He was heard to say after a period of extreme prostration, "I thought the Lord wanted me to go. If not, I will stay and work as hard as ever, but I have no fear."

He was heard to say in prayer: "My Saviour, Thou hast always been with me in my business life and in my home life, taking me by the hand and leading me in the way that I should go." Finally, just before he passed over he was heard repeating, twice over: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I fear no evil; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me." It will do us all good to pause and consider how a genuine faith equips a man for any event. He feels the infinite goodness of God in the cares of his business life, and he has the comfort of the rod and staff when his feet tread the mysterious path into the unseen. This faith is good to live by, and it is good to die by.

CHRISTIAN AND PHILANTHROPIC WORK CARRIED ON BY THE MEMBERS OF TWELFTH STREET MEETING, PHILADELPHIA.*

BY ELIZABETH B. JONES.

This is a busy world, and we all know it; many of us know that we are busy people. That is to say we know how full our time is, how quickly days and months and years slip by. Looking back, however, have we not wondered whether it has all been worth while. Whether, after all, we have not wasted both time and strength on what had but little real value and had missed the quest after truth.

Naturally enough such reflection leads to comparisons, and we turn instinctively to see what those nearest to us in circumstances and opportunities have done with their lives. Broadly speaking, such persons may perhaps best be found in one's congregation. In our large membership at least any one of us will find many kindred spirits.

What then are our Friends doing? Is it not well to find out? And might not some knowledge on this line lead both to conservation of energy and a better division of labor? Might it not show us, too, where weaknesses lay, where apparent activity was hiding a most unhealthy condition of things? Thus it has seemed well to study our position from this point of view, and my part has been to present some figures for others to fill out. Some of the figures have been partially guessed, since absolute accuracy was impossible without a much more exhaustive search.

The whole number of members of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia for the western district is 768, of whom 632 are adults, 313 men, 319 women, a net increase of 9 over last year. Five hundred and eighty-nine of these live near enough to Philadelphia to take part in the various lines of work under consideration. What is carried on entirely in other cities or communities and not in touch at any point with the home meeting has been omitted.

For purposes of convenience I have classified our activities into somewhat arbitrary groups as follows:

Work within the monthly meeting, work in the associations meeting during yearly meeting week, work for education, First-day Schools, Fellowship Unions and the Round Table, Friends' Institute, general philanthropic work.

As is usually the case, it has been found that on a comparatively small number has fallen the burden, while others have seemed to do but little. This is, of course, often merely a seeming, since the home and business lives of so many of us are too full to allow of anything beyond. Let us, however, note the facts in the first group. We have on our records 38 officers and 13 standing committees; 80 different persons fill 132 different places, which, making due allowances, does not show quite the proportion that it should. On occasional committees the distribution of the work is wider. In the larger work of the yearly meeting we have some representation also. Two of our members are clerks of the quarterly meeting, two are members of the meeting for sufferings, four are on the yearly meeting's committee to visit subordinate meetings, while a few others are on other committees.

The editor of THE FRIEND is also of our number.

Sixty-five persons of our membership take a more or less active part in the second group of what I might perhaps call yearly meeting organizations, of which there are six now at work in a prosperous and successful way. In all but one of these our meeting has an unusually large proportionate representation. In two we may claim the chairman. Some of our members are busy in three out of the six.

For education, either on boards of trustees or on committees of the yearly meeting or monthly meeting, or otherwise, we have 66 different members who are studying the problems of the varying situations and endeavoring to put their solutions into practice.

The First-day School work is fairly well known, and may therefore be passed over with the mere statement that we find 36 of our members teaching in 10 of the schools belonging to the association, while two other schools have been started by two Friends near their rather distant home. Closely allied to this work are the three fellowship unions for women and the newly-organized Round Table to study Quaker history and problems. To these belong 67 Friends, mostly younger Friends, who, feeling the need of closer union and deeper knowledge, have thus come together and are earnestly seeking after truth.

The Friends' Institute holds a unique place in our yearly meeting, and I might almost say in any American yearly meeting. Suggested and largely organized by one of our members for the help of young Friends, especially strangers in the city, it has become a factor of great good, and has solved for us the problem of making the meeting house a place of open welcome to all and a center from which to carry on all manner of work for the betterment of others. Though not under the care of the monthly meeting in any specific way, we yet are represented by ten members on a board of seventeen, and the close connection with our meeting and the continual use we are allowed to make of its rooms gives us a feeling that we possess special privileges.

* Paper read at a Tea Meeting.

To study the philanthropic work of our members is to enter an inexhaustible field, as I found, if not to my sorrow, at least to my perplexity and confusion. Very many practice the injunction to let the left hand know nothing of the doings of the right. Many work more openly, but not in connection with an organization. In addition to this, however, we find the names of 157 different members as officers or members of committees of 36 different societies in Philadelphia, and 5 in Haverford, beside a small home in Tennessee.

The overseers of the Penn Charter School have also a coal fund and are responsible for certain bequests and trusts which are distributed by our Committee on the Poor. The various organizations may be classified somewhat as follows: Eight homes for the needy or fallen, 3 hospitals, 3 houses of industry, the Dorcas, 5 societies to distribute coal or other necessities, 2 branches Needlework Guild, 2 sewing societies, 5 that carry on mission meetings, evening clubs, etc.; 3 to distribute Bibles and tracts, the Earnest Workers, which manages several clubs and a successful free kindergarten; the Prison Society, the Women's Christian Association, the Civic Club, the Apprentices' Library, the Foulke and Long Institute.

Some of these are wholly under the care of Friends. In others Friends have a more or less important place. They cover, let us hope somewhat intelligently, a wide field of needs, as the list shows, and speak well for the diversities of interest among us. They show, too, that our long-cherished reputation for philanthropy has not become a dead letter, a fact which would be overwhelmingly proved were we to investigate the gifts of money bestowed in one year in addition to the time and labor already noted.

Our meeting may justly feel that it has fruits to show, that the love of its members is being manifested in an outreaching love for others; that the reward promised to those who hand even the cup of cold water will be sure.

We must all be glad to note that we are dropping our strict sectarian lines and are entering into the world's work with others not Friends. But are we in so doing called to abandon entirely our special message? Let us each consider this matter as opportunity may arise.

I shall never forget the beautiful appeal for peace made by one of our members in a committee, where, at the time of the Spanish War, a matter of business, I think the buying of a flag, brought out a great display of the spirit of war. The protest was simply and quietly made, and then dropped, the Friend being in the minority. But it left no doubt in the minds of any that as a Friend she could not favor anything warlike.

Summing up, then, we find the names of 231 members enrolled at least once on the list of workers, which leaves 358 who live near Philadelphia but are apparently not enrolled on any list.

However you may view these figures, and taking full account of the work which is done and well done in our homes and offices and schools, the summary is to me not altogether encouraging. Yet, of 589, 231 are at work. So far it is good. But what is back of the work? Does it grow out of a deep spiritual life and a passion for souls, or do we enter into it to ease our conscience and to silence the call to higher service, pleading as an excuse that our time is filled up?

Is it the outgrowth of a spirit that finds its highest expression in our meetings for worship in communion with God? or does it act apart from that and leave the meetings to take care of themselves?

Let us make this final use of figures. We have four ministers and five elders recorded on our books. One Friend in each group is too feeble to leave her home. There are also about twenty-five who occasionally take some part in the vocal service of the meeting.

On the other hand, we know that some of our members never attend meeting, and many attend but seldom. The week-day and First-day evening meetings are neglected by many, as we heard the other day in answering our queries.

Now the question I wish to raise is this, Does our activity in other lines help or hinder the development of our meetings for worship? And are not they a vital part of our duty? Is it not chiefly in and through them that we can give our message of spiritual Christianity to our age?

So critical is the situation at present that one writer feels that "to this generation it has been given to decide whether the free ministry shall survive in a living fellowship."

He says further, "Complacency must yield to self-sacrifice, selfishness in all its forms to the spirit of stewardship, parochialism to a quickened sympathy as wide as life, and love must crown the whole."

"The ministry is weak because we are weak, our fellowship is smaller than it should be because we have not dared or cared to love enough, and so in the last resort we are driven back to the personal issue, . . . the need for a personal experience of spiritual truth, at once the goal and the motive of all we plead for." Are we ready to adopt these words as true for us also? If so, are we ready to accept the challenge? Are we ready for the toil and struggle involved? To be an interpreter of Christianity costs more by far than to work on half a dozen committees. Our writer says further: "In spite of the conflict that will rage, we shall feel in all things the guiding hand of God and the certainty that His truth shall triumph in the minds and in the hearts of men."

Let us pray, therefore, for a new outpouring of the Spirit, for the baptism of the love of God, for strength and for vision and for the willing mind.

HOW TO BECOME BETTER.

BY WAYLAND HOYT.

Studying Professor Drummond's address on "The Changed Life," in the Maine woods one summer, I was greatly interested in the four ways that author details in which men commonly seek to become better. How close to life they are!

First way of attempting to become better—by resolution, by often spasmodic call upon sheer will power. Just out of Pompeii there is a long street of tombs. The ancients, fearing the darts of death, were wont to build their tombs as closely as possible to the haunts of the living. Is it not true that any one of us need not go very far before, in his own heart and memory, he shall come upon the dreary street of the tombs of dead resolutions? And if you read the epitaphs written on those tombs, how commonly you find that your resolutions have been very short-lived. Ah, me! What many and various death-sicknesses can smite our resolutions.

Second way of attempting to become better—by concentration of attempt against some single sin. But while you do this, sins have chance to flourish. It is as though a gardener should make onset on some single weed, while multitudes of other weeds seize their chance of getting lush and strong.

Third way of attempting to become better—by copying virtues one by one. This is the obverse of the last method. But this tends toward the exaggeration! A man may be very truthful, and at the same time very harsh and unforgiving. Have you not known such? Rounded character is right character. So far forth as character is inharmonious, it is wrong.

Fourth way of attempting to become better—by the diary method. For example, Franklin's code of rules for conduct. But, as Professor Drummond says, "This method is not erroneous, only somehow its success is poor. You bear me witness that it fails. And it fails generally for very matter-of-fact reasons—most likely because one day we forget the rules."

But there is a victorious and transforming way of becoming better. It is the way of companionship with goodness. The changed Valjean and the good bishop are illustrations. But in the place of the good bishop put Jesus Christ, from whom the bishop derived his goodness, and of whose goodness the bishop's was but a pale reflection. Take a scriptural illustration:

"Now, when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus."

Attend a little to the meaning of some words. "Boldness" does not mean a blatant bravery; it means, rather, a certain unabashed ease and freedom of behaviour, a gracious and convincing confidence in speech. "Unlearned" means unlettered, without the peculiar culture of the schools. "Ignorant" means accustomed to lowlier life, not possessing the finished manners of polite society. They "had been with Jesus" explains it all. The beautiful poise of those apostles, their strange power, their manifest uplifting of character, their shining serenity and chastened firmness—albeit they were untouched of schools and had not moved in polished social circles; that something springing from hearts at peace and irradiating their faces—companionship with Jesus was the transforming power and explanation of it all. And this way of transformed and triumphing character is open for any of us. It has stayed with me as a strain of exquisite music sometimes hangs about one—this incident Professor Drummond tells of "a young girl whose perfect grace of character was the wonder of those who knew her. She wore on her neck a gold locket which no one was ever allowed to open. One day, in a moment of unusual confidence, one of her companions was allowed to touch its spring and learn its secret. She saw written these words, 'Whom, having not seen, I love.' That was the secret of her beautiful life."

In the winter the earth has swung itself out of the sun's directer rays, and the birds vanish and the beauty dies. But when the earth again rolls into straighter companionship with the sun, all the glory of the summer is the result.

Self-surrendering companionship with Jesus makes the soul's summer. All transforming ability and various graciousness is in that companionship.

Some Views on Present Topics.

WHAT IS QUAKERISM?

I was very much interested in reading in the issue of Second month 12th "The Passing of an Ancient Meeting House," and I feel like asking, What is Quakerism? To me, also, there is a sadness, even to read of a Friends' meeting house being closed or sold. And a question arises, could not the work be maintained? But to my first question. I am frank to confess a deep heart interest in what I understand to be Quakerism. Some months ago a lady, in good attire, attended our First-day morning meeting, in which, as usual, there were prayers, testimonies, singing and preaching. I was at the door to speak with each one as they passed out. The visitor said, somewhat tartly, "I am from — (an Eastern city). I thought this was a Friends' meeting, but it isn't." The expression set me thinking. The article just read has again awakened the thought, What is true worship? What is Quakerism?

Forty years ago my boyhood answer would have been, "Plain clothes, plain language, and to go to meeting twice each week and sit an hour in perfect silence." But from the experience of years, a study of the lives and labors of prominent Friends, but, most of all, from a study of the Book of books, I am led to believe that Quakerism is the out-working of the inward vitalizing and life-giving Christ. A manifestation in the dealings and doings of every-day life that we have been with Jesus and have learned of Him.

Quakerism stands essentially for the recognition of the personal presence and influence of the living Christ, not only in worship, but in the every-day duties of life. If this statement or definition of Quakerism is correct, is it not suited to all needs, to all times and to all places?

We believe the Bible to be the book for every people, clime and country. I understand that our missionaries in some foreign fields find it greatly to their advantage in gaining access to the people to adopt largely the dress, etc., of the natives, yet in nothing do they compromise their Christianity. Is there not a lesson in it for us? I met a Friend in Rhode Island some years ago, who expressed the thought that Quakerism was only for small towns and country places, but if our views or understandings of the gospel of Christ are correct, then it is adapted not only for the farmer, but to those in every line of honest industry. Where then is the difficulty? Is it not, I ask kindly, in adapting ourselves, our efforts, our manner of presentation to our surroundings, or to those we desire to reach? I remember well when my mother spun and wove the woollens for the family, and with needle and thimble did all the sewing. But certainly we to-day would not refuse or object to a sewing machine to lighten and facilitate the labor in the home.

In temporal matters we want to be up to date. Shall we not be as wise in spiritual things? Really I have desired that in our larger towns and cities our meeting houses might be so centrally located and arranged that there might be reading and rest rooms, open much of the time, to which we invite the weary and all who desired to "come in and rest and pray." If my conception of Quakerism is correct, then it is not alone for "ye olden time," but quite as much for the active, busy Now. Respectfully,

San José, Cal.

INDIANA LIQUOR LAW.

Indiana passes as a Christian State, but we have some peculiar features in our laws determining crime. Last summer we had three deaths caused directly by the licensed saloon. One was a murder committed in the back yard of the "Black Prince saloon." Another was the case of a man who was picked up dead, though nothing could be learned to develop guilt under our law. The third case of the three, all within three weeks, was that of a man who, having been missed for some days, was fished out of a closet in the back yard of a saloon. An investigation raised a suspicion that he had fallen into the pit when drunk, and that he was given the liquor a few minutes after 11 o'clock at night.

The lawful time in Indiana for making drunkards is from 5 a.m. to 11 p.m. The widow brought suit for damages against the saloonkeeper. On the trial it was proven that the liquor was furnished a few minutes after 11 o'clock at night, and the widow was awarded damages in the sum of $1,750 on the ground that the sale of the liquor was unlawful as to time. The judgment was awarded not because the husband was made drunk, not because the woman was deprived of her husband, but because the liquor was furnished a few minutes after the time the Indiana law provides for making drunkards.

A man of "good moral character" may purchase for $100 the right legally to make drunkards in Indiana, provided he does it in the specified time prescribed by statute. The basis for a damage does not hinge on the act of making drunk, but on the time of making drunk. Damages cannot be recovered against the saloonkeeper because the drunken man dies, or because he beats his wife or kills a child, provided he commits the act within the time prescribed by statute for making drunkards.

Drunkards, widows, beaten wives and starved families should congratulate themselves that there are six hours in the dead of night that saloonkeepers cannot lawfully make drunkards and be exempt from damages. Let them be thankful for this humane provision. The time may come when Christian people may ask more than six hours of rest in twenty-four from this curse.

HIGH-SOUNDING WORDS.

I do not wish to disparage any work that is honoring God in bringing men to Christ, or promoting holiness among the children of God, but there are some tendencies of the times against which the servants of the Lord need to be guarded. An illustration of what I mean is seen in some of this season's camp-meeting advertising. Here is an example:

"A Holy Ghost Camp-Meeting. The Father, Son and Holy Ghost will have charge. . . . For particulars write — — —."

Serious as was the notice, I could not help a suppressed laugh when I marked the descent from the first announcement to the closing statement, while, at the same time there was a sense of pain that darted through my soul. To my mind high-sounding names and high-sounding claims had better be used sparingly, and especially so when they are to be used in advance. Children are better described and named after they are born, and even then fond parents often gravely exaggerate. The official name of the Mormon oligarchy is "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints." And among honorable bodies of Christ's disciples there are names in which there is an evident insinuation of superiority in the sisterhood of Christian churches that time has not verified. In what striking contrast to this was the wisdom and modesty of those godly men and women who chose for our own branch of the Church the simple designation "The Society of Friends." To sum it all up, some things are better seen and demonstrated than proclaimed from the house top.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

Bonfort's "Wine and Spirit Circular" says: "A wave of prohibition is sweeping over this country from one end to the other, that threatens to engulf and carry to destruction the entire whisky enterprise. It is growing stronger each day, and each day towns, cities, counties and even States are added to that class in which the whiskey business cannot be carried on legitimately."

The liquor interests are evidently taking this view of the situation, and are therefore just at this time more unsparing than ever in their efforts to break down prohibition laws, influence public opinion in favor of moderate drinking and to extend their own privileges.

A Washington dispatch gives the following brief notice of a most important contest now going on between the liquor and temperance forces:

"More brewers, agents of distillers and wholesalers of wines and liquors are arriving in Washington to urge the defeat of House bill No. 15,331, which passed the House last week under extraordinary circumstances. This is the bill which aims to give States with local option and prohibition laws complete jurisdiction over wines and liquors shipped from other States, regardless of whether they are shipped in original packages or in bulk. The brewers and liquor men are thoroughly alarmed. They are ascertaining from Senators that the temperance societies of the country are fairly flooding them with letters, telegrams and petitions which urge the immediate passage of the bill by the Senate."

The bill here referred to is known as the Hepburn Bill. It is an act of simple justice, and if passed will mark a strong advance on temperance lines. It will be passed by the Senate if the temperance advocates and lovers of justice throughout the country bring their influence to bear in its behalf. Members of the Society of Friends can do much for it by letters, resolutions and telegrams sent to their Senators. The Legislatures of the different States should also be carefully watched, as all sorts of bills are being brought forward to extend the power of the liquor traffic, and will be passed if there is not an emphatic display of public opinion against them.

An illustration of this is given in the fate of the Yates Bill, recently brought before the Pennsylvania Legislature to introduce the sale of liquor into Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. This aroused such a flood of remonstrances from religious organizations, churches and individuals that the Representative who introduced the bill asked that it be reported negatively, which was done.

In Maine a resolution has been introduced to submit to the people the question of continuing the present prohibitory law. At a public hearing before the Legislature on Second month 5th, Lilian M. Stevens, president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, represented the remonstrants and clearly stated the case, as follows:

"We are opposed to resubmission. We do not believe the best people of the State want resubmission. I should, however, make exception of the comparatively few temperance people who no doubt honestly believe that it would aid in the enforcement of law if voters should again declare at the polls in favor of prohibition. But we think the same amount of time and labor that a resubmission campaign would call for applied on law enforcement lines would bring far better results. It is on this ground very largely that Congressman Littlefield is opposed to resubmission. He says he does not believe in 'devoting time and energy to issues that tend to divert attention from the real question—the nomination, election and support of officials who will strictly enforce the law.'

"I need hardly call attention to the large number of remonstrances from every section of the State which have been presented nearly every day since the resubmission resolve was introduced. These remonstrances represent the best people of the various communities. The absence of petitions in favor of the resolve has been conspicuous until yesterday, when petitions from several places, bearing in all 942 names were presented. Notwithstanding the steady stream of remonstrances up to yesterday, we find that to offset these 942 petitioners of yesterday favoring the resolve there were presented yesterday 3,034 remonstrants, to say nothing of several churches, philanthropic societies, who, by the way, have been remonstrating all along. How many ministers, or churches, or philanthropic, or educational societies can the petition for resubmission report? None have been in evidence thus far."

It is generally believed that the Legislature will vote against resubmission by a large majority.

In the recent contest in Vermont there was much to obscure the main issue, and confuse the people, while the liquor trade, the express companies and the railroads knew exactly what they wanted. The new law, which has local option and restrictive features, was passed by a majority of less than 1,200 votes out of over 60,000. If the women of the State had been allowed to record their view of home protection, there is little doubt that prohibition to-day would be established in Vermont. The majority in favor of the new law was obtained in the large towns and cities, and this the two hundred or more little towns in the State were unable to overcome. The next battle will come in the Third month to secure a "no" vote in the local option elections.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN INDIA.

The greatest vice of the so-called Christian nations is drunkenness, and their greatest shame is their practice of forcing this evil upon temperate heathen people.

W. S. Caine, M.P., of England, has lately made an address stating the sad and shameful situation in India caused by the government administration of the liquor traffic for revenue purposes. The following report of some of his remarks is given:

"We had taken hold of the government of a country which was by religion and life abstinent, and had introduced into that country intoxicating liquor and encouraged its consumption. But in spite of that, he believed that not more than twenty millions out of the three hundred millions—certainly not more than three millions—had ever touched intoxicating liquor in their lives. We had given India Western civilization, government, and institutions, and we had forced upon that country the most Western of all institutions, namely, the excise system, and with it, the liquor shop. The Government of India had long since taken the entire control of the liquor trade into its own hands, and was practically the pot boy of India. Almost all the distilleries of India belonged to the government, and they let out liquor shops by public auction to the highest bidder, not the highest bidder in money, but the bidder who undertook to sell the largest number of gallons of liquor from the government distilleries. It was the man who undertook to take the largest amount of drink from the government distilleries who obtained the monopoly of the liquor shops. Year by year this competition went on, and the result was that at every turn the natives were encouraged in every way to consume liquor. The consumption was going up by leaps and bounds; it had doubled during the last twenty years, and was four times as much as it was forty years ago, according to the government returns. He was sure that if a perfectly free vote were taken in India, nine-tenths of the population would vote for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquor. That was the state of the society upon which the liquor trade was forced by the government. There were a great many people who advocated that the whole of the liquor traffic should be in the hands of the State. This had been tried in Russia, with the result that the consumption had increased under government control by over 16 per cent. The whole business of the Indian civil servant was to raise revenue, and ninety-seven out of every hundred rupees of profit obtained for liquor went into the coffers of the government. While the Indian Government could not see their way to prohibit the sale of ardent spirits to children under thirteen years of age, they prohibited its sale to British soldiers; but, of course, the British soldier was of much more consequence, because he cost two hundred pounds a year, and the sale of liquor to him would lead to his being incapacitated, and the money would be wasted. The drink sold in India was, perhaps, the most deadly of all alcoholic drink ever invented, and it had been known to have very speedily brought about death. The excuse given for the encouragement of the sale of this liquor was that revenue must be obtained, but he contended that no nation could ever prosper out of a revenue that was drawn from the vice and degradation of the people. It was simply burning the candle at both ends. The additional cost of the people, owing to the results occasioned by the consumption of liquor, was very much greater than the revenue drawn from the sale of intoxicating liquor. The Indian Government would lose four million pounds of revenue a year if the sale of intoxicating liquors were prohibited, but it would gain much more in the prosperity of the country. Out of the three hundred millions of people of India there were two hundred and seventy millions total abstainers. Although India was not, therefore, a country that could be called a drunken country, efforts must be made to stem the growth in the consumption of liquor, so that it would not become so."

AMERICAN WOMEN NOT WINE BIBBERS.

The impressions of foreign visitors to our shores, and especially some of our English friends, have often been so much the reverse of flattering, that it is a genuine pleasure to record such an opinion as that expressed by Lady Henry Somerset on the eve of her recent departure from America, to the effect that nothing here surprised her more than the sobriety of the American people. English women, in particular, she said, were much more given to drink than American women, and how to deal with this phase of the temperance problem was one of the most serious questions in England. More than four thousand women in London alone, said Lady Henry, had been treated during the current year in the various hospitals and sanitariums of that city for alcoholism.

What our recent visitor has to say about the abstemiousness of Americans is not only flattering, but, best of all, it is true. All who have traveled abroad, and especially in England and Scotland, must have been impressed with the alarming prevalence of the drink habit among the women of the towns and cities in those countries. It is no uncommon sight to see the public houses in London, Glasgow and Edinburgh thronged with women drinking at the bar as freely and openly as the men.

The presence of women in these places and their drinking practices are encouraged, no doubt, to some extent by the fact that women are often employed as bar-maids in the public houses of England and Scotland, a feature of the drink business, we are glad to say, which has never been adopted successfully in this country. An attempt was made to introduce it here some years ago, but with all liberal ideas about such matters it was made evident at once that this was one English fashion at least that would never be tolerated here by law or public opinion, and it was soon given up. We are treated now and then to "startling revelations" in the sensational press about the increase of the drink habit among American women, but a pretty extensive observation of life in American towns and cities fails to furnish any confirmation of these statements.

No woman with any pretence to respectability is ever seen drinking at the bar of an American saloon, and a drunken woman on the streets or in any public place in this country is happily one of the rarest of spectacles. While we as a people have many social sins, and some peculiar to America, to answer for, we are thankful to believe that intemperance among women is far less prevalent here than in some other lands. One reason for this, among others, is that nowhere else in the world are women held in such high respect as they are in America, and nowhere else are they treated with such deference and genuine courtesy.—"Leslie's Weekly."

The International Lesson.

FIRST QUARTER.

LESSON XI.

THIRD MONTH 15, 1903.

THE RIOT AT EPHESUS.

Acts 19: 29-40.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord preserveth the faithful.—Ps. 31: 23.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Third mo. 9.—Seed sowing. Acts 19: 1-10.

Third-day, Third mo. 10.—Reaping. Acts 19: 11-20.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 11.—The riot at Ephesus. Acts 19: 21-39.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 12.—The riot at Ephesus. Acts 19: 31-41.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 13.—Folly of idolatry. Isa. 44: 9-19.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 14.—Confusion of idolators. Isa. 45: 16-25.

First-day, Third mo. 15.—Paul's letter to the Ephesians. Eph. 1: 1-13.

The lesson is a continuation of that of last week, and the intervening verses should be read to gain the connection. The "shrines" were small models of the Temple of Diana, made of terra cotta, marble, or, for the rich, of bronze or silver. They were placed in private houses, or used as votive offerings in the grand temple itself. Very small ones were carried about on the person as amulets or charms. Numbers of these marble and terra cotta shrines have been found in and around the ruins of Ephesus.

23. "About that time." Referring to what is described in preceding verses. "Stir." Commotion. "Concerning the Way." R. V. "The Way." The name in common use for the Christian Life and Belief. Compare Acts 9: 2; 22: 4; 24: 14, 22. Probably referring to John 14: 6.

24. "Demetrius." A common name in Asia Minor; it is hardly safe to connect this one with any other Demetrius. "Diana." It should be carefully noted that this goddess was not the Diana of Greece or Rome. She resembled rather the Venus of Antioch. She was the impersonation of the reproductive element in nature. There is little doubt that the rites of her worship were grossly licentious. "Craftsmen." Something, perhaps, like a modern trades-union. The trade benefited pecuniarily the whole city.

25. He called together first members of his own craft, then the commoner workmen. Demetrius seems to have been the head of the union.

26. "Asia." The province occupying the extreme western part of what we call Asia Minor. "Paul," etc. These words are a striking testimony to the success of Paul's preaching and missionary work.

27. "And not only is there danger that this our trade come into disrepute; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana be made of no account, and that she should even be deposed from her magnificence," etc. R. V. Trade is injured, the most important and that which would appeal to his audience first; then religion is in danger. Self-interest and superstition united naturally brought about a riot.

28, 29. A vivid picture of a riotous, excited course of men. "Gaius and Aristarchus." Gaius was a very common name, and there is nothing to identify him with any other man of the same name. Aristarchus appears to be the same who is mentioned in Acts 20: 4; 27: 7; Col. 4: 10, and Philemon 24. "The theater." This was the common place for an assembly. The theater at Ephesus was a very large one, and held about 25,000 people. It was in full sight of the great temple. The building was open to the sky.

30, 31. Paul was desirous to save his friends, if possible, or at least to suffer with them. "Chief of Asia." "Chief officers." Literally, "Asiarchs." These were men of high rank and reputation, who were chosen to preside over the public games and festivals. "Desiring." Better, "besought." It is remarkable that Paul should have had friends among these men.

32. The description is a graphic one of a mob.

33. "Alexander." Some think that this is "the coppersmith" mentioned in 2 Tim. 4: 14. One explanation is that he was put forward by the Jews to explain to the multitude that the Jews were not responsible for the trouble.

34. This act was in itself considered an act of worship.

35. "The town clerk." The recorder or secretary. The term is one having local signification, so that it is almost impossible to express in a word its real meaning. At Ephesus the position was one of honor and authority, as is evident from this account. Coins of Ephesus have been discovered having this title on them. "Appeased." Better "quieted," or even "quelled." "A worshiper." "Temple-keeper." R. V. Guardian of the temple. "Which fell down from Jupiter." Such was the tradition. The image itself was a wooden one of the crudest workmanship.

36-40. The address of the recorder is most skillfully constructed, and so plausible that it cannot be well gainsaid. It is clear that Paul had preached an affirmative gospel rather than a controversial gospel. He had trusted to the truth convincing his hearers, rather than attacking their former beliefs, erroneous though they were. "The law is open." The courts are open. "Deputies." Proconsuls. "Enquire anything about other matters." Better, "If ye seek anything about other matters." "It shall be settled in the regular assembly." "To be called in question." By the Roman Government. One of the few things which the Empire did not tolerate was a tumultuous public assembly, and the multitude were perfectly aware that what the recorder said was true.

All recent discoveries at Ephesus confirm this account as truthful in every detail. It reads like the narrative of an eye witness.

TOPIC FOR THIRD MONTH FIFTEENTH.

LESSONS FROM THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT: WHAT CHRIST TEACHES ABOUT TRUST.

Matt. 6: 19-34.

Second-day, Third mo. 9.—Uncertainty of earthly riches. Prov. 23: 1-5.

Third-day, Third mo. 10.—Treasure in heaven. Matt. 19: 16-21.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 11.—Unrighteous mammon. Luke 16: 9-13.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 12.—An antidote for worry. Phil. 4: 6, 7.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 13.—God's care for us. Job 38: 39-41.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 14.—God's unfailing grace. Phil. 4: 18-20.

The great question in Jesus' day, as now, was the possession of treasures; the only alternative is that which He presented—whether these treasures shall be earthly or heavenly. Those that "trust in riches" have the laying up of them as the aim and end of life. The question is as to what sort they are.

Men have confidence in their efforts when they are able to see results. Our Lord planned for results. He encourages us to expect success. "Lay up treasures" is His admonition, and He tells of a storehouse at man's disposal that is proof against all that would despoil or destroy. There account is taken of the "gold and silver and precious stones" of a character formed on the pattern of our Lord's life. There the "good fruits" of Christian living are garnered. Heaven's books record the deeds done "to the least of these my brethren," of which Christ speaks so plainly, as the testing for those who shall appear before Him as righteous judge.

Are these things remote as compared with earthly treasures? Here, again, we meet the unending conflict between the visible and the invisible; or is it not rather the tendency to fix the thought only on the visible gift and forget the invisible Giver? "Every creature of God is good," but it is only creature. The Christian is to rate the Kingdom as first consideration, and in achieving the greater, he is assured of the less.

The word rendered "anxious" originally meant "drawn in two directions"—distracted, as we say. The distracted man is of small value in any undertaking. Judgment and efficiency are destroyed, and he accomplishes little in any way. Be not distracted, then, about temporalities, right and necessary as it is to use wisely our opportunities to provide them. "Riches take to themselves wings," and trust in them can but be largely mixed with anxiety. That which endures, begets confidence, so the states of mind stand out clearly in that which Christ has to say—confidence and anxiety, trust and distrust; and where the one ends the other begins. Faith is the one cure for worry. It gives body to things yet unrealized—reliance on Him who has promised.

The world about us is more of a revelation of God than is generally understood. Our Saviour read it as an open book. Birds, flowers, the waving grass, the seed sown, the springing blade, all tell of their Creator, who is also our Father. The unending miracle of life perpetuated, revived, exuberant, adorned, teaches trust in the Source of life. If we see nature as Christ saw it we shall see not only illustrations, but proofs, that God is trustworthy.

Missionary Department.

[Communications for this department should be addressed to Herman Newman, 718 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.]

Etarse, C. P. India, First month 23d, 1903.

Having commenced a new year's work among our dear Christian people in India, a few words about the two leading events may interest you. The coronation festivals in various places, with the great Durbar at Delhi and its wonders of color and pageants, with the Duke of Connaught as the King's representative, and princes and kings from almost every part of India, with their retinues, was the first great event of the year, and in each small place poor were fed, houses decorated and lighted up, and in some cases fireworks were let off at night, proclamations were read and original poems or acrostics were written, and songs prepared and sung for the occasion, and most places enjoyed the holiday and became children again.

Our next event was our Christian Mela at Hoshangabad, when for four days we gathered in the large tent pitched on the Maidan, from 700 to 1,000 at the gospel meetings, while in the afternoon separate meetings for men, women, children and workers were held, and gave better chance for pressing special teaching home. Nearly all the missionaries camped with our people on the Maidan (or plain), so as to have opportunity for personal dealing and for social chat with those we often meet mostly in work.

Our American friend, Delia Fistler, gave us valuable help, and an Indian brother from C. M. S. Calcutta, Isman Masih, who has proved a great help to our workers.

We find there has been real blessing on the Mela gatherings, and it does all good to mix with those from other stations and to find out that the world is larger than it often seems when we are just among our daily duties and in some sense living by routine.

It has been a great pleasure to find most of our younger hill people have been living rightly, and some even have won characters for steadiness and good work, while others again have been rovers, and their children have greatly suffered in consequence. This has caused me to open work for these young girls growing into young women or young widows, who were in places of danger, and we are busy gardening, spending an hour a day sewing and learning hymns and Scripture, while fingers are busily employed. We need prayer that God would open their hearts to receive His love and to learn from Him day by day how to serve Him and how to do honest, upright work. All have a day for work and support themselves on that.

Yours in the Master's service,
ANNA L. EVENS.

Luh Hoh, China, Twelfth month 30th, 1902.

I certainly never spent a more profitable and happy Christmas in China, but we seemed to be prepared beforehand for it. In the first place, the death of dear Julia Estes solemnized and saddened the hearts of the Chinese as well as our own. Then we had a week of special meetings, which were a great blessing to us all, many inquirers taking a more definite stand for Christ, and others consecrating themselves wholly to the Lord and His service. After that came Christmas week. All took part in decorating the chapels and preparing for the Christmas day exercises. We held two Christmas services, one Sabbath morning, the other Christmas Eve.

Then Christmas day, at 3 p.m., the church members and all the inquirers were invited, who, with a few extra ones who slipped in, filled the chapel, there being over one hundred people in all.

Our program was as follows: Singing, "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing"; prayer by evangelist; singing; Christmas address by a teacher; recitation and singing, school children singing, and closing prayer; distribution of small presents; the men were given "Pilgrim's Progress," or some other good book (in Chinese), the women towels or soap; afterwards some peanuts, an orange and some Chinese candy. They all seemed surprised and very happy. The following Sabbath morning was very profitably spent in praise and testimony. We trust the good hand of the Lord may continue to rest upon us. Things in China are very unsettled again, but we feel God keeps us in perfect peace.

Yours in Christ Jesus,
M. A. HOLME.

Luh Hoh, China, First month 1st, 1903.

The hospital work is most encouraging. Something over $43 (Mexican) were taken in during Twelfth month, besides a contribution of $10 (Mexican) from Miss Murray at Nanking.

The best of it all is, God is giving us precious souls. I should like to tell you of a military official, who came one hundred miles for an operation. He stayed three weeks, and only went home this morning. There are neither foreigners nor Christians in that part of China from which he came. He had never heard the gospel. While here he became interested almost at once. He listened attentively, bought a Bible, began to pray, attended all the meetings that he was able to, even our quarterly business meeting, at which he contributed $2 towards the oil for lights in the chapel, and went home far happier than when he came. One day we were reading James, fourth chapter, where it says: "From whence come wars and fightings among you?" At once he broke out and said: "I can't be a soldier and kill people and be a Christian." Would to God we had more Christians at home who felt the same way.

Affectionately yours in Jesus Christ,
G. F. DE VOL.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Eunice R. Mendenhall's present address is Winchester, Ind.

Our friend Oscar Roberts sailed for South Africa on Fourth-day of this week.

Emery Pearson has been called to labor in the meeting at Lawrence, Kansas.

Carey Taylor and wife, of New London, Ind., have just closed a successful revival at Marshall, Ind.

Morton C. Pearson, of Knightstown, Ind., expects to study in Chicago University during the summer quarter.

Elbert Russell has been appointed by the American Institute of Sacred Literature to conduct four of their exegetical courses of study.

Wm. G. Coffin was in the meeting at Lawrence, Kansas, on the 22d ult., his ninety-third birthday. His mind is still clear and active, and he takes great interest in the welfare of the Church.

Robert L. Kelly was made a member of the Board of Directors of the Religious Education Association, recently organized at Chicago for promoting religious and moral education in the United States and Canada.

Alfred Hadley and wife, of Richmond, Ind., sailed on the Trinidad, of the Quebec and West Indies line, for the Bermuda Islands on the 28th ult. Their postoffice for the present is 3 Main Street, Tarrytown, N. Y.

Elisha Janeway, of Haddam, Kan., recently engaged in gospel service at the Iowa Mission, Oklahoma, holding six services. Then Oliver Beason and Charles Fear, of Shirley, Ind., took up the work and continued the meetings two weeks longer.

The meeting of Friends at Greenfield, Ind., has been very much revived and built up through the earnest and efficient work of Daisy B. Barr, a gifted woman in the ministry. The membership are active, wide awake co-workers with her in the cause of Christ.

J. Rendel and Helen Harris are expecting to spend six months in Armenia before taking up their educational work at Woodbrooke, near Birmingham. The visit to Armenia is in the interests of the orphans who were left homeless at the time of the massacre.

Butternuts Quarterly Meeting, New York, affords an opportunity for pastoral and church extension work. Any one who feels drawn to labor within its limits can obtain full information by writing the superintendent of evangelistic work, Henry K. Peckham, Upperville, N. Y.

Prof. Edwin Morrison, of Penn College, addressed Friends at their meeting house in Minneapolis on the evening of 21st inst. on "Subduing the Earth." He also preached to good audiences at the morning meeting, and at an evening meeting on the 22d. His visit to Friends in Minneapolis was, indeed, welcome, and all his services were of a very interesting character, and were heartily received.

On Sabbath morning, Second month 8th, sixteen children were publicly received into Gibara Monthly Meeting as associate members, the occasion being made very impressive by a sermon on the duty of the church and of parents to the young, and an earnest season of consecration, in which the pastor, elders, overseers and parents besought the blessing of God on their efforts to train these children in the fear of God.

Harriet Green and Sophia Fry spent some time at Guilford College and New Garden Meeting recently. While at the college they held two religious meetings daily with the students, one with the boys and one with the girls each day. They attended Western Quarterly Meeting at Cove Creek; Southern Quarterly Meeting at Back Creek, and Deep River Quarterly Meeting at Springfield. They expect to be at New Garden Quarter on the 7th, which will be held at Greensboro.

West Branch Quarterly Meeting was held at West Milton, O., 20th to 22d ult. The meeting was favored throughout with the services of Allen Jay, of Richmond, Ind. John Thomas, of West Milton, was appointed to succeed Jonathan Jay as superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work. The quarterly meeting shows good interest in church extension work, a committee being appointed from the Ministry and Oversight Meeting to look out new fields in outlying districts.

In his speech in the Indiana Legislature, nominating Charles W. Fairbanks for re-election as United States Senator, Booth Tarkington, author of "The Gentleman from Indiana," speaking of the use of the term "greatness," said: "Even the solemn historian has been known to misuse the term greatness—to name, for instance, as great, men who by supreme intelligence and an extraordinary capacity for crime have merely achieved criminal personal ambition as Alexander and Napoleon."

The Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations of Whittier College recently united in a series of meetings, which have resulted in a great spiritual uplift to the students. Levi Mills, the resident minister, and an evangelist, C. J. Hall, spoke with awakening and convincing power, but it was largely the earnest personal work of the students themselves which brought about such abundant results. A dozen lives were consecrated to Christian living, and a half hundred professed a nearer relation to Christ and a nobler purpose than they had known before.

Walnut Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at Northbranch, Kan., Second month 14th, 1903. Cold weather setting in just before the meeting prevented a large attendance. Josiah Butler, yearly meeting superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work, was present at each session, and gave very helpful addresses. The action of Northbranch Monthly Meeting in recording J. Perry Hadley a minister of the gospel was endorsed. Pleasant Ridge Monthly Meeting, formerly a part of Mt. Ayr Quarterly Meeting, was received as a part of Walnut Creek on account of its being more accessible to that meeting.

The different sessions of Bloomingdale Quarterly Meeting, held 20th to 22d ultimo, were full of interest, though the attendance was not as large as usual on account of a recent small-pox scare. David Hadley, who was present in the interests of Earlham College, preached an able sermon on Seventh-day. On Sabbath morning was held the usual conference on Bible School work. At the meeting for worship Cyrus Jones gave a helpful message. The Women's Foreign Mission Society held a profitable session on Seventh-day morning. At the meeting of the Academic Association, on Seventh-day evening, a varied program of papers, recitations and music was given.

The Committee on Legislation from North Carolina Yearly Meeting met last week in Greensboro and addressed the following recommendations to the General Assembly: "We do hereby most respectfully petition and memorialize your honorable body to so amend the present law that juries in our State courts be allowed, as juries in the Federal courts are allowed, to bring in a verdict of guilt with the clause 'without capital punishment' appended. See 29th U. S. Statutes at large, page 487, which allows the jury to qualify their verdict by adding thereto, 'without capital punishment,' and with such a verdict the person convicted shall be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for life." This was sent to the Legislature in the hands of a member of the Permanent Board. They also made an appeal for the passage of a pending bill to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the State, and encouraged legislation against lynching.

The Program Committee of Butternuts Quarter, New York, has arranged a provisional program for the next quarterly meeting, which provides for five meetings for worship, four praise services and one missionary meeting. One hour will be given to the consideration of the Evangelistic Committee, its qualifications, work, and relation to the Yearly Meeting Committee. One evening will be devoted to "Church Extension—What is It? How Accomplished? Individual Responsibility." A Bible School will be held First-day. The business sessions will be interesting, as the reports from monthly meetings and committees will give full accounts of the state of society. The next session will be held at Westmoreland, near Rome, N. Y., Fifth month 15th, 16th and 17th. As Friends from the West will probably pass through Rome on their way to New York Yearly Meeting, it is hoped some will arrange to attend the quarterly meeting. Any one expecting to do so is requested to notify the chairman of the Program Committee, Frank H. Clark, East Hamilton, N. Y.

We take the following extract from a personal letter received from George A. Barton:

"I had a fine day with Herod at Gebel Fraradies, about five miles southeast of Bethlehem, where Herod had a palace and was buried, with David at the Cave of Adullam and with Amos at Tekoah. With three congenial men and an Arab guide, we left Jerusalem on horseback at 7.15 a.m., getting back at 6.30 p.m. The Cave of Adullam is a marvelous place—a perfect labyrinth of water-worn cavities in the rocks. In places the roof is twenty or twenty-five feet high; in others you have to crawl on your stomach. It is just the place for such scenes as those of 1 Sam. 22 and 24.

"Tekoah, though now an almost uninhabited ruin, is a splendid situation. One sees far to the north of Jerusalem, over the tops of the marvelous mountains toward the Dead Sea, the sea itself and the mighty hills of Moab beyond, and to the south and west the towering heights of the hill country of Judea. Amos was the man for such a country."

MARRIED.

HOLDING—COOK.—At the mission house in Gibara, Cuba. Second month 9th, 1903, Raymond S. Holding, of Greenfield, Ind., and Minnie L. Cook, of Kansas City, Mo. Both are earnest Christian workers, and will take up work at the newly-opened station of the American Friends' Board at Banos, Cuba.

DIED.

ENGLE.—At Pasadena, Cal., Second month 27th, 1903, Maurice D. Engle, of Haddonfield, N. J., in his 34th year, son of Margaret T. and the late Joseph Engle. The deceased was a member of Haddonfield Quarterly Meeting.

HUTCHINSON.—At his home in Indianapolis, Ind., Second month 21st, 1903, George Hutchinson, aged 76 years. He was a consistent and faithful member of Indianapolis Meeting.

MILES.—At her home in Ludlow, Ohio, Second month 4th, 1903, Estella Pearson Miles, aged 25 years. She was a Christian, and expressed faith in Christ and a desire to go and be with Him.

BOOKS.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has received the following books: "The Converted Catholic," Volume XIX., edited and published by James A. O'Connor, at 142 West Twenty-first Street, New York. Price, $1.00 a year. It is a monthly magazine, now in its twentieth year.

"Black Even: A Tale of the 'Forty-Five.'" In verse. By Julia Ditto Young. Price, $1.50. F. Tennyson Neely, 114 Fifth Avenue, New York. The work is a beautiful story dedicated to all whose hearts thrill with "Highland" song and story.

"Furnished Room House: A Tale of New York City." By Silas Wright's Widow (Annie M. Burdick). Price, $1.50. F. Tennyson Neely. The work is one of popular fiction, and is fully illustrated.

"In the Land of Fancy, and Other Poems." By Libbie E. Bear. Price, $1.00. F. Tennyson Neely. The work contains sentimental poems, recitations, in memoriam, and miscellaneous poems.

"In the Trail of the Pack-Mule." By Sid H. Nealy. Price, $1.25. F. Tennyson Neely. This novel is a description of frontier life and adventure.

"Poems of Life and Loving." By Harriet Spangler Shelley. Price, $1.00. F. Tennyson Neely. This is a delightful collection of verse which will appeal to those full of vigor and fancy.

"Poorhouse Lark." By Mary B. Willey. Price, $1.50. F. Tennyson Neely. This story is wrought out of the everyday events of life with a purpose of bringing the reader to a higher plane of living.

"Ways of the World." By Maggie Olive Jordan. Price, $1.50. F. Tennyson Neely. The present work is a character study by the author, emphasizing the use and abuse of wealth.

LIKE A DERRICK.

Pure Food Lifts the Sick Up.

Only those who have experienced the delicious feeling of returning health and vigor can properly appreciate the value of pure food. When the improper food is left off and scientific food such as Grape-Nuts is used in its place, one begins to feel the glow of returning health. It feels as though some powerful derrick was lifting one up into the realms of sunshine once more.

"Some time ago I was taken sick and got so very low that I thought at times I would never be able to get out again," writes a business man of Wilmington, Del. "One day my wife saw an article in the paper about Grape-Nuts and read it to me. I was so impressed that I asked her to get some. How thankful I am that I did so. I was at that time reduced to a shadow of 75 pounds, but the first week's use of Grape-Nuts brought me to my feet so that I could stand alone. By the second week I could walk out, to the great surprise of all, and now I can get out to my business without any trouble, and I have made the phenomenal gain up to 160 pounds.

"Improper food nearly killed me, but when I left it off and used Grape-Nuts it did not take long to put me back in health." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"Feed right, feel right," is a true axiom. Remember Grape-Nuts food is for Athletes, as well as the sick.

BOOK REVIEW.

"The Pit; A Story of Chicago." By Frank Norris. Price, $1.50. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.

The present volume has for its central theme the distribution of American wheat. The scenes described cluster about the great Chicago wheat pit, which is likened to "a great whirlpool sucking the life tides of the city into the mouth of some tremendous cloaca. "All through the Northwest, all through the central world of the wheat the set and whirl of that innermost pit makes itself felt." "Because of an unexpected caprice in the swirling of the inner current some far-distant channel suddenly dries, and the pinch of famine makes itself felt among the vine dressers of Northern Italy, the coal miners of Western Prussia, or another channel fills, and the starving moujik of the steppes and the hunger-stricken coolie of the Ganges' watershed feed suddenly fat and make thank offerings before iron and idol." Thus is the influence of the pit described.

The story shows how men are taken almost against their will from their homes and loved ones, and compelled to labor in their offices for days and nights at a time with overwrought nerves and brains in the awful battle of the Bears and Bulls, where men oftentimes unwittingly bring ruin to their friends in a mad rush for selfish victory and superfluous wealth. The story is modern in every respect. The descriptions are vivid and true to life; the conversations have a charm which carry the reader along with lively interest; but it is void of noble characters. There is little in its women calculated to charm, but "black hair," "brown eyes," and "fine dignity," almost nothing of real womanly worth. True unselfish domestic devotion is suggested in its closing chapters as the goal for earthly existence. Its men are usually wreathed in tobacco smoke, there being scarcely a situation described with a man in it without cigars or cigarettes being mentioned.

THE TOYS BOYS USED TO MAKE.

"I wonder if the world realizes that some of the most precious arts of childhood are in danger of becoming extinct? How many boys to-day can make a kite, properly hung, and with a tail sufficient to balance it? How many boys can make a bow with the ends nicely bent and worked down with a bit of broken glass?

"I interviewed my young nephew the other day, and was thunderstruck to discover that he knew nothing about it. Could he make a water-wheel, a wind-mill, an elder popgun, a jack-lantern, a buzz-wheel, an air-gun from a goose quill with a sliced potato for ammunition, a willow whistle, a squirt-gun? No, he knew nothing about them.

"But surely," said I, almost pathetically, 'you can make a cornstalk fiddle?'

"Do you mean a violin, uncle?'

"Then I gave it up. I don't believe the youth of to-day know enough to stick feathers in a corn-cob, and throw it into the air. I am going to write a book some day upon the arts of childhood, to save them from utter annihilation."— "Detroit Free Press."

The British Friend

Published on the 15th of each month.

Being the only religious and literary review written chiefly for the general public, but from the standpoint of the Society of Friends, The British Friend offers a unique opportunity for spreading "The Truth" among thoughtful enquirers.

The Issue for February, 1903, contains:

"Ministry or Priesthood in the Early Church," by Dr. Thos. Hodgkin.

"The Hindu Philosophical Systems," by Joseph Taylor.

"Our Testimony to Jesus Christ."

"A Grave National Peril" (Military Drill in Schools) and

"Can Prisons Reform Men?" by the Editor.

Also a special Supplement, with an address to the Friends' Guild of Teachers on "The Ultimate Aim of Education."

A distinct feature is made of Reviews and Notices of Books, especially such as are likely to be helpful to preachers and social workers.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN IN COWBOY PHRASEOLOGY.

Among all the revisions and twentieth century versions of the Bible, we have failed to find anything corresponding to the following paraphrase of the familiar parable of the Good Samaritan, which certainly deserves to rank high in point of vividness and faithfulness to the main features of the story, even if it lacks other desirable qualities in a translation. W. B. D. Gray, a well-known Western Sunday School worker, furnishes the text and ascribes the original to a Wyoming Sunday School teacher:

"One day a feller was goin' down from Jerusalem in the Jericho canon. A couple chaps jumped on 'im, and when they had most killed him took 'is wad and run away. By and by a preacher cum along and looked at the feller an' sed,
'I'll not monkey wi' that chap,' and went away. Purty soon a doctor cum by and looked at him and sed, 'It's none o' my medicine,' an' went away and left 'im. Then a cowboy cum along ridin' a broncho. He got down by the feller and took 'is wipe an' brushed away the dirt an' blood from 'is face. Then he took 'im up and put 'im on his broncho an' took 'im ter the road-house an' sed to the man, 'Look 'ere, you take care o' this feller fur me. Give him everythin' he wants. Here's my wad, and if you need any more w'en I cum back from the range I'll giv' it ter yer.'—Ex.

riage waits without." Lord Fritz

SUPERIOR MERIT.

Remarkable Curative Properties of a Remedy for Indigestion and Stomach Weakness.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, a preparation for the cure of dyspepsia and the various forms of indigestion and stomach trouble, owes its great success as a cure for these troubles to the fact that it is prepared for disease and weakness of the stomach and digestive organs only, and is not recommended or advised for any other disease.

It is not a cure-all, but for any other stomach trouble it is undoubtedly the safest, most sensible remedy that can be advised with the prospect of a permanent cure. It is prepared in tablet form, pleasant to taste, composed of vegetable and fruit essences, pure pepsin and Golden Seal, every one of which act effectively in digesting the food eaten, thereby resting and invigorating the weak stomach; rest is nature's cure for any disease, but you cannot rest the stomach unless you put into it something that will do its work or assist in the digestion of food.

That is exactly what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do, one grain of the digestive principle contained in them will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or similar wholesome foods; they will digest the food whether the stomach is in working order or not, thereby nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time, and rest and nourishment are nature's cure for any weakness.

In persons run down in flesh and appetite these tablets build up the strength and increase flesh, because they digest flesh-forming food which the weak stomach cannot do; they increase the flow of gastric juice and prevent fermentation, acidity and sour watery risings.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found at all drug stores at 50 cents per package.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

FRIENDS SCHOOL GYMNASIUM.

A fine new building with complete modern equipment, swimming pool, running track and lockers. To be used by boys and girls at different periods. Another mark in the progress of this school that has been growing for more than a hundred years. The spirit has ever been to add to equipment and methods that which would tend toward the mental, physical and moral growth of its pupils.

Conducted on a wisely arranged plan of co-education. Furnishes a sound thorough education, fitting for business and for college entrance. A quaint building called "The Three Oaks Studio" is set apart for classes in drawing, painting and wood carving. Special courses in music and art. Open to all denominations. Liberal endowments make low tuition. Modern buildings heated by steam. Large and beautiful grounds for outdoor sports. For catalogue address

OFT HAVE I CRAVED.

*Oft have I craved, dear Lord, it had been mine
With sight and sense Thy presence to adore,
My costliest hoard of ointments rare to pour
Upon Thy feet and wash them in the brine
Of my repentant tears. Hath earth a shrine
To hold the homage of my heart's best store,
Or all the world a lure to tempt me more
Once having looked upon Thy Face divine?*

*Yet Faith's sure vision shames our mortal eyes
Since I, because I have not seen, am blest—
No vases fragrant with their prisoned sweet,
I break for Thee, but Thou wilt not despise
A broken heart, weary of life's unrest.
Make it Thine own, I lay it at thy feet.*

Events and Comments.

Captain Roald Amundsen, a Norwegian, this coming spring, is to conduct an expedition to discover the magnetic north pole, and there to carry out observations during a series of years. He will make a magnetic survey of the whole ground, and thus establish whether the pole is a mere point, a more widely spread area, or even several points.

The optimism which seems to exist in some Western capitals in regard to the Sultan's intention to carry out the projected Macedonian reform measures is hardly shared by those who have noted his attitude toward the Armenian scheme and the Cretan reforms. Difficulties began with their application, and successful efforts were made to thwart the new arrangements.

Private ownership of public service enterprises is not popular in Ithaca, N. Y., just at present, where, under stress of a typhoid fever epidemic due to a polluted water supply, the public ownership policy has been decreed by a vote of 1,335 property owners against only 30 in the negative. Public ownership does not insure a pure water supply, but it is to be hoped that better service will be secured than where the business is run as a private profit-making affair.

Pursuant to the call of the President of the United States the Senate of the Fifty-eighth Congress met in extraordinary session on the 5th inst., with twenty-six new Senators in the body. The President's message asked special attention to the treaty with the Republic of Colombia securing to the United States the right to build an isthmian canal, and to the treaty with the Republic of Cuba for securing a measure of commercial reciprocity between the two countries.

The growth in importations of manufacturers' materials continues to be the striking feature of the statistics of our foreign commerce. The value of manufacturers' materials imported in First month was $42,328,748, as against $37,312,513 in the same month last year. This shows an increase of $5,016,235, a gain of about 14 per cent. in a single year in the value of manufacturers' materials imported. Comparing the seven months ending with First month, 1903, with the corresponding months of the preceding year, a gain of $40,000,000, or 17 per cent., is shown over the figures for the seven months ending with First month, 1902.

It is rather interesting to know that Clarence S. Darrow, counsel for the coal miners' union, is not in favor of the execution or imprisonment of criminals. In a new book, entitled "Resist Not Evil," he advocates the doctrine of non-resistance. He says: "By no method of reasoning can it be shown that the injustice of killing one man is retrieved by the execution of another, or that the forcible taking of property is made right by confining some human being in a pen." He continues: "Whether brotherhood, love and non-resistance would lessen crime may be a matter of debate, but that punishment does not lessen it seems to be as well established as any fact that can not be absolutely proved."

The American Ornithologists' Union for the Protection of North American Birds, is doing commendable work. Its members believe that the great economic value of birds demands that they should be protected and thus preserved, and are seeking to secure comprehensive and uniform laws throughout the United States and Canada for the absolute protection of the non-game birds. They ask a continuance of the warden system through which colonies of sea birds are protected during the breeding season, for it is then that the birds are in the finest plumage and are most sought for by plume hunters and milliners' agents. The diffusion of knowledge regarding the economic value of birds among the agricultural peoples, and especially among the school children, has been promoted by the gratuitous circulation of leaflets treating of the life history of birds, and especially of their food habits.

The most notable temperance legislation of the Fifty-seventh Congress was the Gillett-Lodge Act, forbidding American rum sellers to sell intoxicants and opium in Pacific Islands having no civilized government, and the Bowersock amendment, forbidding the sale of intoxicants in United States immigrant stations. The success of both these measures is largely due to the untiring efforts of the International Reform Bureau, aided by the W. C. T. U. A second half-million dollars for amusement rooms and gymnasiums, to be used in the army as substitutes for the suppressed "canteens," was secured, and an act shutting out tobacco packages and pictures and cards promotive of gambling and impurity also passed. A signal victory in the administrative field was secured by the appointment of six women inspectors of immigration; with a view of breaking up the systematic importation of girls for immoral purposes. The record, as a whole, falls far short of the preceding Congress, during which nineteen acts of government in behalf of good morals, including executive acts, were secured.

THE LIFE OF LIBERTY.

Nobody begins life with liberty. It would be ruinous to say to the child: "Do just what you like to." Quite the opposite course is followed by the loving parent. He teaches the child the meaning of "thou must" and "thou shalt." The boy thus learns to obey, to adjust himself to the will of others. He discovers that his field of freedom is very narrow indeed. When he gets to school he is obliged to learn the limits of his freedom in a new way. He cannot accept as truth anything that happens to strike his fancy. He must find out what really is true and accept that. He must get his set lesson. He must learn what the book says. He must remember what the teacher tells him. Whether he likes the facts which are presented or not, he must master them; and if his lesson is not learned, he must stay after school and get it. In society again nobody is quite free. There are laws and customs and institutions which force our lives in certain directions. The man who is not good by nature (and who is?) must be taught by law to observe the rights and privileges of others. Society never trusts men to realize their lives according to their own sweet will. Back of the law there is force. You disobey at your peril. Even in religion there are the stages of fear and of commandments. Primitive religion is largely grounded in fear. The worshiper brings his sacrifice because he is afraid of God and hopes to appease Him. He crawls on his hands and knees and inflicts frightful bodily torture because he believes it will keep his god from punishing him in a worse way. In the next stage he obeys the law or the commandment because he thinks this will win God's favor; he scrupulously fulfills His ordinances, His ceremonies or His ritual because he expects a great return from the God whom he has thus served.

But it is our privilege, nay, more, our high calling, to pass over from this life of restraint, of fear, of law to a life of glorious liberty, of joyous freedom. The child who has been drilled into obedience has little by little discovered the spirit of love in the discipline, the goodness of those who have restrained him. Now he begins to be good, not because he must, but because he chooses to be good. He has lost the incentive of fear, and has gained the incentive of love. As a result you have the wonderful spectacle of the son resigning his own dreams and prospects in order to support the family he loves, the daughter giving up every ambition to be the stay and comfort of a father in his declining years, or of a mother who needs her—and doing it, too, from free and glad choice. So, too, the scholar passes from the tasks that are set, to become an independent searcher after truth, making his own free contribution in the chosen field of his research. The citizen almost forgets that there are laws to be obeyed. Instead of needing restraint, he devotes himself to the task of righting the wrongs, of destroying corruption, of purifying the State. Through his love for his country and for man he contributes all his powers for the purpose of helping other men attain a wider freedom and a richer life.

Do we not also pass over from religion of fear and religion of external commandments to a religion of joyous liberty and devoted love—where our only law is the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus? The entire work of our Lord is directed to carry us over to this freedom of full-grown sons. His method is to kindle in us incentives of love and devotion. He reveals the Divine love and yearning. He appeals to us through His own sacrifice to save us. "Thou needs must love me who have died for thee." He shows us the unlimited possibilities of life. "You can be like your heavenly Father." There is no force, no compulsion, no rigid external system to fit into. We are called to the freedom of sons. We are pointed away to the ever-widening goal of a perfect life. The types of the blessed life which He gives us are those who hunger for more righteousness, those who feel the poverty of their spirits, and so are open to the light and receptive of the truth, those who are purifying their hearts so that God is continually growing clearer to their vision. Those who thus feel the compulsion of love have entered the life of liberty. They do right now, not because they must, but because the joy of their lives is in doing right. The law is not left behind, but it is swallowed up in the free will to choose the life of moral action. "I delight to do thy will" is the psalmist's word for this attainment. "So speak and so do," says James, "as they that shall be judged, by the law of liberty." What a day of judgment! How many of us can God trust to such absolute freedom—no law but our own free will!

SOME NEW FRIENDS' BOOKS.*

JOSEPH ELKINTON has rendered a valuable service in giving us this interesting and illuminative story of

* "The Doukhobors." By Joseph Elkinton. Ferris & Leach, Philadelphia. Price, $2.00.

"Light and Shade." By John Frederick Hanson. Western Work Publishing Association, Oskaloosa, Iowa. Price, $1.25.

"Sally Wister's Journal." Edited by Albert Cook Myers. Ferris & Leach, Philadelphia. Price, $2.00.

the rise, the persecutions, the immigration and the present condition of the strange Russian sect called the Doukhobors. He begins with his own personal experiences in the Doukhobor settlements in Canada, and so introduces us to individuals and families and neighborhoods. We here get acquainted with the people whose past history comes out later on in the book. This personal study of the Doukhobors as they now are leads up to the subject which is particularly on the mind of the author, namely, the education and training of these long-suffering people, whose mistakes have uniformly been due to ignorance, and all the profits on the sale of the book are to go toward educational work among the Doukhobors.

The history of the sect, and of the almost unparalleled persecution of this peace-loving group of Russian peasants, is a touching story, and one which will be read with interest. It is preceded in the book by the account of the transfer of the entire sect from their homes near the Caucasus to the northwestern country in Canada, where they have made their home. Their religious views, their personal and domestic habits, and their general characteristics as a people, are considered with much sympathy and considerable insight. The important service of Joseph S. Elkinton, in the final settlement of the Doukhobors, and his influence among them, is modestly told by the son. The book is illustrated with three maps and over fifty photographs.

Probably no one else—certainly no one in America—was as well qualified to write the history of Friends in Norway as John Frederick Hanson, himself a native of the country, and a diligent laborer for the cause of Christ in that land. Quakerism arose in Norway early in the last century, and since that time there has always been what early Friends would call “a living seed” in this land of our far remote ancestors. As in the former book noticed, so here, too, we have a story of sad persecutions and of migration to escape it. One of the impressive features of this history is the long list of faithful laborers who have year after year visited Norway “in the love of the gospel.” We have noted from the book the names of the following Friends from America who have visited the meetings and families of Norway: Stephen Grellet, Thomas Arnett, John and Elizabeth Meader, Eli and Sibyl Jones, Lindley M. Hoag, John L. Eddy, Rebecca Collins, John Henry Douglas, James Owen, Asher and Sarah M. Hiatt, Robert W. Douglas, Jonathan and Mary Rogers, Allen Jay, Rufus P. King, Edward Scull, Eli and Abarilla Cowgill, Eliza Watson, Jehu and Sarah Newlin, Elwood Scott, Samuel Morris, Thomas P. Cope, William and Susan T. Thompson, Addison White, and Richard H. and Anna B. Thomas. This is a remarkable array of names, covering nearly a hundred years, and the story of the labors of these servants of God will appeal to many readers. Almost more sad than the story of persecution is the story of separation, caused by non-essential differences, which tore asunder this little group of Friends. The book is illustrated with many portraits and photographs.

“Sally Wister’s Journal” is a charming book. Sally Wister, a Quaker maiden of sixteen, living in the outskirts of Philadelphia, began to keep a journal in 1777, just after the battle of Brandywine. During the entire period that the British army occupied Philadelphia the journal was kept up. Officers of the American army were quartered in Sally Wister’s home, and in the Journal we get most interesting details of the experiences and circumstances which grew out of this event. Such a wise and yet artless, naive girl! One almost lives over again in these vivid pages the experiences of that memorable winter. The editorial work, which has been done by Albert Cook Myers, is of a very high order of merit. His introduction is a splendid piece of work, and the notes are just what historical notes should be. The publishers have put the book out in beautiful form. It is altogether an admirable piece of book making.

We have received from Headley Brothers, London, a charming little book by Violet Hodgkin, entitled “The Happy World,” being a study of Dante’s “Paradise.” The writer knows and loves the poem she is studying; she shows genuine insight, and she gives many beautiful spiritual touches. These same publishers have also recently issued a new and attractive edition of William Guest’s “Stephen Grellet,” a book which all young Friends ought to read.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

QUIETNESS AND CONFIDENCE.

BY DELIA REES.

I have no doubt that perils, serious and ever imminent threaten the life and work of the Church to-day. I even believe that some of these perils are far more subtle and insidious than the most of us suspect, and their advance calls loudly for leaders of the Lord’s hosts who do not give themselves to self-complacency in Christian experience, nor to a supine confidence in God’s leadership and overruling of all things. It seems to me that far too few in the Society of Friends are awake to the needs and opportunities of the present generation—in fact, an appalling number are asleep, while a large per cent. of its known working force is either partly paralyzed by anxiety and fear or excited to unwise action by rumor concerning the enemy and by prejudice toward other Christian workers, with whom they do not see eye to eye. It requires no prophet's ken to see that such forces are not ready for victorious battle with such a foe as Paul describes in Ephesians 6: 12. The high commission of the Church calls for aggressive warfare and an hysterical defense of the faith made in ignorance of actual facts and of the nature of the foe will never advance the interests of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We must cease to war after the flesh before we become "mighty through God," and we must cast down our own imaginations, which lift themselves against the real knowledge of God, or we shall never pull down the strongholds of Satan. When we learn that inner quietness which results from bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, we will find ourselves face to face with the Infinite, and the confidence born in such a presence will send us forth, in wisdom, to study the field and the foe, careful that we dissipate no spiritual energy, waste none of our forces, until we learn where is the real foe, and then fight as those who do not beat the air, but know the enemy and believe in their commission to conquer.

Where is the tribe of Issachar, who has understanding of these present times to know what the Church ought to do? We get no inspiration from the people who are saying, Alas! Alas! Higher criticism! Higher criticism! The faith is ruined! We know there is an enemy. But is there not also a God? Does He not understand the nature of our times? Is He able to preserve the truth through this age as through other ages of the past? Is He omniscient? Does He know all that the enemy has done and said and written? If He is so all-intelligent (and traditionally we believe He is), does it not occur to us that we might work together with Him in more confidence if we were more intelligently informed ourselves? If we have acquainted ourselves with the actual facts of history concerning our Bible, and thus have seen the varied and contradictory forces which have been used by Him—if we have seen the process of its purification and deliverance from human errors in the past—how is it we are filled only with fear and trembling, and have no confidence in His present purpose and power? It is easy for me to see (though not a scholar) that there are serious dangers lying perilously near the paths of even Christian scholarship, but I see also the imperative need of knowledge. We cannot entrench ourselves in ignorance and hope that our spiritual force will overcome the enlightened powers of darkness. Faith feeds on light and truth, and increases in the knowledge of God. Ignorance of God and His ways of advancing the truth and overcoming the power of evil finds it very difficult to trust in a real conflict. The nervous fear so often expressed for the truth reveals sometimes, at least, a want of the knowledge of the consciousness of God which comes to the soul that quietly waits on Him, and also of accurate knowledge of His great achievements and splendid victories in the past. But some one says, there have been battles lost, evil has triumphed and the truth has been well nigh lost to the world for a time. Even so. And in face of such danger, what is a true attitude? Shall we not seek intelligently and consciously to know our God, and, having done all in our power, quietly stand and trust His purpose for the ages? We can at least be noble embodiments of the truth which we cannot compel others to believe. There is an attitude of alert and intelligent confidence in God and His truth which serves His people well in war and in a time of peace. And there is no place for petty fears and nervous fighting in the soldiers of God's army. If that which we hold as truth will not outlive all the tests which the God of truth allows to attack it, then it is poorly worth while to call the whole world with its sore need to find a refuge there. Dr. Gordon, of the Old South Church in Boston, cheered our hearts when he wrote that the greatest test of the Bible was not to be found in higher criticism. Its greatest test was met when some poor fellow, with ruined character and a life of sin, came and threw the weight of his need upon the words of the Book. Many of us are too unlearned to take any part in the great discussions of critical investigation, and we do well to preserve silence; but so long as our confidence can persuade other needy hearts to find their eternal help through the truths of the Book we may have unspeakable joy in watching its sure victories. But a friend said, not long since, "I am not afraid for the Book. It is the spoiling of individual faiths that I deplore and grieve over." I suppose it is possible to worship faith, but it seems to me far more difficult than is sometimes understood. According to the writer of Hebrews faith is something more than believing with the head or giving full assent to with the mind and will. It has a bit of evidence in it. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. There is something of real consciousness of God in faith which may be shaken and sorely tested, but not easily destroyed. It is well in such consideration to discriminate between the upsetting of one's traditional beliefs and the spoiling of one's confidence in God. Have we not in our own experience had times of conflict and faced serious doubts in a manner which made us feel as if our moorings to God were loosened or were loosening, but found as the conflict went on, or after its heat was passed, that our faith had grown stronger? What we had feared as our ruin had served as our sustenance, and our consciousness of God's presence and sure word had a vastly wider domain because of the conflict.

However, individual faith has doubtless many times been wrecked. For as in a great campaign the ranks may not stop their march upon the enemy because individual soldiers faint and fall by the way, so also has God led His hosts on in the conflict by which truth advances though many faiths have been sacrificed by the way. "He shall guide you into all truth" has its deep meaning to the Church for the world and she cannot stop her onward march.

THE DEEP NOTE IN HUMAN LIFE.*

BY WILLIAM NEWTON CLARKE.

"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 18: 3.

I have heard common offers of comfort for sorrow, and of courage for the ordinary walk of life, and certainly "the deep note" of solemn and joyful confidence in the reality of the unseen good has not sounded in them very strongly. I have not heard that note in the sound of my own voice, as clearly as I could wish. "Ye are the light of the world," said the Lord. "Blessed be God," said Paul, "who hath comforted us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them that are in any trouble." How ready are we, by virtue of what we possess, to breathe into some bereaved heart a calm confidence in God's undying goodness, and a strong hope of reunion in the world invisible? How ready are we, moving among those who are depressed and discouraged in the common hardships and anxieties of life, to say, "Be of good cheer, it is your Father's world, where all things work together for good to those who love Him," and say it so that we shall be believed? O for the deep note of confidence, to be heard in our own voices!

When we miss it and wish it were there as it ought to be, we may resort to various means by which we hope it may be obtained. Sometimes it seems a duty to keep up the tone of faith in the circle where we stand, and so as Christians we express our utmost and a little more. By an impulse of another kind we often endeavor to improve our imperfect confidence. We try to think matters out. We seek to cultivate confidence concerning God and the other life by studying the proofs. We think to vivify our faith by refreshing our minds on the evidence, and try to work up in ourselves the confidence that we feel to be so needful. Thus we seek spiritual results by intellectual processes. But there is little fruit. That is not the way to stronger confidence, good though the reasonings might be. This whole method fails us, except as it goes hand in hand with something else.

What is that something else? Who are they from whom, when we do hear it, the tone of power comes forth? What does experience tell us as to the kind of persons from whom the effective word of inspiration and uplifting proceeds? Not from great minds, regarded as great; not from the intelligent and well taught, even in the doctrine of things divine—not from these is it sure to come. Perhaps every one of us has known some simple, humble man or woman, taught of God in the inner life, whom one would rather meet in the day of sorrow than any other friend. Perhaps we have known men and women who were actually looked to by those who sat in darkness as veritable light bringers, inspirers of the faith that endures as seeing Him who is invisible. Who are they? They are the simple, sincere, unassuming. They make nothing of themselves, but they have been with the Master. They have become as little children and received the gift from the Giver. Simplicity in godliness gives the power that we seek in vain elsewhere. Here is what seems a paradox: it is out of the heart of the little child that the deep note sounds forth. It certainly is so; so it has always been, and so it must be.

But how are we to become as little children? I have often wondered at the audacity of our Saviour in speaking of it as He spoke. "Except ye become as little children ye shall not enter the kingdom"—ye shall not, of course, because ye cannot. But to become as little children—what a work! To become! To become from what? From what we are. To become, after all our manlike independence, after all our pride and self-will, after all our sophistication by superfluous reasonings, after all our developed and hardened evil, to become as little children—what a change is that! If only we were as little children it would not be hard to imagine our remaining so; but from being all that we are, to go back and down—or up—into the estate of childlikeness and simplicity, and thus to attain to the kingdom of God, I wonder that even the Lord Jesus dared to speak of this and set the childlike spirit as the test of admission or exclusion at the door of the divine kingdom. Who then can be saved? If we are to become as little children, how is it to be done?

Not everything that is found in the little child does He praise. He is not saying that childhood is faultless, or that it is the one desirable stage in our existence. Nor, on the other hand, is it the ignorance and mental blankness of infancy that He commends. The uniform understanding of Christendom has been right: it is the simplicity, humility, trustfulness, teachableness, obedience of the little child that serves Him for illustration of the character that men must attain. And so the question that we have asked, the question how, remains most difficult. We men and women grown—perhaps overgrown, perhaps mis-grown, certainly grown into a stiff independence and pride of ourselves, or a firm habit that is hard to change—we must become lowly, trustful, receptive. We must so humble ourselves and be open-hearted that the fullness of the divine can flow into us. It is thus that power must come, and we become able to utter that deep voice of spiritual certainty which shall bear strength and assurance into other souls. Let us not stumble at the way. Only from the divine fullness can that voice go forth which carries conviction and cheer for the troubled, and only into the simple and receptive soul can the divine fullness come. It is the one thing needful that the humble and receptive spirit become ours.

* Extracts from a sermon preached at Hamilton, N. Y.

Tell me, then, how the little child, the human infant, comes to possess these qualities. How comes it to be trustful, teachable, obedient? It is easy to say that this is the nature of the little child. But this does not solve the question. If a little child were left alone, it would never develop any qualities at all, for it would perish. If it grew up surrounded only by other children equal to itself, it would never develop trustfulness or willing dependence. No, the childlike spirit is a social grace, and the child begins to be a social being earlier than we think. The child is always in the presence of another, or of others, greater than itself. The habitual sense of dependence comes from the fact of dependence. In the normal life there is some one for the child to depend upon, and the habit of dependence follows. The parental love and care can be trusted, and so the attitude of trustfulness appears. The spirit of the little child, in its beauty and simplicity, is born of the warmth of the mother's love, and the steadiness of the father's care, the presence of an embracing and sustaining love that calls out confidence. Trustfulness is the child's response to the fact of some one who is able to take care of it, and incomparably more than willing besides; it is the answer to the love and strength that wait the child when it enters the world. As for teachableness, that comes because there is some one so much wiser, and so dear, and so intent upon teaching what is good, that teachableness is the natural reply. If the little child looks up with eyes of reverence, deference, obedience, it is because there is some one to be looked up to, some one great enough to command the upward look and call out the obedience. The human child would never learn what we call the childlike spirit, if it were not thus face to face with some one great and loving and commanding enough to make the child instinctively take the place of responsiveness, humility, obedience and trust.

In like manner we, men and women, shall become like little children precisely when we find ourselves face to face with some one so great and strong, so worthy and so helpful, as to make little children of us. We too are social beings; we respond to persons far more than to ideas. We are always thinking that we shall respond to ideas, and so we look out for thoughts that will be likely to suggest in us the spirit of little children, but it does not prove successful. We are made rather for the giving and receiving of personal influence, and under personal influence we do our best. When we long to be humbled, and simplified in spirit, and made receptive and responsive, so that the divine fullness may flow unhindered into our hearts, what we really are craving for is the personal impression of some one so much greater than ourselves that we can be nothing but little children before Him. "I have heard of thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee." "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" It is only the divine greatness that makes little children of men.

I said the divine greatness, but the mention of a name does not solve the urgent question that arises here. As we look about us in the world, and see men with their independence, their self-will and their confirmed habits, it often seems as if no power could ever make them humble. As we look within ourselves and see how far we are from possessing the childlike heart, even when we approve it and long for it, we wonder again whether any sufficient power exists to make us little children. Can I look up into the face of any one as a child looks up to its mother, with honest admiration, calm love and joyful confidence, and feel myself borne upon a mighty heart of strength, affection and righteousness, until the place of the little child seems the only place for me?

Yes. When I stand, just as I am, before Jesus Christ, the manifestation of God, and look upon God as I find Him revealed in Jesus Christ, I am standing in the presence of One before whom I may well feel myself a little child, and live the life of a little child under His care. It is not the sense of my own smallness in comparison with Him that shows me this; it is not that I shrink into nothingness before Him. Conscious insignificance is not what constitutes the childlike spirit. Not my smallness, but God's greatness, does the work. The greatness is of the kind that renders Him sufficient to my soul and all my needs, and to the needs of all. The greatness that I feel in God when I learn the lesson of the Lord Jesus is greatness of sustaining power. It is greatness of redeeming love. It is greatness of all-embracing wisdom and purpose. It is greatness of parental care. It is uttermost trustworthiness, inexhaustible, unchangeable, eternal. I am no more dwarfed into insignificance by God's superiority than the child is by its mother's.

It is the preciousness of the child to its mother that makes the child precious to itself and first awakens the sense of the value of its own being; and it is in response to God that I first learn to put a true estimate upon myself. By my sense of God's greatness I am lifted into rest for my soul and strength for all good uses. In Christ and his cross I see infinite redeeming love, and on the heart of such love my heart may well take its rest and be strong. In the God whom Christ shows me I discern a Father whose providence is over all his works and is a providence of good for all; and under such providence I may well take courage and hope for all right endeavor and go my way rejoicing. So true is the divine heart that I find revealed in Christ that I do well to be teachable before such a friend. And the confidence that he thus awakens is not a temporary confidence, relating alone to things present and visible. I trust God not as a mortal, but as an immortal, and the God that I trust is a God forever. His are all worlds and ages, and when I feel His reality in its fullness the unseen realm is as real as that which my eyes behold. Thus here I find fresh power to ascend into the realm of immortality and become aware of those things eternal that are essential to our hope.

Before such a God, eternal, holy, gracious, near, wise, watchful, embracing me with a father's care and a mother's tenderness, why should I not be humble, loving, trustful, teachable, obedient? Why should I not live in His world as in a home, and avail myself of His parental goodness as a child resorts to father and mother for daily good?

Now we see why becoming like little children is associated with entering the kingdom. The kingdom of God is no organization, and entrance to it is not an external act. To enter the kingdom of God is simply to come under the sway of God in the manner that God desires. And the two things are one: where lies the difference between them? "Except you meet the One before whom you are but children, and are brought by His overshadowing into humility, trustfulness and obedience before Him, you cannot come under His sway aright." This is the only way to be truly and fully His, the only way to enter into the blessing that His kingdom means for those who find it. The kingdom of God and the family of God are one and the same, and upon His little children the glorious and honorable powers of His kingdom descend.

If words really come forth from a heart that is humbled and lifted up in the presence of Him to whom we are little children, loved and cherished, then the deep note of living confidence will sound in them with helpful and inspiring power. Indeed, that deep tone that we so love to hear, carrying immortal hope and strength to those who listen, is not a tone of the separate and independent human voice. It comes from beyond. It is rather the sound of God and the universe, the sound of eternity and reality, which our feeble voices are at length enabled to catch, to take up, to make their own, and to utter in the eternal harmony. Every one of us, great and small, should eagerly desire this in-breathing of the divine Spirit whereby our voices shall be filled with the deep tone, and our very presence shall become a benediction to a troubled and doubting world.

THE CONVENTION FOR MORAL AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

During the second week in Second month in the city of Chicago, there occurred a most significant event in the history of American education. Delegates from twenty-two States, representing practically every Protestant denomination and every type of educational institution—the university and college, the church publication, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young People's Society, the public school, the Bible School, the theological seminary—came together to consider the moral and religious phases of the great problems of education. They came in response to a call issued by the Council of Seventy which directs the American Institute of Sacred Literature. They came deeply impressed with the inadequacy of such instruction as at present carried on and hoping to perfect some plans for more perfectly correlating such instruction with the historical, literary and scientific instruction of our time. It was an inspiring sight to witness men and women representing at once the most profound scholarship and the most deeply spiritual life of the United States and Canada, engaged in conference and prayer to the end that the educational forces of our continent might be charged with a great moral and religious purpose. There were some forty speakers upon different phases of the following subjects: "The Next Step Forward in Religious Education," "The Modern Conception of Religious Education," "The Promotion of Religious and Moral Education," "Religious Education Through the Sabbath School," "The Scope and Purpose of the New Organization," "The Relation of the New Organization to Existing Organizations."

An organization was effected, to be called "The Religious Education Association," whose purpose is to promote religious and moral education in the United States and Canada. This organization will conduct its work under a number of departments, which will undertake to render service in unifying, correlating and stimulating existing efforts and agencies devoted to such work, and, in addition, to creating new agencies where no agencies now exist. It is a work fraught with tremendous possibilities for good, and is only another well-nigh universal movement in the direction in which Friends have always insisted educational effort should be expended. The proceedings of the convention will be published, and will be a distinct contribution to what is really the fundamental and ultimate phase of educational activity. Professor Frank K. Sanders, of Yale University, New Haven, Conn., was made president.

MARY ANN MALONE.

At her home in Cleveland, O., First month 24th, 1903, Mary Ann Malone, wife of the late John C. Malone, passed away in the 83d year of her age. Truly a mother in Israel has fallen. A happy, loving nature that always looked on the bright side and committed all of her cares to her heavenly Father and left them there. She was a life-long member of Friends, married before she was 20, and for many years lived at a great distance from Friends' meeting. In 1865 she and her family moved to New Vienna, O., where they could have the advantage of Friends' meetings. She raised a family of eight children, seven sons and one daughter, who live to mourn her loss. Family cares and farm life did not prevent her from working much for the Master. Many years a minister of the gospel, she was interested in all of the aggressive work of the Church, and was one of the first among Friends to actively engage in revival work, and rejoiced in seeing many souls saved and meetings established in isolated neighborhoods. Her health was feeble the last few years of her life, so that she was confined at home, and her greatest delight was to hear of the Lord's work progressing, and she was continually rejoicing in her Saviour's love. Sitting up and talking to a friend the day before her death, she said: "Living or dying, I am happy." Many besides her own children will rise up and call her blessed.

LESSON XII.

THIRD MONTH 22, 1903.

PAUL'S MESSAGE TO THE EPHESIANS.

Eph. 2: 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—By grace are ye saved through faith.—Eph. 2: 8.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Third mo. 16.—Redemption. Eph. 1: 1-14.
Third-day, Third mo. 17.—Christ the head. Eph. 1: 15-23.
Fourth-day, Third mo. 18.—Paul's message to the Ephesians. Eph. 2: 1-10.
Fifth-day, Third mo. 19.—Reconciled. Eph. 2: 11-22.
Sixth-day, Third mo. 20.—Quickened. Rom. 8: 9-17.
Seventh-day, Third mo. 21.—Works of flesh, fruits of Spirit. Gal. 5: 16-26.
First-day, Third mo. 22.—Faith and works. James 2: 14-26.

The "Epistle to the Ephesians" forms one of a distinct group among the Pauline Epistles, sometimes called the "Epistles of St. Paul's first captivity." They consist of the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians and Philemon. On comparing these with each other there will be found marked resemblances of style, expression and thought. This will be sufficiently shown if the opening chapters only of Colossians and Ephesians are compared. The time at which these Epistles were written was probably during the two years of Paul's detention at Rome (Acts 28: 30), which were about 61, 62. Though known as the "Epistle to the Ephesians," the words "at Ephesus" (1: 1) are omitted in some of the oldest manuscripts, and the evidence that they did not exist at least in most of the earliest manuscripts is very strong. The absence of personal allusions, of any special teaching likely to be given to those whom Paul knew so well, is also evidence against the ascription; again, it is hard to believe that words in portions of the Epistle (e.g., 1: 15; 3: 2; 4: 21, 22) should be used in connection with those among whom Paul had lived in close relationship for nearly three years, and to whom he gave such a touching farewell as that recorded in Acts 20: 17-38. The most satisfactory explanation, and that which is adopted by most scholars, is, that the Epistle was addressed, not to one Church, but to the Gentile converts (see Eph. 3: 2) in Laodicea, Colossæ, and elsewhere in Phrygia. It is, in short, a "circular" letter. This explanation harmonizes better than any other the various difficulties, and is in accord with the tone and treatment of the Epistle which is general in its character, and applicable to almost any Christian Church, especially to such as had been formed of Gentile converts. Compare the first chapter with the first chapter of 1 Peter, undoubtedly a "general" Epistle.

In the first chapter Paul, after the salutation, gives thanks for the election and redemption of the saints, and prays that they may fully realize their Divine privileges and prospects in Christ.

1. "And you." Making a personal application. "Did he quicken." Revised Version. "Quicken" is an old word now out of use except in theological language. Its meaning in the New Testament is almost always to bring from death to life, not to excite what already exists. The American Revisers read, "And you did he make alive." "Through your trespasses and sins." Revised Version. The cause of their spiritual death. "Trespasses and sins" in this passage cover every kind of transgression.

2. The exact meaning of this verse is not very clear, though there can be no doubt of the general meaning. "There was a time when those to whom he wrote were dead. They lived according to the customs and traditions of this world"; they were in league with that which is opposed to the authority and righteousness of God, whatever it may be, or may be called. It is likely that Paul here refers to the speculations of Gentile or Rabbinical philosophy. The important fact is that "the world" is "at enmity with God."

3. "Among whom also we all once lived in the lusts of our flesh," etc. Paul makes no exception—Jew and Gentile alike were sinners, and were governed by self-will, not by the will of God. "By nature children of wrath even as the rest." This has been one of the great proof texts for what is theologically called "original sin." The verse has been so clouded over by dogmatic teaching that it is hard to look at it dispassionately. The simplest and best-supported explanation is that the expression is a Hebrew one, and means, naturally, men are worthy of wrath, or exposed to just wrath, on account of sins. This harmonizes completely with what follows (verses 4-10). That man has a tendency to sin needs no revelation. We all know it by sad experience. "It needs a revelation—and such a revelation the Gospel gives—to declare to us that sin is not man's true nature, and that what is really original is not sin, but righteousness." This is the doctrine preached by George Fox and the early Friends. "The rest" means the Gentiles. (See Rom. 3: 23.)

4. We have now the other side of the picture—the love of God manifested in the Lord Jesus Christ.

5. "Even when we were dead through our trespasses, made us alive together with Christ (by grace have ye been saved)." American Revised Version.

6. "Heavenly places." Literally, the "heavens." Not a literal locality, but "the heaven which lies within and about the true Christian."

7. "Ages to come." Equivalent to "forever and ever."

8. "For by grace have ye been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." Revised Version. The salvation of the soul is a matter of God's mercy and love. While the general meaning of the passage is clear, there is some ambiguity in details. To what does "that" refer? In the original it is a neuter pronoun. Can it then refer to "faith," which is feminine? Grammatically, such a use is, to say the least, unusual; and while it may be a Hebraism, it is better to take the "that" as referring to the whole idea of salvation. Besides, faith is a power which all have, and faith in Christ is only faith exercised towards a higher object, and is not different in kind from faith in man.

9. "Not of works." Salvation cannot be earned. (See Rom. 3: 27; 1 Cor. 1: 29; Gal. 6: 14; Phil. 3: 3.)

10. "For," etc. "Works are not the antecedent, but the consequent, of your acceptance in Christ; for the true statement of the case is, that you were re-made, re-born, in order to work the will of God." "Created in Christ Jesus for good works." Revised Version. It is God's design that man should live righteously and perform good works. "As the branch is created in the vine, we are created in Christ; as the fruits of the branch are predetermined by the laws of that life which it receives from the vine, so our 'good works,' which are the result of our union with Christ, are pre-determined by the laws of the life of Christ, which is our life and the strength of all our righteousness."

TOPIC FOR THIRD MONTH TWENTY-SECOND.

LESSONS FROM THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT: WHAT CHRIST TEACHES ABOUT JUDGING OTHERS.

Matt. 7: 1-5.

Second-day, Third mo. 16.—God our Judge. Rom. 2: 1-11.

Third-day, Third mo. 17.—Reproving a scorner. Prov. 24: 7-9.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 18.—Charity that suffereth long. 1 Cor. 13: 4-8.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 19.—Our unfitness to judge. John 8: 3-11.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 20.—The Golden Rule. Matt. 7: 12.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 21.—Doers, not judges. Jas. 4: 11, 12.

The disposition to judge is one of the greatest dangers to which earnest Christians are exposed, because the temptation presents itself so insidiously under the guise of a zeal for a pure church or a concern for the welfare of others. The grace of God that takes us from the mire and clay and establishes our goings assures us that the same is possible for all men; when they continue in their shortcomings and failures, words of condemnation come all too easily to thought and utterance. Then it is time to ask ourselves if we are willing to be measured by the standard we are applying to others.

We need to remember how Jesus emphasized the fact that our attitude toward others fixes the possibilities of God's attitude toward us. In Matthew 6: 14 He tells us that our forgiveness is conditioned by ourselves having a forgiving spirit. A true appreciation of what forgiveness is, brings us not only to God to ask for pardon, but it takes us to those who may have sinned against us that we may be reconciled to them. If we ask God to dismiss the just charges against us while continuing to censure others with an unloving judgment, we keep ourselves out of the range of His blessing. His work is too perfect to allow any such onesidedness. In Luke 6: 37 we read: "Condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: release, and ye shall be released." How surely the Heavenly Judge accepts our testimony concerning ourselves. "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Having denied us the moral right to judge another, Jesus points out our moral incapacity. The faultfinder overlooks faults more glaring in his own character while going with well assumed concern to propose a remedy for another's. Christ does not, indeed, teach that we are to be blind to the dispositions and purposes of our fellow men: "By their fruits ye shall know them," but love and pity express the Christian attitude far better than censure and reproach. Christ knew the blackness of darkness that reigns in a sinful heart in a far truer sense than we can know it, yet forgiving love is the conspicuous element of His character.

Our just deserts could have been poured out upon us in judgment from the august heights of His throne in the heavens; but His example is of one who emptied Himself of His majesty, and came not to judge, but to save.

His life is the best illustration of what He meant in all this message from the mount. The simple living of a holy life is a most emphatic reproof of sin. The demonstrated possibility of a life without sin is the unanswerable argument against indulgence in sin.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Subscribers who make remittances expecting to receive Red Letter or Christian Workers' Testaments should always make mention of that fact with the remittance. When no mention is made concerning Testaments credit is given on the subscription only, and no Testament is sent. Please take notice, and if any have been negligent in this respect in the past, notify THE AMERICAN FRIEND at once.

Bloomington Academy, Ind., has resumed work, there having been no spread of small-pox among those exposed.

Our friend Oscar Roberts has been compelled to change his plans of sailing for South Africa. He has not yet settled the final date of sailing.

Joel and Hannah Bean and some other members of the College Park Association at San José, Cal., have been received into membership in Dover Monthly Meeting, in New Hampshire.

President Edwin McGrew read a very helpful paper on the subject, "The Family in the Place of Worship," at the business session of Newberg, Oregon, Quarterly Meeting, held Second month 14th.

L. Clarkson Hinshaw began a series of meetings at Haviland, Kansas, the last of First month, and continuing two weeks. His services were heartily appreciated, resulting in fifty-two claiming conversion or renewal.

A meeting at Smithfield, Ohio, which closed the 19th ult., was productive of a great religious awakening. The meeting continued about four weeks, and many earnest Christian workers labored in the services. Among others were Hiram Wolan, S. T. Purviance, B. W. Cope, J. Walter and Emma Malone and James Cooley.

I. Emory Pearson, the local minister at Lawrence, Kan., writes that his work in the meeting has been very pleasant during the past few weeks and that prospects are favorable for a prosperous year in spiritual blessings.

Pacific College Oratorical Contest was held on the evening of the 13th ult., in the Friends' Meeting House. By the decision of the judges Lucy Gause represents the college in the State Oratorical Contest, to be held at Eugene, Third month 13th.

H. Orville Jones and wife, who have been laboring for some time in New York Yearly Meeting, are now at home in Indianapolis, Ind. He had the pleasure of attending every meeting within the limits of Cornwall Quarterly Meeting while in New York.

There has been some unavoidable delay in issuing the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission pamphlet, but the many requests which are now coming in are receiving prompt attention. Address Emma B. Malone, 702 East Prospect Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

A meeting beginning Second month 8th, continuing to the 22d, was held at Okoboji, Ia. Ellis A. Wells, from Spencer, Ia., assisted Mary R. Horneday, the local minister. Much good was accomplished, souls were saved and the meeting generally strengthened.

A two weeks' meeting was recently concluded at Pleasant Valley Meeting, Stafford Co., Kansas, held by Linton Swofford and wife, Wilford Swofford and wife, and Arthur Peacock, from Pleasant Plain, Mo. Their labors were wonderfully blessed, and some definite work was done. Four or more will unite with Friends at their next meeting.

The Friends' Meeting House at Farmland, Ind., burned to the ground on the 1st instant. It was a beautiful frame structure, erected about 1889 at a cost of $2,300. The origin of the fire is not known, but it is supposed to have originated from a defective flue. There was no insurance. Arrangements will be made at once for the erection of a new building.

A remarkable revival is in progress at Cherokee, Okla. Warren J. Elder, the Friend evangelist, assisted by Brother Morris and wife, of the Methodist denomination, take the leading part in the services. The teaching is very definite and is presented clearly. Nearly two hundred have professed to receive definite blessings, and the good work continues.

Friends everywhere will be saddened to hear of the death of Robert I. Murray, of New York city. He has been a very valuable member of his own meeting and has done much service to the representative and yearly meetings, particularly on important committees and in financial matters. He was a generous, noble-spirited man and a deeply-concerned Friend.

Salem Quarterly Meeting, held at Salem, Oregon, from the 19th to the 21st ult., was a time of refreshing. Several were in attendance from Newberg Quarterly Meeting, among them President Edwin McGrew. The meeting house was crowded, both Seventh- and First-days. The plan of holding the quarterly meeting successively at the four monthly meeting houses is one which brings great benefit to all.

Charles and May Replogle sailed from Boston on the 10th on the Saxonia, and will land at Queenstown, Ireland, in seven days. They will remain in Ireland until Dublin Yearly Meeting, and will visit London Yearly Meeting before entering Norway. They had good services in Amesbury, Lawrence, Swansea, Portsmouth, Fall River, Boston, East Lynn and Lynn Meetings, in New England, before they sailed.

Portland Monthly Meeting, Indiana, was held on the 28th ult. Although rain and mud prevailed, nearly the usual number attended. Several names were removed from the list of members for non-support of the church. Thirteen persons were received into membership, the result of a series of meetings held at Pleasant Valley. John A. Martin, a resident member of Glenwood Local Meeting, was recorded a minister of the gospel. Address, Mills Corner, Jay County, Ind.

On First month 11th Abel T. Bond and Michael Swofford concluded a two weeks' meeting at Antioch Meeting, Stafford County, Kansas. There were forty conversions and renewals. The entire membership was revived and encouraged to greater activity. Ten united with Friends.

E. Walter Packard, formerly general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Lewiston, Me., has accepted a similar position with the association at Woonsocket, R. I., and began his duties there Second month 17th. Lewiston Friends regret the departure of so useful a member, but he will be among Friends in his new field of labor.

The enrollment this year at Southland College, Southland, Arkansas, is 115. The present enrollment in the dormitories is 36. Notwithstanding the great disadvantages to day students, caused by exceedingly wet weather, the attendance has been very good and classes have made commendable progress in their studies. The new school building is found to be commodious and well adapted to the needs of the school. It is much appreciated by both teachers and students, and it is hoped that, as the better conveniences become more widely known, the attendance will increase from time to time. A lack of real thirst for knowledge is quite evident in this country. As Booker T. Washington says, "The great trouble with our people is, they know too much." Of that kind of knowledge that puffeth up. It is to be hoped, however, that they may attend Southland College and the like institutions until they can discern their real needs—Christianity and moral rectitude. When these principles are accepted and applied to their every-day lives, then, and not till then, can they hope to advance in the scale of true citizenship, which shall be recognized and appreciated by all good citizens, irrespective of race or color. It is a source of great pleasure and comfort to those who have made some little sacrifice for the betterment of the negro race to find amongst them so many noble examples of Christian culture and service for their people. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." This applies to the negro race as well as to all others. The lack of confidence in each other is doing more to hold the negro race in its present degraded standing among the races than any other cause. A short series of meetings (eight in number) closed on the evening of the 15th inst. It seemed to be a spontaneous effort. Great interest and concern were manifested throughout the entire series of meetings. The pastor, Chandler M. Paschal, was ably assisted by the neighboring Methodist and Baptist ministers. The Christian Endeavor members were loyal and helpful in prayer, testimony and song. There were twenty-five conversions, and many testimonies of confirmed Christian faith. Nearly all who presented themselves for the prayers of the church were blessed with satisfactory evidence of salvation. All of the boarders inside are professed Christians, except three. We are encouraged in the hope we have of the influence that these zealous workers will exert in their several localities of this South land.

MARRIED.

CONKLIN—BROWN.—On Twelfth month 24th, 1902, Ida A. Brown, of Monkton Ridge, Vt., and Edward L. Conklin, of Newark, N. J.

DIED.

ANDREWS.—At Cedral S. L. P., Mexico, Second month 18th, 1903, Edna Carol, infant daughter of Dr. B. F. and Bertha H. Andrews. She was a little messenger of love and sunshine in the mission home, though she stayed there less than a year.

ELLIS.—At the home of her parents, near Newberg, Ore., Josephine, daughter of Enos and Rosa Ellis, in her 14th year. She was a member of Newberg Monthly Meeting.

GORE.—At Pasadena, Cal., First month 29th, 1903, Susan Carr Gore, aged 69 years. She was the daughter of Henry S. and Hannah J. Taylor, and a member of Lincoln Monthly Meeting of Friends, Loudoun County, Va. She was a strong Christian character, active in the service of the Lord.

Phillips Brooks has somewhere said, in substance: If you wish to be humble, do not shrink down and make yourself as small as possible. Stand up at your manliest, at full height, and measure your utmost against something so much greater than yourself as to show you what you are.—W. N. Clarke.

It is true that love cannot be forced, that it cannot be made to order, that we cannot love because we ought or even because we want. But we can bring ourselves into the presence of the lovable. We can enter into Friendship through the door of Discipleship. We can learn love through service.—Hugh Black.

ASKING QUESTIONS.

An Inquiry Changed a Man's Whole Life.

When you get a man to recognize that his bad feelings come from improper food and that he can get well by using scientific food, the battle is half won. One of New York's business men says:

"I was troubled for a long time with indigestion, headache, and stomach trouble, and had taken various medicines but with no good results. I concluded to see how a change of food would affect me. I never cared particularly for cereals of any kind, but ate meat and pastry continually and drank coffee.

"I found, on inquiring, that Grape-Nuts were highly spoken of and decided to give them a trial. To say I was surprised at the result would not begin to do justice to my feelings. My headaches left me; my brain became clearer and active; my attacks of indigestion grew fewer and fewer until they ceased entirely, and where I once went home tired, fagged out and indisposed to any exertion whatever, I now found a different state of affairs.

"My color was good, my muscles strong and firm and fully equal to anything I asked of them, instead of soft and flabby. I live two miles from my business and walk it daily back and forth, if the weather permits. I am 55 years old and feel as well and strong as when I was 30, and can ride 70 miles a day on a bicycle without feeling any bad results." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

AUNT SALLY AND HER OPINIONS.

One morning, after a special provocation to impatience, I asked Sally if she believed it paid to pray for patience.

"Chile, I b'lieves it pays to pray wid-out ceasin'. Is yo' in trouble, honey?"

"No, not especially; but this morning, and many other mornings, I prayed for patience, prayed to be kept patient all day; and it often happens, as it did this morning, before I got from my room to the dining-room, I got all out of patience because of some senseless provocation, and I have about come to the conclusion that it does not do any good to pray for patience."

"Well, chile, dat am trouble nuf. I done notice dat when peoples looses der faith in prayer dey's mighty near trouble, kase when dey looses der holt of prayer, somehow de Lawd he doan seem to count fo' much in de runnin' of things down yer. De trouble wid yo' am right yer, honey; yo' doan know 'bout de laws what rules patience. Does yo' think dat patience am ready-made stuff what de Lawd can gib yo' in a bunch? Dat am not de way de res' of us gits patience. 'Deed it am not. De way to git patience am to use what yo' done got. Chile, de Lawd am mighty good to yo'. He sho' did try to answer yo'r prayer right smart dis mawnin', sho' nuf; an' yo' done git in de way."

"Why, Sally! How do you make that out?"

"Well, chile, when yo' done pray fo' patience, de Lawd puts de trial in yo'r way right quick, so yo' can use what patience yo' haves, an' in dat a way git some mo'e, kase dat am de way patience comes. Honey, I reckon de Holy Spirit done lead yo' to pray, kase de trial am right dar befo'e yo'. 'Less yo' changes yo'r way of thinkin', yo' got no need to look fo' trouble; yo' haves it right dar, sho' nuf."

"Sally, don't you think that the way you mark out is a rather hard way?"

"I done notice when yo' wants good men fo' de ball team yo' puts 'em to a table my 'emself. I 'spects it am so yo' can gib 'em all de pie an' cake dey wants. Am dat it, honey?"

"Oh, no, Sally; that sort of treatment would never make good athletes. I give them cereals and good underdone meats."

"Does they like that sho' nuf?"

"Not always."

"Well, I would n't treat 'em that-a-way jes' fo' a ball game."

"Now, Sally, you are the one that does not understand. There is no other way to get good material, good muscle, and to develop good, strong men."

"Well, honey, chile, if de Lawd uses de same means to 'velop de muscles of de soul what yo' uses to 'velop de muscles of de body—gives yo' jes' what am good fo' yo'—am it right fo' yo' to call it a hard way? Patience, faith, hope, and love am de muscles of de soul. Honey, jes' 'member dis when yo' prays fo' patience: Keep yo'r eyes open fo' de trial."—J. W. Lawrence, in "Western Christian Advocate."

"Did your grandmother remember you in her will?" "Yes, she had a clause in there instructing the executors to collect all the loans she had made me."—Baltimore News."

THE OLD RELIABLE

Absolutely Pure

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE

An undertaker advertised for a driver for a hearse, and among the applicants he selected a good-looking strong fellow, with a solemn countenance. "Before employing you," said the undertaker, "I want to know if you have had any experience in this business?" "Well, I never drove a hearse," admitted the applicant, "but I've driven the next thing to it." "What do you mean?" "Well," said the applicant, with confidence, "I drove a brewer's dray for seven years." He secured the post.

THE VEERY.

The moonbeams over Arno's vale in silver flood were pouring,
When first I heard the nightingale a long-lost love deploring,
So passionate, so full of pain, it sounded strange and eerie;
I longed to hear a simpler strain—the wood notes of the veery.

The laverock sings a bonny lay above the Scottish heather;
It sprinkles down from far away like light and love together;
He drops the golden notes to greet his brooding mate, his dearie;
I only know one song more sweet—the vespers of the veery.

In English gardens, green and bright and full of fruity treasure,
I heard the blackbird with delight repeat his merry measure;
The ballad was a pleasant one, the tune was loud and cheery,
And yet, with every setting sun, I listened for the veery.

But far away and far away, the tawny thrush is singing;
New England woods, at close of day, with that clear chant are ringing;
And when my light of life is low, and heart and flesh are weary,
I fain would hear, before I go, the wood notes of the veery.

—Henry van Dyke.

COUNTESS TOLSTOY.

Countess Tolstoy is a wholesome-looking woman, not untalented, brave to the point of heroism, and if there are two kinds of halo in heaven, her's may be larger than that of her husband. To be a genius of his type is no small thing, but to be the wife of such a man requires peculiar greatness. No one knows of the long, weary nights of toil, the work with pen and needle, the struggle with peasants and publishers, in the attempt to rescue the lost estates for her numerous children, and to give them such an education as befits their station in life. You will notice a peculiar look of tenderness upon her face as she gazes upon her husband, a look in which love and devotion live and burn. Her dresses show character; they are well worn. Her manner toward the stranger is as cordial as that of her husband. Of course, you may find her at times burdened and preoccupied, but the mother of fifteen children, the mistress of a large household, the owner of estates, cannot always smile at you who may be only one of the great army of the curious who look at everything and into everything, going away to mock or to condemn.—From "A Visit to Tolstoy's Home," by Dr. Edward J. Steiner, in "The Chautauquan" for March.

"Remember, boys," said the master, "that in the bright lexicon of youth there's no such word as fail." After a few moments a boy raised his hand. "Well, what is it, my lad?" asked the master. "I was merely going to suggest," replied the youngster, "that if such is the case, it would be advisable to write to the publishers of that lexicon and call their attention to the omission."—"Tit-Bits."

NEVER TOO LATE

To Try a Good Thing.

"I am fifty-two years old, and for forty years of that time I have been a chronic catarrh sufferer," says Mr. Jas. Gieshing, of Allegheny City; "with every change of weather my head and throat would be stuffed up with catarrhal mucus.

"I could not breathe naturally through the nostrils for months together, and much of the time I suffered from catarrh of the stomach. Finally my hearing began to fail, and I realized something must be done.

"I tried inhalers and sprays and salves, which gave me temporary relief, and my physician advised me to spray or douche with Peroxide of Hydrogen. But the catarrh would speedily return in a few days, and I became thoroughly discouraged.

"I had always been prejudiced against patent medicine, but, as everything else had failed, I felt justified in at least making a trial.

"Our good old family physician, Dr. Ramsdell, laughed at me a little, but said if I was determined to try patent medicines, he would advise me to begin with Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, because he knew what they contained, and he had heard of several remarkable cures resulting from their use, and furthermore that they were perfectly safe, containing no cocaine or opiates.

"The next day I bought a fifty-cent box at a drug store, carried it in my pocket, and four or five times a day I would take a tablet; in less than a week I felt a marked improvement, which continued, until at this time I am entirely free from any trace of catarrh.

"My head is clear, my throat free from irritation, my hearing is as good as it ever was, and I feel that I cannot say enough in praise of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets."

These tablets contain extract of Eucalyptus bark, blood root and other valuable antiseptics, combined in pleasant tablet form, and it is safe to say that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are far superior in convenience, safety and effectiveness to the antiquated treatment by inhalers, sprays and douches.

They are sold by druggists everywhere in the United States and Canada.

The authorship of "Little Breeches," written by Secretary of State John Hay, was frequently attributed to the late Bret Harte. A young lady once said to him: "I am highly pleased to meet you, Mr. Harte. I have read all your poems, but I have enjoyed 'Little Breeches' the most."

"Pardon me, madam," replied Mr. Harte, "but you have put the 'Little Breeches' on the wrong man."

THE GIBRALTAR OF THE INSURANCE WORLD.

The company which has "The Strength of Gibraltar" has given one more proof, if proof were needed, that the assumption of the phrase was well warranted in their annual statement.

During 1902 The Prudential has added over one hundred and eight million dollars to the amount of paid for insurance it had in force; it has added to its assets nearly twelve million dollars; to its income nearly five million dollars; and to its surplus funds more than two million, five hundred thousand dollars.

It has now in force over eight hundred million dollars of life insurance divided among nearly five million policies, representing, roughly speaking, about one million families.

This is really a magnificent showing for a company that has only a record of twenty-seven years to look back upon; certainly nothing like it has ever before occurred in the history of American life insurance. In these days of keen competition, success can only be the result of enterprise coupled with upright business management; and one does not need to go further than this cause to account for The Prudential's great success.

The contemplation of celestial things will make a man both speak and think more sublimely and magnificently when he descends to human affairs.—Cicero.

Women's Ribbed Undervests

No domestic ribbed underwear is more popular than that made by the Otis Underwear Co., which in firsts commands the highest market prices at all times. With an enormous production and a most rigid system of inspection, the number of seconds is very large. We take all the seconds and would be glad to get twice as many, for Otis "seconds" are about as good as most firsts.

We have on sale about three thousand dozen Women's Ribbed Undervests, in Otis seconds, at half the price of firsts, as follows:

WOMEN'S RICHELIEU - RIBBED UNDERVESTS—Of fine quality, in white, with low neck; finished exactly like the firsts, which sell at 20c, each—these are 10c each.

WOMEN'S RICHELIEU - RIBBED UNDERVESTS—of fine lisle; low neck, with a finish of mercerized ribbon, seconds of the 37½c. quality—18c. each, or 3 for 50c.

WOMEN'S MERCERIZED LISLE VESTS—of the soft quality that looks and feels like silk; low neck; excellent seconds of the 50c. grade—25 cents each.

GO FORWARD.

There is a time when the best service of God is not prayer, but action. God says to Moses, "Why spend your time in crying for Divine help when there are human hands fit for the work? Instead of speaking to Me speak to the Children of Israel that they go forward." Moses had always been lethargetic about action: his natural weakness may have been want of energy. He seems to have expected a purely Divine interference—a bolt from the blue, or an earthquake, or a legion of angels; his vision of the burning bush doubtless to him suggested something drastic. He perhaps even thought it wrong to use physical means. Ought not God to have all the glory? There was a short road to the land of promise—the Divine road: why take the human way? God answered, "Because it is the long way, because it requires more time and trouble, and therefore more faith and love." And so God answers still to every soul that asks why He has made life so difficult. He says, "It is better to gain than to get; it is better to win than to wear; it is better to conquer your possession than to carry it unresisting home."

Events and Comments.

Vesuvius again has become active. The volcano is throwing up ashes and explosive incandescent globes.

A revolution in the American glass industry is promised by the introduction of new glass blowing machines, which will take place during the summer vacation. One machine, it is said, will do the work of three men.

The Austrian Commissioner to the St. Louis Fair says that notwithstanding the refusal of the Government to make an appropriation for an official exhibit, Austria will be well represented at the exhibition, as two hundred manufacturers intend exhibiting independently.

Emigration from Great Britain to Canada has been exceeding all previous records, and the season just opening is expected to surpass the last. There is every indication that the Dominion has entered upon a new era, to be marked by material growth unparalleled in its history.

The Czar of Russia has issued a decree providing for freedom of religion throughout his dominions, the establishment to some degree of local self-government, together with other concessions to the village committees. It remains to be seen whether these reforms can be put into practical operation.

The continued heavy rains have resulted in rising and flooded rivers all over the country, and reports of damage come from places scattered from New England to the Mississippi. In the valley of the Mississippi the situation is especially serious. The levees are threatened at several points, and grave apprehension is felt.

The Cuban Senate has ratified the reciprocity treaty between Cuba and the United States; but the authorities at Washington have decided to wait until the next Congress convenes for final action, since some of the conditions alter the government revenues, and consequently must be passed upon by the House of Representatives.

Some may be interested to know that over 400,000 Finns, 200,000 Swedes, and many thousand Norwegians and Lapps are perishing of hunger. The situation seems to be worse in Finland than in the other afflicted countries. The London "Times" reports that the Finnish peasants have been eating bark and unripe, frost-spoiled rye and barley made into bitter cakes. So terrible is the dearth of vegetation, according to another account, that even the birds have died by thousands in the forests.

Advices from Pekin indicate an approaching outbreak by the Boxers, and that the Dowager Empress and Yung Lu, the Grand Chancellor, are secretly aiding an anti-foreign movement which will probably result in much bloodshed.

The present average yearly consumption of tea is about one pound per capita, or less than the consumption of thirty years ago. But the per capita consumption of coffee in the same time has nearly doubled, and that of beer and ale has more than doubled.

"One, and possibly two professors of the Harvard Law School have been selected for important positions in the Royal Court of Siam." One is that of legal adviser to the King, a place of great influence and responsibility, because the action of Siam in international questions will depend largely upon the advice of the holder of this office.

The Census Bureau has issued a bulletin on the geographical distribution of population in the United States. It shows that the proportion living within the region drained to the Atlantic Ocean is steadily diminishing, while the part drained to the Gulf of Mexico is becoming relatively more populous, as is the case, in a still more marked degree, in the Great Basin and in the Pacific Ocean region.

A system of wireless telegraphy has been invented by Joseph Murgas, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., which he believes can be used to convey messages seventy miles on land and seven hundred miles at sea, and may be improved until even greater distances can be overcome. With the other systems now in use the air and ground are employed to make a circuit, while with this new system either can be used.

After Ninth month 1st next all steam railroad vehicles—engines, tenders, snowplows and cabooses, as well as cars—must have automatic couplers, and all couplers on any particular train must be of the same pattern. And at least half the cars in every train must be equipped with air brakes. Such is the requirement imposed on all interstate railroads by the amendment of the federal safety-appliance law enacted by the last Congress.

The sale of intoxicating liquors in the restaurant of the House of Representatives has been discontinued. The proprietor desired time in which to dispose of the stock of liquors on hand, but this was not allowed. The order was imperative that liquors could no longer be sold in any part of the Capitol. Not only must the sale be discontinued, but the officers insisted that all intoxicating liquors must be immediately removed from the building.

BEAUTY IN RELIGION.

THOSE who have charge of the education of children have discovered that nothing exercises such a moulding influence over the little lives as beautiful surroundings and beautiful objects. The child who has formed a deep love for beautiful things is well on his way toward a love for good things. Children instinctively feel the power of a beautiful face. Roses on the desk, bright paper on the walls, attractive pictures, growing plants in the windows—all these things play their part in making children good. Music reaches the hidden life in a child in a way that nothing else does. Harmony belongs to the very inner nature of things, and it certainly exercises a subtle power in the ordering of the life in its early formative period. The importance of beauty in early training lies in the fact that it reaches deeper than consciousness and affects the disposition and underlying nature itself. What is learned may be forgotten; what is silently wrought into the sub-conscious self will not fade out with time.

What has all this to do with religion? Very much, indeed. The influence of beauty in religion is often enough overlooked, but it is nevertheless a decidedly important fact. The pleading of a beautiful voice is instantly felt even by the roughest people. Hearts respond at once when the "beauty of holiness" appears in a life which is before them. There is always a deep power over a meeting when the praise is felt to be "comely," i. e., beautiful. A more restful sense steals upon any worshiper when the room in which he sits is harmonious and attractive than when it is cheerless and barnlike. The soul demands beauty, and therefore the rough and ugly can never help on the true religious life. God must love beauty, or He would not have filled the earth and heavens with it, and it is the almost universal experience that when we feel deeply moved by beauty God always seems near.

It is not possible for most of us to meet in buildings which are beautiful in their architecture; where the arches are groined in perfect curves, where the pillars completely express the laws of symmetry. We have plain houses, built often by the hands of our own members. This is all very well. But the room where we gather should be as comely and as fitting as our tastes and abilities will permit. It should be as beautiful as it can be. It should have the freshest, sweetest air there is in the world, and the needs of the little ones should not be forgotten. But most important of all, the meeting itself must have the spirit of beauty in it. Athletic prizes to-day are not given to the performers who do wonderful feats, but to those who perform their feats with grace and beauty. Let us catch a hint from the athlete. Let all things be fitting. The manner in which one prays counts tremendously. Earthly courts are weighed down with etiquette, but it is well to come before our heavenly King with a manner which befits His majesty. The effect of a beautiful prayer is something indescribable. The same thing is true with the message of the gospel. Some of us are too old to change our tones or our manners. But let the young speaker learn early that what he says will count much more if it is seasoned with the salt of grace. Not only the "feet," but the whole bearing, "of those who bring good tidings," should be beautiful. How we all might profit by obeying Paul's word: "Whatsoever things are true, honorable, just, pure, lovely, of good report, virtuous and praiseworthy, set your thoughts on these" (Phil. 4: 8).

SOME IMPORTANT COLLEGE CHANGES.

WE print in another column a letter from President J. J. Mills, in which he announces to the many friends of Earlham College that his long connection with that institution now comes to a close. For nineteen years he has been its president, and they have been nineteen tremendously important years in the life of the college, and in the history of the Society of Friends. Earlham has been steadily expanding and increasing its influence. More money has become available for its use, and with this have come better facilities for its work and a larger and better equipped faculty. Its reputation has steadily grown, not only through the State, but throughout the country, while its spiritual power has increased in a remarkable degree. These years of President Mills's administration will always mark an epoch in the history of the college, and for the next generation men and women will rise up and call him blessed, for he has kindled and inspired those who have been under his guidance.

His successor, Robert L. Kelly, has already been well tried and tested. He is admirably qualified for the position, and he has proved himself fitted for its responsibilities and burdens, which in a large institution are very great. It is a cause for particular satisfaction that President Kelly is thoroughly alive to the best interest of Quakerism. He is one of a group of young Friends (would it were larger) pledged to live and labor to increase the power of this branch of the Church. He will, we prophesy, contribute in large measure to the constructive spiritual forces now at work to make our principles of religion felt in modern society and we believe he has come to his task at a fit time.

Albert J. Brown, of Indianapolis, has been elected president of Wilmington College, and he, too, will take up his task in the same earnest spirit and with the same wide purpose. He is a graduate of Leland Stanford University, a vigorous, strenuous worker, and withal devoted to this same cause—the deepening of the spiritual life and power of our Church. He will be exceedingly missed in Western Yearly Meeting, but a man can be in only one right place at a time. We would not pass away from this subject, without saying a few words in reference to the severing of President Unthank's connection with Wilmington. He has always seemed to us one of the clearest-minded men in our denomination—a man of genuine insight and able to tell what he knows with admirable clearness and precision. He has always done solid, honest work, and he deserves, as he goes to his well-earned leisure, a hearty “well done.”

THE MINISTRY OF THE MEMBERSHIP.*

BY THOMAS J. BATTEY.

The subject assigned for this paper is a sermon in itself—the ministry of the membership. It condenses into one happy phrase the best for which our Society has stood for two hundred years. How it calls up the old heroic days when the loyalty of the membership among themselves wrung even from their enemies the exclamation, “How these Quakers love one another”; the days when they relieved each other by turns in loathsome dungeons, offering their own bodies to satisfy the claims of injustice; the days when even the boys and girls kept up the meetings after their parents had been dragged off to jail.

The ministry of the membership—what an earnest protest the expression utters against the so-called “one-man power” in church matters, where too often one over-worked and over-anxious pastor must carry the burden of the meeting, and minister from time to time, as best he may, to a comatose membership who seem to think their whole duty done when they present their bodies a weekly offering to be fed or entertained by his ministration, which may be duly criticized afterwards.

Or where, on the other hand, the pastor by the length and variety of his own exercises, gives little opportunity in the meetings for the unfolding of those budding spiritual gifts, which have been the most precious fruit of our mode of worship. Where shall a place be found for the growth and gradual strengthening of young ministers, if a fixed order of service at the pulpit be permitted to crowd out the “basis of silence” which has so often been like the “gentle rain upon the grass.” Is there not some danger that our modern Pauls will overlook the Timothys? But the highest value of these words lies in the inspiring ideal they set before us.

What a picture they hold up of a concerned, baptized membership, where each one feels the burden of the church's work and lends a willing shoulder to help sustain it! Where the church, as it should, carries the pastor, rather than the pastor the church. Where Christian experience no longer spends itself in ecstatic emotion, but crystallizes rather into the beautiful charities of helpfulness and fidelity.

The ministry of the membership—the expression seems to grow upon one. I wonder who thought of it, or did it come as an inspiration? It ought to be written large, high above every pulpit in the land, in full view of the membership, to remind them continually of their duties and their privileges. It would speak with trumpet tongue to every one who had taken upon himself the vows of the faith.

“Look here, my friend,” we seem to hear it say; “you have a part in this ministry which you may not shirk nor shrink from. You are a part of this organic whole, and if the eye cannot say to the hand, ‘I have need of thee no more,’ may the hand say to the eye, ‘Thou canst do without me.’ You have no right to be a dead member, nor a dead fiber in a living body. Awake from thy lethargy, pray for thyself and for him who ministers at the altar. If thou canst neither fight nor command, hold up the hands of those who can. Show by thy attent ear and eager eye that the preacher has at least one hearer in the flock. Grasp his hand at the close of the meeting, and speak an appreciative word. Ask him to find thee some lowly task to do, or find it for thyself.

“Resist the temptation to criticize before others his awkward expressions, or ungrammatical language, so long as they bear the stamp of earnest endeavor, or carry a message of truth. If thou canst preach a better sermon than he, go forth and preach it. If not, be silent till thou canst. If thou canst, and will not, then ask thyself the meaning of personal responsibility, and work out the problem before the bar of conscience.”

The ministry of the membership. Again we hear it say—this time in tones of gentlest persuasion—“Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.” Go forth from the temple, my friend, and find the man sick of the palsy, and if thou canst not restore his arm whole as the other, use thy own in its stead to make his pallet for him, and lift the cooling water to his lips. Go seek blind Bartimæus by the wayside, and if thou hast not the power to give him sight, be eyes for him, and read to him the words of One who said, “I am the light of the world.”

Go down the dark ravine toward Jericho, which is but another name for the city slum, and find the man who has fallen among thieves; pass him not by on the other side, but pour the oil and wine of thy consolation into his gaping wounds; set him on thy own beast, and take him to the inn, where, if thou canst not care for him longer, leave thy check for those who will.

* Paper read at the New England Friends' Conference, First month 1st, 1903.

Or it may be thou should go and fill Matthew's place at the receipt of custom, while he follows the Master over the hills of Judea to preach the gospel to those who sit in darkness.

If so, discharge thy trust with such cleanness of hands in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, that thou mayest shine as a light in the world.

Go help Zebedee pull his nets on the Sea of Galilee while James lays down his life at the hand of Herod, and John writes his gospel for the ages.

Do these things and when again thou comest up to the temple to worship, thy heart will exclaim, "It is good to stand within thy gates, O Zion."

The ministry of the membership. Our preacher there above the pulpit has not yet exhausted his theme. This time, with "level, fronting eyelids" and princely mien, he looks the membership squarely in the face, and speaks in tones which have no uncertain sound, "If any man hath an ear let him hear what the spirit sayeth unto the churches," not the pastors only, but the membership at large. There is a stern conflict at hand, "for I saw the heaven opened, and behold a white horse, and he that sat thereon called Faithful and True. And in righteousness does he judge and make war. He is clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called the Word of God—and he goeth forth conquering and to conquer, and the armies of heaven follow him upon white horses, and the proclamation has gone forth, 'whosoever is fearful and trembling, let him return and depart from the ranks, for there shall be no release in this war.' For I saw the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies gathered together to make war upon him that sat upon the horse and against his army. But on his ensign, in letters of light, runs the legend, 'Never foiled in battle, not beaten in the field.'" The marching song of his followers is

"O let me fall in battle with my armor girded on, O let me fall in battle while the ranks are marching on."

The clarion call from the leader sounds over the host, "Be strong in the Lord and in the strength of his might. Take the whole armor of God that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand, therefore, having girded your loins with truth and having put on the breastplate of righteousness, and having shod your feet with the preparation of the gospel of peace; withal taking up the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the evil one. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

With a membership thus led, and thus equipped, there can be no question respecting the issue.

The contest will be long and severe, but it will not be uncertain.

"We may not live to see the day,
But earth shall glisten in the ray
Of the good time coming."

This thought of victory through conflict, of the gradual betterment of the race through struggle, and the working together of many forces under the direction of a master mind, gives assurance of final triumph, because it brings Christianity into harmony with God's mighty on-working in nature.

Tennyson's words,

"Yet I doubt not through the ages
One increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men do widen
With the process of the suns," find their parallel in the more exalted strain of an earlier poet, "He shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied."

But this finds its interpretation in the words of the great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

There was a time when your beautiful Nahant out there was a lonely island off the shore, lovely to look to, but inaccessible. And the ocean said, "Let us build a mighty causeway from the island to the continent, over which the coming ones may tread dry shod." So he called on the rains and rivers to bring down material from the land. He commanded the frosts of winter to split off blocks from the cliffs. He bade his mighty breakers grind them into pebbles. He set his little wavelets at work moving the sand grains and the sea shells. He hailed the tides as they passed by on their daily rounds, and set them to carry his burdens. By and by a little sand spit grew out from the mainland and pointed with its tapering finger toward its young brother on the island.

Age after age went by, and the channel grew steadily narrower. Sometimes, when the silent forces had prepared the material, the ocean would summon his giant storms to pile it up, and then followed ages more of preparation, till finally the task was completed. The gap was bridged. The beasts of the field and the prehistoric races made use of it, till civilized man took possession and made it minister in a thousand ways to his health, his recreation and his sense of the beautiful.

So must the ministry of the membership build the King's highway for coming generations to tread.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

OUR OLD PEOPLE.

BY ANNA MAY PEMBERTON.

Who can estimate the value of the generation just passing from us? The old people—what a breadth of meaning in those words? We look back with deepening interest to the plain bonnets and straight coats, not that we love the dress, only as it is typical of a certain kind of character.

We go back in memory to childhood, or perhaps to our first Christian work. How carefully they guarded us; how tenderly they watched us, that we go not astray! Whoever might misjudge, they always understood us. Free from envy, they were glad of our success and the Lord's blessing attending us and our service.

They imparted to us great inspiration. We knew they loved us, and yet no flattering words ever passed their lips. They spoke not many words; no meaningless, flimsy compliments ever came from them, but what they did say had weight.

It was easy to be faithful to God when they were present. It was easy to pray, to testify, to preach. We knew they were interested. We knew they watched us with no spirit of ugly criticism; and if we said anything that contained even one germ of genuine truth, they would know it; and that truth to them would over-balance any faults that might have been in the service, for they made the most of the good things. And when, "after meeting," they shook hands with us and said, tenderly, "Be faithful," we knew they felt that we could do something for God; and the Spirit of the Lord shone upon us, reflected in their confidence; and our hearts responded, "We shall be faithful to the end."

If they offered a word of admonition it was done in a loving way, and in and over all we could see the divine wisdom in their counsels, and always a love of the church and of the cause. Their presence spiritualized not only individuals, but meetings. O, the quietness, the composure, the self-possession, that was theirs under the Spirit's power!

They did not sing; some of them did not believe in music, but there was music in the voice; there was music in the step; there was music all about their lives—so gentle, so courteous, so careful of wounding other people's feelings, so patient, so forgiving, so quiet, so spiritual, so beautiful every day. This was Christianity.

Such friendships are seldom known; and when they are all gone and the responsibility of the Church devolves entirely upon us, how we shall miss their counsel! How much they are to us to-day, as they sit in our meetings! How we shall miss them when the last one has gone, but how rich in our friendships with the better world!

West Milton, O.

Our dispositions cannot hurt our wills. "There is no evil," says Kant, "but the evil will." But our will can hurt or help our dispositions. If we will to love, we shall become loving. If we will to treat tenderly, we shall become tender. If our wills are false and dishonorable, no matter how even and fair our dispositions, it must become corroded by the evil power within. And if our wills are right, our passions and affections and moods will become right also.—Robert E. Speer.

We need more in this world than the calm of quiet circumstances. We may have that and yet be in a tempest of unrest. What we need is soul rest, and none but Jesus can give us that.—Exchange.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Third mo. 23.—At Philippi. Acts 16: 22-34.

Third-day, Third mo. 24.—Opposition. Acts 17: 1-12.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 25.—One God. Acts 17: 22-34.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 26.—At Corinth. Acts 18: 1-11.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 27.—Paul and Apollos. Acts 18: 18 to 19: 7.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 28.—At Ephesus. Acts 19: 8-20.

First-day, Third mo. 29.—At Ephesus. Acts 19: 21-41.

The lessons of the past quarter describe portions of Paul's second and third missionary journeys. The time covered is about six or seven years, or from about 52 to 59 A.D. These were some of the most fruitful years of the Apostle's missionary efforts. He not only traveled from place to place as the Spirit led, but at Corinth he spent several months, and at Ephesus nearly three years teaching and confirming the brethren, at both these places supporting himself and aiding those that were with him.

In the first lesson Paul and Silas suffered for their work, and were miraculously delivered from prison; and he who had been their jailer was converted and became their friend. The lesson is also taught that a personal faith in Christ is the faith which counts. To the church at Philippi Paul, after his departure, sends a message which is just as true now as it was when Paul wrote. It is not enough to believe; the life must be changed, and the desire must be for those things which are true, and honest, and just, and of good report. At Berea and at Thessalonica Paul repeats the message he gave at Philippi, and again suffers persecution.

To the Thessalonians Paul sends a message which again is just as well suited to men of the present generation as it was to those of Thessalonica. "Follow that which is good"; "Rejoice evermore"; "Pray without ceasing"; "Abstain from every form of evil"—golden words of wisdom for all.

At Athens Paul addresses a class he did not often meet—the careless, intellectual men who loved to dispute, but apparently cared but little for the great realities of life. In that day, as in the present, such are, perhaps, the hardest to reach, and so far as we know Paul did not make much impression.

In Corinth, at first sight, a more unpromising place than Athens, Paul found a fruitful field, though not without danger and suffering. To the Corinthians Paul wrote more fully than to the members of any other church. Their situation was one exposed to many temptations, and many of them had been brought up surrounded by vice. So he speaks strongly of the need of self-control, of sacrifice for the sake of others, of voluntarily restricting Christian liberty lest others be made to stumble. To the Corinthians also he sent that great Christian hymn in praise of "Love"—"the greatest thing in the world." Everywhere Paul went he found helpful companions and fellow laborers. Of these one of the greatest was Apollos, "mighty in the Scriptures," and he was instructed by Priscilla and Aquila, the wife and husband—laymen, if we may so call them—who were such aids to Paul. At Ephesus, as at Corinth, Paul found rich reward. Here, so far as we know, he made his longest voluntary stay, because, as he tells us, "a great door and an effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." (1 Cor. 16: 9.) In the riot at Ephesus we have a graphic picture of an Oriental mob, and of one of the dangers to which Paul was exposed.

To the churches of Asia Minor Paul sent that wonderful Epistle to Ephesians, whose "keynote is the new life in Christ"—"And you did He make alive when ye were dead through your trespasses and sins." "By grace have you been saved through faith." "Created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them."

TOPIC FOR THIRD MONTH TWENTY-NINTH.

A MISSION STUDY OF AFRICA.

Ps. 68: 29-31; Isa. 43: 3.

Second-day, Third mo. 23.—God judging Ethiopia. Ezek. 29: 8-16.

Third-day, Third mo. 24.—The sons of Ham. Gen. 10: 1, 6-19.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 25.—A noble African. Matt. 27: 32, 33.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 26.—An early African convert.—Acts 8: 26-40.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 27.—Ethiopia shall know Christ. Ps. 87.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 28.—A prophecy about Ethiopia. Isa. 18: 1-7.

Africa has for so many years stood as the symbol benighted degradation that to many its evangelization has seemed hopeless. A missionary relates that friends sought to deter him from going to that land by saying, "It is of no use at all for you to go to Africa to preach the gospel there. The Africans cannot be converted. In the first place, they haven't mind enough to understand the gospel you are taking; and, in the second place, even supposing they had mind enough, they have no moral consciousness." How well the Spirit and the Scripture are fitted to disprove such a view appears from the report made by a worker in Uganda, who tells of a convert who said to him one day, "I think Paul must have been Uganda man, for when he speak he show Uganda man his heart." A man who can feel affinity with the scholarly logician of the New Testament may well be thought of as accessible to Christian influence.

The work is mostly of recent origin, but the results demonstrate what can be done even among naked savages who are found without written language. In 1900 a report for a single mission showed as a partial result of twenty-five years of effort seven languages reduced to writing, portions of Scripture, hymn books and school books translated into these languages, 123 schools, 460 native teachers and monitors, and 30,000 pupils in more or less regular attendance. Nine years of effort secured a following of nine men and women as believers in Christ. Sixteen years later 457 persons, of whom 309 were adults, were received into church affiliation in a single day.

The vastness of Africa is a tremendous factor in the effort to reach its population, so numerous and so diverse in speech, prejudices and capacity. The key here as elsewhere is found in developing the native teacher and preacher, and the African rises nobly to the requirements of such a work. Accepting proscription and even martyrdom, they have equaled the heroic apostles of any land in their faith, love and courage. In other regions the missionary is welcomed and besought to come or send a teacher to their villages.

Their inhuman treatment of the native races is a dark blot on the record of the Boers in South Africa, but here also grace has prevailed, and native converts are numbered by the thousands. A natural result of the maltreatment of blacks by whites is the formation of separate congregations in consonance with what is called the "Ethiopian Movement," which suggests what has been demonstrated to be a most practical and valuable idea—the undertaking by the American negro to carry to his brother in Africa the light that has come to him even in connection with the great crime that brought him to our land. What they can do with our aid as supporters of the work promises much for Africa's future, if each will do his part.

We are particularly fortunate in having freshly before us the accounts of Friends' work in Africa, in the issues of Second month 12th, 19th and 26th of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Politics and commerce are exploiting Africa. Let the Christian forces of the world not fall behind—and we have a place.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

AN OPEN DOOR IN AFRICA.

BY WILLIS R. HOTCHKISS.

Prophecy is fast becoming history in East Africa. Fifty-eight years ago the heroic Krapf saw his devoted wife and new-born babe laid away beneath the waving palms of what is now English Point, Mombasa. But from that aching heart there came a clarion peal to the Church. "Though many missionaries may fall in the fight," he wrote, "yet the survivors will pass over the slain in the trenches and take this great African fortress for the Lord."

Many a noble life, indeed, has been claimed in the succeeding struggle, but in spite of almost insuperable obstacles the advance has been steady and sure. And to-day the dream of Krapf, of a chain of stations into the interior, is practically realized. Every important tribe, save two, from the coast to Uganda, now has its mission station or stations.

And these two, curiously enough—the Nandi and Lumbwa, though there are some wandering Wando-robo in the forests of Man—occupy by far the healthiest and most salubrious section of country in all East Africa. They have only recently submitted to the power of the English administration, however, having been the most troublesome and treacherous people in the country.

Until the advent of the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission, Kavirondo, second largest tribe in the country—the Baganda being the largest—was absolutely untouched. Numbering perhaps a million souls, above the average in industry, intelligence and ambition, they form a unique opportunity for Friends to spread the gospel in this dark land.

We have found a location admirably adapted to our purpose. It is simple fact when I say that "every prospect pleases, and only man is vile." Our altitude of 5,300 feet gives us a healthy climate, free from the dread scourge of fever. Several fine springs, and a good river, furnish an unfailing water supply, both for household and industrial purposes. Already our garden is greatly reducing expenses by furnishing us with potatoes and vegetables of every sort, with wheat almost ready to reap. We expect this year to derive some income from this source. Government officials assure us that there will be no difficulty in disposing of our produce along the railway and around the lake.

We are getting out stone for dwellings, making roads, enlarging our farm against the next rainy season, which commences about March; reducing the Kavirondo language to writing, preaching and teaching, so time does not hang heavily on our hands, though the work does, and we long for reinforcements.

A number of orphans—mostly sent to us by the Government—are under our care. If any Friend desires to make a profitable investment for the Master, ten dollars a year will support one of these lads.

The day's work commences at 6.30 every morning, when all on the station—now about fifty—gather for a gospel service. It is conducted in Swahili, my language assistant, Midadi, interpreting into Kavirondo. Two or three of the young men give promise of soon becoming devoted Christians. Every evening one or more of them come to the house begging to be told more about Jesus Christ.

Crowds throng the station daily, a spectacle of shame to touch one's heart. Women as well as men are absolutely naked, and ever as I look, I fancy I hear a voice of mingled sadness and reproach from out of the past, "I was naked and ye clothed me not." Ah, my friends, this is the saddest thing about heathenism: it is a slight upon the dear Lord Jesus Himself! I wonder if He really meant what He said?

"They are not our own," you answer;

"They are neither kith nor kin."

They are God's own; His love alone

Can save them from their sin.

They are Christ's own;

He left His throne,

And died their souls to win."

Kaimosi, Kavirondo, B. E. Africa.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS FROM CUBA.

Raymond S. Holding has assisted in the school at Gibara the last year, and in the vacations and intervals of the school has, together with J. F. Galvez, our native evangelist, been very efficient in colportage work. He gives us this little account of one of his latest trips: "In January J. F. Galvez and I went to the little village of Contemplora and set out at once distributing tracts and visiting houses. We were favored with many opportunities to speak to the people of their souls' salvation and of Christ as our Saviour. The open-heartedness with which we were received was highly encouraging. Having thoroughly canvassed the village, we went into the surrounding country distributing tracts and inviting to the meeting to be held in the village in the evening. We had not concerned ourselves about our breakfast, which meal the Cubans usually prepare about 10 o'clock; but about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, becoming impressed by hunger with the fact that the hour was late, we decided to ask our breakfasts at the next house. An humble cottage it was, indeed, but we received a warm welcome. The kind woman told us that her fare would be meagre, but, being assured that we would be satisfied with it, she proceeded to serve us. Though the meal consisted of only pumpkin and rice, I have rarely eaten with a keener relish. My friend Galvez said I was a mal compañero (a bad companion), because I ate so fast. I learned that in the absence of bread, chunks of pumpkin, boiled in salt water, did very well, and that when there was no meat pumpkin goes well in its place. The rice was cooked in a way that made it delicious, and a little olive oil poured over it added to its savor. We arose from the table well satisfied, and continued making our circuit of the surrounding country. We were caught out in several showers, usually of short duration, and if a visit was prolonged by one of these, we would read and explain and answer their questions about the Christian religion. We returned to the village in time to light the hall and have a season of prayer before the people gathered. There were few benches to be had, but the comers readily adapted themselves to the situation. Many were seated on the floor about our stand. Ladies occupied the benches, and gentlemen stood up. The services held more than an hour; about one hundred and twenty people were gathered and listened attentively and welcomed us to their village. God did indeed bless that day's work. The next day we went to Auras, and, after another day's canvassing and inviting to our meeting in the evening, we had about 250 present at it, and passed on the next day to Holguin.

Sylvester Jones writes that twenty-two villages of the surrounding country have been reached by them the last year, and 520 Bibles and portions sold.

R. S. Holding's affianced joined him in Gibara 2d mo. 8th, and they were married on the 9th. It was arranged for them to go to Banes the following week and open the mission there.

Sylvester Jones gives the following account of a call he lately had to Banes to marry a couple, which has its interesting as well as romantic side. Where so many house together as in Cuba without marriage it is good example for the foreign employees of the fruit company to honor the institution of marriage by so much forethought and painstaking. Sylvester Jones writes: "I have just returned from a trip to Banes to officiate at a wedding. It was rather a romantic affair in some respects, but after all it was very nice. They are a nice young couple. He is a Dane and she is a Norwegian. He sent a man with a horse to Gibara [30 or 40 miles] to take me over. The roads were very bad, and in some places a little dangerous; but I had a good guide. The young lady came on one of the fruit steamers, which was bound for Jamaica, and did not come inside the harbor at Banes; so a steam tug was sent out to meet her. The groom, a witness and myself went out on the tug to meet the ship. As soon as the bride and her baggage were transferred from the ship and while the tug was steaming up the mouth of the harbor between mountains that towered like green walls of a cañon, they plighted their marriage vows, and a little later landed and entered their new home as husband and wife."

Sylvester returned to Gibara on a small steamer that is expected to make regular trips between those two places hereafter.

MAHALAH JAY.

I am convinced that one reason is that—with happy exceptions—there has been a decline of direct, pointed, faithful and persuasive preaching to the unconverted. Too many discourses are addressed to nobody in particular. Preaching to Christians has been relatively overdone, and preaching to the impenitent underdone. I do not mean denunciations that only irritate, or mere exhortations that are often a waste of breath. I mean that the preachers should so hold up the ugliness and doom of sin before the sinner's eye that he should feel his own guiltiness, and so present Jesus Christ that that sinner should flee to Him as his only Saviour. "Warn them from Me," is God's solemn injunction to every minister. He has, therefore, no more right to cap Sinai or conceal hell than he has to hide the sin-atonement cross of Calvary. In short, I mean logic set on fire by love.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

That God always should remove the thorns is not what in many cases is wanted. It is not the removal of the discipline we need, but the light, the trust, the love, which will enable us to cast our cares upon God, to surrender our wills to His will, and thus to transform the buffetings into friends, angels, and messengers to us of purity and peace.—George Brown.

Correspondence.

TO THE FRIENDS OF EARLHAM COLLEGE.

Dear Friends: Upon the close of my official connection with Earlham College—three years as trustee and nineteen years as president—I desire, through the medium of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, to express my very warm appreciation of the widely-extended and cordial fellowship with Friends and others in America, England and Ireland, into which I have been brought, and my earnest gratitude for the abundant support which I have enjoyed, through these twenty-two years of service.

Particularly grateful were the many expressions of Christian interest and sympathy received during my recent protracted and rather severe illness, from which, through the mercy of our Heavenly Father, I am now well recovered.

My dear wife and I have had a most delightful sojourn in the South. It is now our prospect to return to our home at Richmond, Ind., about the 1st of Fourth month.

Melbourne, Fla.

JOSEPH JOHN MILLS.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Dear Friend: I was much interested in the perusal of "What is Quakerism?" by Levi Gregory, in this week's AMERICAN FRIEND, and especially in that part which refers to the First-day morning meeting "in which, as usual, there were prayers, testimonies, singing and preaching."

If it were not so far off I should greatly enjoy the privilege of attending the First-day morning meeting at San Jose, so that I might observe how the prayers and testimonies affect the interest of the meeting. I find that, as far as I am able to discover, in the East, people calling themselves Friends, do not want prayers and testimonies in the First-day morning meeting. They do not come to hear this one, or that one, or so and so, but they come to hear a sermon, and though there may be resident ministers in the meeting, it is apparently a foregone conclusion that the Holy Spirit would never think of choosing any but the "pastor" to preach that sermon, or if, perchance, he should, he would probably be subject to a large amount of criticism from those for whom his message might be intended.

The plea is made that there is plenty of opportunity to testify in Christian Endeavor meeting, and in the week night prayer meeting, but of course many of those making such a plea are careful to avoid attendance at such.

I am a pastor, and do not want to shirk any part of my duty, but I firmly believe that this growing tendency to look to man instead of having our expectation only from God, and a willingness to receive His messages through whomsoever He may choose to bear them, is largely detrimental to our usefulness as a branch of Christ's church.

The power of testimony or witnessing is apparently much overlooked at the present time, or else there is misapprehension concerning it. If a physician had wrought a dozen effectual cures in patients whose condition had taxed his skill to the utmost, it would be of but little value to him, so far as the enlargement of his practice is concerned, for those twelve people to meet together week after week, and speak to one another in terms of praise for him who had been their benefactor, and then upon getting into a crowd of people afflicted as they once were, to keep perfectly quiet concerning him.

We seem to be doing like this when a handful of Christians get together at prayer meeting, and talk of the wonderful goodness of God to them, and then when we get into the "great congregation," only one or two voices are heard in witness of the truth, and the same one or two time after time. "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord," and "A true witness delivereth souls." Part of the Holy Spirit's work is to convict the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment, and He calls upon us as witnesses to co-operate with Him in this great work.

But why should this thought need to be urged? Is it true that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh?" Will not pentecostal power be productive of pentacostal experience? If, therefore, we receive our Lord in the fullness of His coming by the Holy Spirit, instead of saying, "Oh, you know I never speak in public," or "Somehow that isn't very much in my line," shall we not rather be ready to appropriate the words of Peter and John (Acts 4: 20), "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

When the accuser of the brethren shall be cast down, the declaration will sound forth, "They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony." (Rev. 12: 10-11.)

If we as a Society really believe in the priesthood of believers, and that we are all made kings and priests unto God, let us endeavor to manifest with consistency the faith that is in us, and remember that it is the privilege of all to open in this as in other departments of spiritual life and church work, sacrifice which shall be acceptable and well pleasing to God.

We have rejoiced in the universality of the promise that "Whosoever will may come," let us not fail to appreciate the breadth of the statement that "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me." "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

Very sincerely, CALEB J. JENKINS.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Hiram Hammond and wife, of Iowa, are visiting in Los Angeles and vicinity for her health.

Dr. F. M. Binford's wife and two children are in Los Angeles, expecting him to join them soon.

Oak Grove Seminary at Vassalboro, Maine, has had an attendance of eighty students during its winter term.

Linden Meeting, Iowa, recently enjoyed a spiritual uplift in connection with special gospel labors of W. J. Hadley.

Charles Burrows, graduate of Pacific College, and student in law school, University of Washington, is in Los Angeles, Cal., for his health.

President Robert L. Kelly has been appointed a member of the committee of five for awarding the Cecil Rhodes Scholarships for the State of Indiana.

A. Edward Kelsey, of Winthrop, Maine, had acceptable service at Twelfth Street Meeting, Philadelphia, and Haverford, Pa., at mid-week meetings last week.

Helen B. Harris who resigned her membership with Friends some years ago, has been received back into membership by Hitchin Monthly Meeting at her own request.

Hannah J. Bailey, of New England Yearly Meeting, has been visiting with Friends and attending meetings in Washington, Philadelphia, Haverford and Brooklyn.

Nellie, wife of Levi D. Barr, has been ill for some weeks. She is now at a hospital receiving surgical treatment. Levi Barr requests prayers for her health and restoration to active life and service.

Charles E. Tebbetts has resigned his position in Pasadena Meeting, Pasadena, Cal., to gain more time for prosecuting the work as president of Whittier College. His labors in Pasadena Meeting were very fruitful.

During the absence of Charles Replogle and his wife in England and on the Continent, their little daughter, Mildred, is living with A. Jennie Ridgway at Amboy, Ind. The little boy is living with his mother's parents.

Dublin Quarterly Meeting, held at Dublin, Ind., Second month 27th to Third month 1st., was small owing to a small-pox scare. The meeting was favored throughout with the services of Joseph O. Binford, from Knightstown, Ind., Yearly Meeting's Superintendent of Evangelistic Work, and Allen Jay, from Richmond. Their preaching was accompanied with power.

President Isaac Sharpless, of Haverford College, and Edward Kelsey and Hannah J. Bailey, of Winthrop, Me., and Howard Hoge, of Virginia, attended Friends' Meeting at Washington on the 8th inst. Edward Kelsey and Howard Hoge spoke acceptably in the meeting.

At the Indiana State Oratorical Contest, recently held in Indianapolis, Luther M. Feeger, the representative of Earlham College, spoke on "John Mitchell," and won second place, missing first place by a margin of but two points.

In a ten-day meeting just closed at Selma, O., the local minister, Hannah Lewis Smith, was assisted by Morton Pearson, from Knightstown, Ind. The prayers of the little meeting were abundantly answered in the effort, and several were definitely blessed.

Esther Fowler recently felt a religious concern for gospel service in the House of Representatives at Washington. She applied to the Speaker for an opportunity, but was refused, with the answer that it was unprecedented for a woman to address the House.

The meeting at Mt. Airy, North Carolina, has been greatly blessed under the ministry of James R. Jones and his wife. The membership is in better condition spiritually than ever before. The Christian Endeavor Society is in working order, holding cottage prayer meetings every week, which has proved a blessing to the community.

Some time ago we noted the fact that a committee of Indiana Friends sent a petition to the Legislature of that State, urging the passage of a number of important bills and the defeat of two very undesirable bills. Both of the latter bills have since been defeated, and all the other bills have been passed, except one—the one to establish an Asylum for inebriates. That is good work.

We have received an interesting memorial of Evan Pugh, who was the first president of Pennsylvania State College, and who died in 1864, aged 36. He was born of Quaker parents in Chester County, Pa., and at the age of 19 was a blacksmith's apprentice. By determination and persistent effort he became in the seventeen years of life that were left for him on earth one of the most able scientific men in America at that time.

Robert E. Pretlow, of Wilmington, O., gave three addresses at Greenfield, Ind., on the Eighth instant. In the morning he spoke on the "One Baptism" in the afternoon, on "George Fox, the Flower of the Reformation." At a union service in the evening he spoke to 1,500 people on "Christian Kings." The addresses were all well received; the last one being on "Temperance," was especially helpful because of the effort now being made in the city to close the saloons.

Whitewater Quarterly Meeting was held in Richmond, Ind., the 7th inst. Leannah Hobson and husband, of Westfield, Ind.; Fred Smith, of Farmland, Ind., and Edgar Williams, of Fountain City, were present, besides several home ministers. Edgar Williams was favored with an earnest message. The sermon was followed by many earnest testimonies. Allen Jay made an appeal for the quarterly meeting's aid in lifting the debt from Earlham College, to which the meeting responded. Dinner was served in the dining-room and a social time was enjoyed by all.

Van Wert Particular Meeting and Prodigal Home Meeting, Ohio, in which Leonidas Speer is located, and has been laboring for some time, are prospering and growing in strength spiritually and numerically. The Sabbath morning and evening congregations have increased from very small companies to large and appreciative gatherings. The prayer meetings are increasing in interest and numbers, and the Christian Endeavor is growing in active members. A short series of meetings was held at each of the above places, in which a number were converted and reclaimed. The work was among those from sixteen to sixty years of age. The accessions will number over 40, while a number belonging to other denominations have expressed their intention of uniting with Friends, believing that Friends' interpretation of the scripture is correct.

Tilman Hobson has just closed a series of meetings at Blue River Monthly Meeting, Ind., and though the meetings lasted but nine days there were forty-two conversions and renewals. The teaching in regard to the baptism with the Holy Ghost was very clear and positive, and will certainly result in the deepening of the spiritual life of the members.

Sterling Quarterly Meeting was held at Sterling, Kansas, Second month 27th to Third month 1st, and was a time of great spiritual blessing. The attendance was not as large as otherwise would have been had it not been for the tremendous snow storm the day before, thus rendering travel almost impossible. Josiah Butler, general superintendent of Kansas Yearly Meeting, was in attendance. His presence and counsel were very acceptable. J. Edmund Jay, of Friends' University, was also in attendance and preached most acceptably both on Seventh- and First-days. Many were present on First-day who were not members with Friends, who highly appreciated the excellent and instructive discourse. The next quarterly meeting will be held at Hillsdale, in Rush County, railroad station, Mills, on the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

We have received the report of the New York Colored Mission for 1902. It shows a continued activity along all lines of their work. The missionary nurse made 1,861 calls and relieved 1,618 cases of need during the year. A missionary nursing fund in memory of Hetty De Forest Edwards has been established, amounting to $980; but $600 in addition to the income derived from this is necessary for the work. The Sabbath School, Bible Class and other religious work is in a flourishing condition. The first floor of the mission has been opened three or four nights during each week for boys and girls from the streets. Thus they are brought into purer air and more elevating surroundings and allowed to shout and play games or transact the weighty matters of club business. Cooking class, sewing school, dressmaking, the apron industry, basketry have all had their place in the year's round of work. Eight thousand three hundred and thirty-six nights' lodging have been given to 571 different individuals; 546 women and 25 babies or children; 2,553 servants have been sent to places for employment, and 1,361 patrons have been served.

The following is taken from the minutes of New York Monthly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, held the 4th inst.: "On the 9th of Second month our esteemed friend and fellow-member, Lydia Willets, widow of Robert R. Willets, passed to the promised rest of all who die in the Lord, in the 95th year of her age. She became a member of this monthly meeting through a certificate of removal from the monthly meeting of Westbury and Jericho on the 3d of Sixth month, 1829, and served the church very acceptably in the station of elder from the 4th of Ninth month, 1861, until the acceptance of her resignation, 5th of Twelfth month, 1877; her health not permitting her to continue active effort in the affairs of the church. Though living many years a quiet and retired life the Biblical injunction to "honor the Lord with thy substance" found fulfillment in her generous and frequent benefactions to the church and the cause of philanthropy. While but few remember her in her once valued and active service in the meeting of which she was an honored member, she will be held in grateful memory by the very many to whom her practical Christianity has been in the hands of the Lord such a precious benediction."

A friend in Chicago sends the following account of Abbie S. Hill: "On the morning of Second month 11th, 1903, at Las Cruces, N. M., Abbie S., wife of Fowell B. Hill, a beloved member and elder of Chicago Monthly Meeting, entered into everlasting rest. Although for several years she had been gradually failing in health, yet as long as strength permitted she continued a constant and devoted interest in all the various lines of church work. She was an active member of the Ladies' Aid and Foreign Missionary Societies; her last loving message to the latter was, 'Give my love to all the members; yes, all; there is not one whom I do not love.' Those associated with her in those lines of work testify that on no occasion did they ever hear her speak an unkind word, or see aught in her which was not in accord with the spirit of Christ, and the influence constantly radiating from her beautiful Christian life was felt by all who came in contact with her. She was ready to 'speak the word in season,' and her clear, calm judgment was often sought by those in perplexity or distress, and readily and faithfully given. We feel that such an one can but be greatly missed, in the church, the home and social life, but she has left us an example—rare and beautiful—to follow her as she followed Christ."

The "Cambridge Review" has the following appreciative notice of J. Rendel Harris's resignation of his position in Clare College: "All who know Rendel Harris will regret to hear that he is resigning his readership in Palaeography. Textual criticism is generally regarded as a dry subject, but those who have studied under Prof. Harris have found it anything but dull. No one ever attended his lectures without catching something of his admiration for a pretty conjecture, and something also of his scorn for a needless emendation. Manuscripts will always be human documents to those who first learned to decipher them in the library of the divinity schools with the aid of Mr. Harris. We shall not readily forget the freshness and the humor with which he taught, or the ready kindness with which he accommodated his lectures to the needs of individual students. Of his written and published work we need only say that by his contributions to New Testament criticism he has truly magnified his office. The departure of Mr. Harris will leave Cambridge distinctly the poorer. We are losing not only a stimulating teacher, but also a unique personality."

BORN.

FOWLER.—At Halfa, Iowa, to Clarence A. and Rachel P. Fowler, a son, Third month 4th, 1903, named George Pearson Fowler.

MARRIED.

GOODEN—MORRIS.—In the Friends' Meeting House at Whittier, Cal., on Second month 19th, 1903, William T. Gooden to Mary Lizzie Morris.

DIED.

ALBERTSON.—At the home of her daughter, Abbie Townsend, near North Loup, Neb., Second month 27th, 1903, Susanah Lee Albertson, daughter of Joseph and Nancy Lee, and widow of Mark Albertson, in her 79th year. From her youth she was a Friend, and though not a public worker, she was a woman of strong Christian character.

MOON.—At Welston, Okla., Second month 27th, 1903, Thomas W. Moon, aged nearly 74 years. He was a lifelong Friend. His remains were interred near those of his wife at Toledo, Kansas.

NICHOLS.—At Easton, Aroostook County, Maine, Second month 28th, 1903, Mary Jane Nichols, aged 70 years. With her husband, Joseph B. Nichols, she removed to the new settlement of Friends more than 40 years ago. Their home was ever a center of religious work where many have given themselves to Jesus.

SMILEY.—At his winter home, Redlands, Cal., First month 25th, 1903, Alfred H. Smiley, in his 75th year. He was a native of Maine; later a graduate and tutor at Haverford College; spent some years in Oskaloosa, Iowa; then taught in Friends' School, Providence, R. I., and latterly was proprietor of a great summer hotel at Minnewaska, N. Y.

TERHUNE.—Died, at her home in Clintondale, N. Y., Second month 25th, 1903, Sylvia Terhune, wife of Frank Terhune, and daughter of Oscar and Patience Dingee, aged 39 years. She was converted at an early age, and was a lifelong member of the Friends' Meeting at Clintondale.

WILLETS.—At her residence, 13 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York, Second month 9th, 1903, Lydia, widow of Robert R. Willets, in her 95th year, for many years a faithful elder of New York Monthly Meeting.

MY MOTHER'S GOOD OLD TIMES.

On my head the frost is gath'ring with the limning of the years;
On my features are the records of a thousand hopes and fears;
In my check-book there is written that which forty years ago
Would have made my being tingle with a wild, exultant glow;
But alas! within my spirit there's an ever-present ache
For the old corn-beef and cabbage that my mother used to make.

I remember when I wander o'er the hills
in boyish glee;
And the dinner horn's loud echo brought no boding thoughts to me;
I was young and I was happy; and my stomach ne'er went back
On a single proposition that my teeth would dare attack!
Never thought I of dyspepsia as I charged the jelly-cake
And the old corn-beef and cabbage that my mother used to make.

All the years I've sought the dollar, struggled upward slow and sure,
With my pocket growing wealthy and my stomach growing poor;
Every year I find my table more with luxuries replete;
Every year I find that fewer are the things that I can eat!
Till the pathway back to childhood oftentimes I yearn to take To the old corn-beef and cabbage that my mother used to make.

Observe the true motive for Christian work. The Lord did not say to Peter.
Lovest thou the work? or, Lovest thou My lambs; but, Lovest thou Me? for the most potent principle in the Christian heart is love to Christ.—William

COLLEGE PROFESSORS

Talk of Foods.

The New York papers recently contained a long account of the so-called discovery of a celebrated professor in one of the leading universities. The "discovery" related to a new and successful way of treating wheat and barley to prepare the starchy part by dry baking, so it would be made more digestible and nutritious. Thereupon Prof. Livingstone commenting on the discovery of the other professor says, "A discoverer who was a business man first and a scientist afterward found that such foods could be made more digestible when cooked with dry heat instead of by boiling in water, and has already placed on the market the food which he discovered prior to Dr. _____." This refers to Grape-Nuts, the most scientifically made food known. Grape-Nuts can be easily digested by babies or anyone with a weak stomach and the food contains the most powerful rebuilding element known, particularly as relates to the rebuilding of the brain and nerve centers. It is a delicious food, requiring no cooking, but ready for instant service just as it comes from the package. A recipe book free in each package describes many delicious dishes made from Grape-Nuts.

THE TEAMSTER.

Ah, who'd go teaming wood on such a morning,
Go swinging on the bob-sleighs,
through the frost,
Take any trail, before God's day is dawning,
With twenty miles of prairie to be crossed?
The colts are huddled sadly round the building,
The bitter wind creeps wailing down
the plain,
No streak of dawn the starless east is gilding,
And I must rise and take the trail
again.

O bride of mine, rest calm—the miles are lonely;
O bairn of mine, sleep sweet—the day is long,
The plains are wide and empty, and I,
only,
Go forth at night to travel with a song.
Go forth alone to journey in the greatness
God spread, long since—a russet, tide-less sea,
All shrouded now beneath the stars' se-dateness,
The battle-ground of life for you and me.

Yet hark, the runners down the trail are ringing,
And see the team is getting into stride,
And slow, and far, the mighty dawn comes singing,
Comes singing to the conquest of his bride,
Comes singing to the prairie's shy unfolding,
Treads softly, spreading roses on the snow,
Stays never, brooks no secret or withholding,
Till I, too, pay him homage as I go.

And I, too, sing the song of all creation,
A brave sky and a glad wind blowing by,
A clear trail and an hour for meditation,
A long day and the joy to make it fly,
A hard task and the muscle to achieve it.
A fierce noon and a well-contented gloom,
A good strife and no great regret to leave it,
A still night—and the far red lights of home.

—H. H. Bashford.

SCIENCE IN SHOVELS.

A recent issue of "Engineering" gives some interesting data of steps taken by the Bethlehem Steel Co. to reduce the cost of common labor employed in shoveling coal, ore, etc., and several highly-trained specialists were engaged to study the problem. It was found that the time taken to insert a shovel into a pile was shorter if it were shoved into the top instead of the bottom of a pile. It also varied with the material, taking longer for coke than for sand, and, of course, with the man also, a powerful laborer taking twenty-two pounds at each shov-elful, while the average was not more than twelve to fourteen pounds. As a result of this investigation, new sets of shovels, specially adapted to different kinds of work, were used, and instead of sending a man out in the morning with a shovel and allowing him to carry it all over the premises and use it indiscriminately on coke or ore, shovels of different sizes and shapes were used for different materials. The result of the study of this problem has been that the staff of common laborers, which averages 400 or 500, at wages of $1.15 per day, has been cut down, and the work is now done by eighty-five men, who are paid at the rate of $1.85 per day.—Exchange.

The impression of God is kept up by experience, not by logic. And hence when the experimental religion of a man, of a community, or of a nation, wanes, religion wanes—their idea of God grows indistinct, and that man, community or nation becomes infidel.—Henry Drummond.

MEETING AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

May 5th to 8th, 1903.

On account of the above occasion, the Southern Railway will sell tickets for the round trip, limited ten days, for one fare.

From the Trunk Line Territory the rates will be based on the regular fares to Washington or Trunk Line Western termini, added to one first-class fare therefrom, limited to continuous passage, and will be sold May 1st, 2d and 3d, with final limit ten days from date of sale. By deposit of ticket by original purchaser, and payment of 50 cents, to Joint Agent, New Orleans, not later than May 12th, extension of final limit may be obtained to enable the purchaser to reach the original starting-point not later than May 30th, 1903.

The Southern Railway operates three trains daily from New York and Philadelphia, carrying Pullman Sleeping, Dining and Observation cars.

By the request of members of the American Medical Association, in the East, on Saturday, May 2, special service has been arranged to leave New York at 4.25 p.m.; Philadelphia at 6.55 p.m., via Washington, Atlanta and Montgomery. Trains composed exclusively of Pullman Dining, Drawing and Stateroom, Sleeping, Library and Observation cars. Those desiring Pullman reservation should send in their names as soon as possible. Time, New York to New Orleans, 39 hours.

For further information call on or write Charles L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A CHARMING TRIP

is in reserve for those who contemplate visiting the Pacific Coast during the spring. On May 2d, and from May 11th to 17th, inclusive, special excursion tickets will be sold to Los Angeles and San Francisco and return, via the Southern Railway, at extremely low rates. These tickets permit of stop-overs, and are good to return until July 15th, 1903.

Round-trip rate from Philadelphia will be $66.75, going and returning same route; going one route and returning another, $68.25. Corresponding low rates from other points.

In addition to the Standard Pullman sleeping cars, operated daily, the Southern Railway operates tri-weekly, high-class, personally-conducted excursion sleepers from Washington to Los Angeles and San Francisco without change, via Atlanta, New Orleans and El Paso, in which the berth rate is only $7.00 from Washington to the above points. These cars leave Washington at 8.45 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Charles L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., will furnish all information.

REDUCED RATES TO NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA.

Account Meeting National Manufacturers' Association, April 15th to 17th, 1903, via Southern Railway.

On April 11th, 12th and 13th, special excursion tickets to New Orleans and return will be sold via the Southern Railway at greatly reduced rates. Tickets will be good to return until April 19th, but by depositing ticket with Joint Agent at New Orleans on or before April 19th, and payment of a fee of fifty cents, final limit can be extended until April 30th, 1903. The round-trip rate from Philadelphia will be $33.50. Corresponding low rates from other points.

The Southern Railway operates three through trains daily, with Pullman drawing-room sleeping-cars from New York, Philadelphia and Washington to New Orleans without change. Dining car service on all through trains.

Charles L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, will take pleasure in furnishing all information.

SUPERIOR MERIT.

Remarkable Curative Properties of a Remedy for Indigestion and Stomach Weakness.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, a preparation for the cure of dyspepsia and the various forms of indigestion and stomach trouble, owes its great success as a cure for these troubles to the fact that it is prepared for disease and weakness of the stomach and digestive organs only, and is not recommended or advised for any other disease.

It is not a cure-all, but for any other stomach trouble it is undoubtedly the safest, most sensible remedy that can be advised with the prospect of a permanent cure. It is prepared in tablet form, pleasant to taste, composed of vegetable and fruit essences, pure pepsin and Golden Seal, every one of which act effectively in digesting the food eaten, thereby resting and invigorating the weak stomach; rest is nature's cure for any disease, but you cannot rest the stomach unless you put into it something that will do its work or assist in the digestion of food.

That is exactly what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do, one grain of the digestive principle contained in them will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or similar wholesome foods; they will digest the food whether the stomach is in working order or not, thereby nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time, and rest and nourishment are nature's cure for any weakness.

In persons run down in flesh and appetite these tablets build up the strength and increase flesh, because they digest flesh-forming food which the weak stomach cannot do; they increase the flow of gastric juice and prevent fermentation, acidity and sour watery risings.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found at all drug stores at 50 cents per package.

AN UGLIER MAN THAN LINCOLN.

A very characteristic anecdote of President Lincoln was told by the late William Hastings, who took great pleasure in telling it, in spite of the fact that it was rather unflattering to himself. "Back in the sixties," the minister used to tell, "when I was chaplain in the army, I was on a train one day when a tall and angular stranger arose from his seat, came over to where I sat and handed me an old-fashioned pocket knife. Much astonished, I asked what he meant. The tall man, who, I soon learned, was President Lincoln, said: 'Keep it; you are entitled to it. Years ago that knife was presented to me with the request that if I ever saw an uglier man than myself I was to give it to him.'—"Youth."

Out in Indiana, a good many years ago, a certain old lady, summoned as a witness, came into court wearing a large poke bonnet, such as was then affected by rural folks. Her answers to the questions put to her being rather indistinct, the court requested her to speak louder, though without much success.

"The court cannot hear a word you say, my good woman," said the judge. "Please to take off that huge bonnet of yours."

"Sir," she said, composedly, and distinctly enough this time, "the court has a perfect right to bid a gentleman take off his hat, but it has no right to make a lady remove her bonnet."

"Madam," replied the judge, "you seem so well acquainted with the law that I think you had better come up and take a seat with us on the bench."

"I thank your honor kindly," she responded, dropping a low curtsy to the court, "but there are old women enough there already."—"Law Notes."

O despair! O misery! To have lived only for self; to have played perhaps a great role, attained a high position, gained fortune and fame, and after all that to discover that one's life has been wasted and that the all-essential has been forgotten!—Eugene Bersier.

Whatever is retrieved of the past is won back only through continued effort, and through a worthiness which is proved to the world. Each step marks a struggle, but a struggle for which the grace of God gives strength and courage.

THE HOPE GOD GIVETH.

These verses, which have been many years in the possession of a Philadelphia family, are not included in any of the published collections of Whittier's poems.

*Still on the lips of all we question,
The finger of God's silence lies;
Shall the lost hands in ours be folded?
Will the shut eyelids ever rise?*

*O friends! No proof beyond this yearning,
This outreach of our souls we need.
God will not mock the hope He giveth;
No love He prompts shall vainly plead.*

*Then let us stretch our hands in darkness,
And call our loved ones o'er and o'er;
Some time their arms shall close about us
And the old voices speak once more.*

Andrew Carnegie has asked to be allowed to pay for the filtering plant for Cornell University. Good water will doubtless be appreciated as much as good books.

President Roosevelt will begin his Western trip about Fourth month 1st, and will spend nearly two months in visiting principal points and in speech-making. He will camp for a short time in the Yellowstone Park.

The Venezuelan Government is promptly meeting the terms of its recent agreements. One day last week it paid to the German Minister the first installment, about $70,000, of the $340,000 pledged to Germany in satisfaction of that country's claims.

Late reports from London state that ample provision will be made for a strong representation of Irish and British interests at the St. Louis Exposition. The Reichstag has already made an appropriation amounting to $750,000 to further preparation for Germany's exhibit.

A dispatch from Melbourne, Australia, says a preliminary return of the wheat harvest just reaped illustrates the severity of the drought in that country. Victoria's total yield was 2,386,000 bushels, averaging 1.26 over the area sown, the lowest yield in twenty-eight years.

Troubles over taxes are almost causing civil war in Portugal. According to a dispatch to El Liberal, from Coimbra, the tax collectors have fled from the city, and a veritable revolution exists. El Liberal adds that a state of siege was proclaimed at Coimbra four days ago and the disturbances continue.

During the past week the Mississippi River broke a number of levees in Arkansas, and much damage was done to life and property. Large districts were inundated, and it will be several days before the loss can be estimated. Disaster also visited the Great Basin, the worst blizzard of the winter having visited that district, causing heavy loss to stockmen.

Postmaster General of Great Britain, Austen Chamberlain, stated recently that his government had long desired to conclude a parcel post agreement with the United States, but had been unable to obtain American assent. The United States, however, has proposed reopening the negotiations, and communications on the subject are now being exchanged.

The coal miners of the second bituminous district in Pennsylvania have at last gained a concession from the operators for which they have been fighting for the last five years, namely, an eight-hour day.

South Africa is proving an important commercial field now that conditions in that part of the world are returning to a normal state. Figures just received by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics show that the total importations into Natal and Cape Colony, in 1902, were $245,000,000, in round terms, against $170,000,000 in 1901. This increase is not merely a recovery from the depression of the war period, but is an actual and large gain over conditions which existed prior to that time.

The Senate ratified the Panama Canal Treaty almost unanimously without amendments. According to estimates the completion of the canal will cost the United States $140,000,000. The distance from ocean to ocean is forty-six miles. The time of passage through the canal will be twelve hours, while the average time of steamers passing between New York and San Francisco will be 35.5 days less than that required to go by way of Cape Horn. Ships from the Orient to Europe will save 4,000 miles.

The awards of the Coal Commission have been made and are to continue in effect for three years. The miners are to receive an increase of wages in most instances of 10 per cent., and a reduction of hours from 10 to 8 and 9 according to class of workers. A sliding scale enables the miners to increase wages according to the market price of coal. No discrimination is to be made between union and non-union men by either the operators or the labor organization, and disagreements are to be referred to a Board of Conciliation. Formal recognition of the union as such was denied.

The first season of the Pocono Pines Assembly, as announced for the season of 1903, will be particularly attractive. A camp conference and the federal convention of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip will be held Seventh month 8th to 12th, and a conference on Bible Study and Sabbath School Work will be held from the 14th to the 26th. A course of summer schools will be conducted from Seventh month 27th to Eighth month 15th, with a popular educational and entertainment program. Martin Brumbaugh, of the University of Pennsylvania, is Chancellor, and among other instructors will be President Isaac Sharpless, of Haverford College, and Joseph Elkinton. Prof. J. E. Woodland will give an illustrated lecture on "Absolute Zero and Wireless Telegraphy."

HARRIET GREEN AT "THE BLESSED GOAL."

OUR beloved Friend and faithful servant of God, Harriet Green, has suddenly been called to the heavenly life. After a year of almost uninterrupted labor which must have drawn heavily upon her physical energies she found herself ill with a serious attack of appendicitis, which called for an immediate operation. She was at the time in North Carolina, and the operation was performed at Salisbury. She was unable to recover, and passed away the day following, the 17th inst. The funeral was held on Sixth-day, at Guilford College. This word will come as a sad shock to every reader of this paper, and no one of us can yet realize that her earthly work is over, and that her lips are sealed in silence.

The debt which American Friends owe to her is a very great one, and no word which we can now speak will tell the whole truth. She had labored extensively in every yearly meeting on this continent. She had seen every phase of life which it was possible to see among Friends in this country, and with a remarkable adaptability she made herself at home even in the most novel situations, and always found a way into the hearts of her hearers. Nobody ever heard her speak many minutes without realizing that she believed with all her soul in the gospel which she was preaching. She spoke as one who knew. First and foremost she dwelt on the simple way of redemption. Over and over she told the story of the cross, but always with a freshness in the telling. She confused nobody in a maze of argument, but with apt illustration, plain, direct words, and an appealing warmth and fervor, she made the work of Christ seem real, and the duty of her hearer grew clear and strong within him. Above everything else, she was a preacher of salvation. She was most at home in the searching work which brings souls to a decision. She was equally gifted in quiet personal work, and with rare insight she spoke to the condition of individuals as few Friends in our time have ever done. The fruits of her public ministry will never be known in this world, but probably the results of her personal words and work were even greater. She brightened homes wherever she went; she cheered those who were battling with difficulties; she found a point of interest with the young persons in the families which she visited, and she went on her way leaving every place better than it was when she came into it. She made the most of what she found, and never broke the bruised reed or quenched the flickering wick. There was always something good in a meeting for her, and, without dwelling too much on the dark side, she went straight to work to bring all things up to better.

She knew what forces were at work in the meetings throughout the country. She saw the problems with a sure vision. But she did not consider it her mission to solve problems. She let them alone. Her mission was to bring the gospel home to men and let it work. Others might take up the tasks of settling the intellectual questions of the time, she was under holy orders to show that Christ saves from sin just as He always has. But she had no narrow faith, no fear of light, no harsh word for those who saw beyond what she saw, or those who saw less than she.

A large faith in human-kind she cherished,
And in God's love for all.

In this country there is only one feeling about her life and her work. She was a genuine Christian woman, and she has left a trail of light wherever she has gone.

The dear Lord's best interpreters
Are humble human souls;
The gospel of a life like hers
Is more than books or scrolls.

From scheme and creed the light goes out,
The saintly fact survives;
The blessed Master none can doubt,
Revealed in holy lives.

THE RECORD OF LIFE AND DEATH.

AGAIN this year the records tell us that death has taken from our membership more than life has contributed. The balance is always on the wrong side. Our meetings report* 817 births and 929 deaths, which would give a loss of 112, if only our vital statistics were considered. There is something radically wrong about that situation. It is a well-known fact that the death rate among Friends is low. Our longevity is considerably beyond the average, and it is doubtful whether it can ever be lengthened to any great extent. We must expect to lose each year nearly a thousand members from our ranks by the operation of a power entirely beyond our control. But our birth-rate could and certainly should, be increased. President Roosevelt has been speaking plainly lately of what he calls "race suicide"—the refusal of our best families to do their share in the propagation of the race. It is a fact that, as a rule, those parents who are least able to bring up a large family of children are the ones who have them. The well-to-do and the morally sound fathers and mothers have their "only child," or their two or three, while the poor day laborer and the saloon patron often have a house full. Friends' homes are surely as safe places for the training and development of children as this world offers, and, while our members are not rich, they are not exactly poor. They are blessed with enough, and they could well add a morally and religiously-trained element to our social and civic life, a thing devoutly to be wished.

* We have no vital statistics from Philadelphia, Baltimore or North Carolina Yearly Meetings.

Now, how does the record stand? New England Yearly Meeting, with a membership of 4,532, largely located in country communities, added to the world last year 29 children to offset a death loss of 88! New York did worse still. In that yearly meeting only 17 children were born in a membership of 3,606, while there was a loss by death of 71. We have no figures to prove it, but undoubtedly the situation in Philadelphia is not better, probably worse.

It is slightly better in Ohio and Wilmington, though far from satisfactory. The figures are respectively, births 50 and 45, deaths 86 and 78. As we move westward the relative proportion of deaths to births changes. Indiana shows 39 more deaths than births; Western has 2 more births than deaths; and all the other Western yearly meetings show a good balance of births over deaths. Kansas has the banner. In that yearly meeting there were 142 births to 88 deaths; in Iowa 138 to 100; in California 30 to 20 and in Oregon 14 to 8.

The whole subject is a difficult and delicate one to deal with, and there is nothing perhaps to be accomplished by editorial writing. The facts and figures are startling and they should make an impression. No one may pronounce with safety what is another's duty, but "this holy task of giving life in turn," which God trusts to us, the power "to repeat the miracle of life," is one of the human being's most sacred responsibilities and this torch of life entrusted to him must not lightly be allowed to extinguish itself in his own death.

For THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SOME THOUGHTS ON SPIRITUAL WORSHIP.

John 4: 4-26.

BY ALICE A. MENDENHALL.

In the conversation at the well the woman of Samaria becomes aware that she is in the presence of a prophet. She seizes it as the opportunity of a lifetime to ask a question of a prophet, with the hope of receiving a prophet's answer. Our fathers worshiped in this mountain, and ye say that Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship. Tell me truly, if thou be a prophet; where ought men to worship?

The stranger's words in reply are words becoming a true prophet: "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh when neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem shall ye worship the Father. Ye worship that which ye know not; we worship that which we know; for salvation is from the Jews. But the hour cometh and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth; for such doth the Father seek to be His worshipers. God is spirit; and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and in truth."

The woman of Samaria is not the only person who has earnestly asked this question. Possibly it presents itself to all of us at some time in our lives. It is a question yet where men should worship. Some tell me that this Church is best; others say, "No, that is the best; it has the best creed, the best doctrine, the best methods of work, the most impressive ceremonies." The prophet still answers, "Believe me, neither here nor there." "Believe me, neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem shall men worship the Father." True worship is not a matter of time, of place, or of outward conditions. It is not a matter of creed or of doctrinal teaching; not a matter of form and ceremony, nor of the absence of form and ceremony. It is not a question of liturgy nor of the lack of liturgy. It is not a form of speech, nor is it, necessarily, a form of silence.

After our Saviour has given this negative answer to the Samaritan woman by telling her that worship is not to be controlled by conditions of time, place and formal agents, He then answers her question in an affirmative way by saying, "The true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and in truth." In this affirmative statement I find emphasized two elements. The first one is, the worship of the Father; the second is, worship in spirit and in truth.

Her question is, "Where ought men to worship?" His answer is, "Men ought to worship the Father." The question of place He ignores because it is unimportant. The question of "whom" He emphasizes because it is of vital importance. It is rather difficult for us to-day to appreciate the significance of this part of the Saviour's reply. We are accustomed to thinking of God as our Father. It is not a new idea to us. But it was comparatively new to men when Christ was on the earth among them. The helpful conception of the Fatherhood of God had not yet gained a place in the lives of men. In the unfolding of spiritual things it seems that this truth was, in the main, left for Jesus Christ to reveal. Hebrews of Old Testament times had called Him the Lord God, the God of heaven and earth, the Lord of hosts, the Almighty, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. To inspired singers of Israel He was a Shield, a Buckler, a Rock, a Mighty Fortress, one whose name is excellent in all the earth. Spiritual prophets thought of Him as the Holy One of Israel, the Mighty One of Jacob, King of kings, Lord of lords, God of gods, Lord God Most High, the Exalted One. But inspired singers and spiritual prophets had not yet known Him as Father. In nearly all the conceptions which men entertained of God in Old Testament times He is far removed from them to a position of distant superiority. It was a great advance in spirituality to think of Him as a Shepherd who could make His flock to lie down in green pastures, who could lead them beside the still waters. But it seems left for Jesus Christ to bring home to the hearts of men the truth that God sustains toward humanity the tender, helpful relationship of the father to his child.

The earthly life of Jesus Christ throughout was an exaltation of the Father. In word, in deed, in silent influence, He was constantly directing men to God the Father. Love your enemies, pray for them that persecute you, that, ye may be sons of your Father. Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father is perfect. But thou, when thou prayest, . . . pray to thy Father. For your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him. After this manner therefore pray ye, Our Father who art in heaven. I consider it then of no slight consequence that Jesus Christ answered the woman of Samaria, "Believe me, the true worshipers worship the Father."

But side by side with this thought, and of equal importance with it, stands this phrase, "In spirit and in truth." The word worship, we are told, in its Anglo-Saxon origin means "worthy shape." To worship the Father then to me means to be in a worthy shape in the Father's presence. Worship is an attitude of soul, a condition of mind. It is spirit service. It is thought service, which may or may not find vocal expression. If worship in spirit means attitude of soul, it must be, first of all, silent worship. And whether this silent worship find vocal expression is a matter of comparatively secondary importance. The important thing in our Saviour's conception of worship in spirit is that it is a matter of the heart. Interpreting His words in the light of His own life and teachings, I do not believe He regarded worship as some definite act of the soul different from all other acts—an act peculiar in itself, requiring some peculiar skill for its performance. He seems to have regarded worship in spirit as a state of soul rather than a single act or succession of acts—a condition of soul, the all-important characteristic of which is a sense of being in harmony with God and man.

But our Master admonishes us to worship in spirit and in truth. To worship in truth indicates to me integrity of purpose, honesty of heart. It is not so important that we reach the same conclusions in our meditations, but it is important that we be honest in the conclusions that we do reach. It is not necessary that we think exactly alike. We may not interpret spiritual truths in the same way. We are not required to see eye to eye. But it is necessary that we be honest in our thinking, sincere in our interpretation of spiritual truth, candid in our vision, and charitable in our judgments. It is important that we be worshipers in truth.

Worshiping the Father in spirit and in truth is an attitude of soul which is not to be restricted by time and place conditions. Yet surely these simple fundamental principles of our Saviour ought to have some practical bearing on problems in connection with the regularly-appointed hours of worship which we as a Church recognize.

There is some danger of our wandering away from the spirit of true worship in our church services, in that there is a growing tendency to overestimate the importance of vocal service, and, possibly, to underestimate the importance of silent thought service. By this statement I do not mean to advocate that our services should be held in silence. Although true worship is, fundamentally, spirit or thought service, it does not necessarily follow that the depth of spirituality of an hour of worship is in proportion to the amount of silence during that hour. True spirit worship may find such constant expression in words on the part of the few or the many that every moment of time is occupied by vocal service.

It is possible to entertain a mistaken idea of the place which a minister of the gospel holds in the meeting. It is his gift not to worship for the people, but to worship with them; and if so led by the spirit of truth to give direction to the thought service of the hour. It is usually the case that vocal expression of worship rests with a small number, possibly with one only. But let it not be forgotten that the sincere thought service on the part of all others is reckoned as true worship by our Father. The gift of oral ministry is bestowed on comparatively few, but the gift of true spiritual worship is for all.

The relation existing between silent worshipers and the one who may be called upon for vocal service is very close. The minister's ease and freedom in service depend to a great extent upon the thought atmosphere which surrounds individual worshipers. The sincerity of purpose, the reverence of spirit, the prayerful attitude of soul on the part of individual worshipers determine the atmosphere of the hour. And in proportion as this spirit atmosphere is truly worshipful will the minister feel inspiration and freedom for vocal service.

The relation existing between the minister and other worshipers is aptly illustrated by an incident which recently came under my notice. A little girl had never been taken to church until she was three or four years of age. The first time she was taken she sat quietly for a while enjoying the novelty of the situation. But after the minister had been speaking for a time she climbed up by her mother and whispered earnestly, "Mamma, is he talking to you? Why don't you answer? Who is it he's talking to, mamma? Why don't somebody answer him?" The child knew of no means of communicating thought except conversation. It was her first acquaintance with public speaking. The child's question, almost startling in its simplicity, indicates the real secret of a "favored" public ministry.

It is significant that the word sermon means literally "conversation." A sermon to be a spirit-inspired one must be a conversation between the speaker and the listeners. How little silent worshipers appreciate the share they have in a spiritual message! The one who is filled with a gospel truth does not consider himself talking to benches or speaking abstractly into space. If he is deserving of the mantle which the Church has placed upon him he is ever in public service speaking to the hearts of men and women. And unless there be an interchange of thought and feeling, unless it be true spirit conversation in which silent worshipers have an active part, the vocal service is little more than hollow mockery and empty sound. Silent worshipers are, perhaps, not so conscious of this communication of spirit between speaker and listener as is he who may be giving utterance to the message.

That the sermon is, rightfully, a conversation is coming to be recognized by our members more and more; and that, too, in the helpful way of considering that many of the little courtesies which make private social conversation easy and natural are due to public ministry. If people are scattered here and there over a large territory, and are too far removed from the one whose duty it may be to speak to them, communion of spirit, interchange of thought and feeling, are, to some extent, interfered with. If late-comers could appreciate the effect which their intrusion has on a meeting—even though they enter the room and take their places as quietly as is possible—they would put forth every effort to form the habit of punctuality. Responsiveness and manifest interest are essentials of social conversation. No general statement should be made too emphatic, but, as a rule, the responsive attitude of body is the natural one for silent worshipers during vocal service. Neither ejaculated "amens," nor vocalized expressions of praise, nor the approving nod of the head, are, in themselves, necessary to indicate the share which listeners have in the service. He who is spiritually discerned and of a sensitive organism needs few outward promptings. Perhaps the one thing which he appreciates most in the way of outward manifestation is the privilege of looking into the eyes of all before him. As eye meets eye, the window of the soul is opened, and spirit communes with spirit, and the Father who understands each interprets heart to heart.

Let it not be understood that this helpfulness on the part of listeners means merely their attitude of confidence in him as a speaker. The spirituality of the hour, if I understand Christ's teaching, depends upon the ability of all to forget human instrumentalities and center their undivided confidence in our Father as the source of every spiritual gift. Nothing hampers the humbly consecrated minister of the gospel in his work much more than the feeling that people are looking to him as the means of blessing. Our Father is the author of all blessing. To Him our hearts must be lifted. On Him must our dependence be placed. At every gathering together of the people at the house of God, let us all alike feel the responsibility of accepting the exalted position—which is ours truly—of worshipers of our Father.

There are among us to-day, perhaps, some erroneous ideas of what constitutes spiritual worship. It is easy to mistake the possible accompaniments of spirituality for spirituality itself, or to confuse the possible manifestations of it with the real thing. We sometimes take emotion or excitement or physical agitation to be spirituality. Some of us feel, perhaps, that spirituality must clothe itself in the exclamatory sentence, in the hortatory style, and must be accompanied by an extravagance of physical energy in the way of gestures and in the use of the voice. It is possible to be under the impression that a burdened sense of responsibility is a sign of spiritual depth. The prayer which becomes the agonizing cry is not necessarily the most spiritual one. A constant repetition of certain stereotyped expressions is not a necessary feature of spiritual power.

May we not consider that there are different types and different grades of spirituality, and that its manifestation or the way it expresses itself in different persons is determined largely by individual temperament? The same Spirit—but different manifestations of His Presence! Because one happens to be of a quiet disposition, and consequently appreciates the quieter manifestation, gives him no license to condemn his neighbor of different temperament who must, occasionally, give vent to an expression of joy. Nor must the enthusiastic, jubilant worshiper condemn the one by his side who says nothing but, perhaps, is "making melody to the Lord in his heart."

Again it is possible to regard certain possessions as contradictory to spirituality. We should not regard instructiveness and spirituality as being opposed to each other. We should guard against the error of associating piety with ignorance and of gauging depth of spirituality by the lack of intellectual attainments. Great intellectual ability is by no means a sign of spiritual depth, but let us believe, also, that it is by no means a sign of spiritual sluggishness. Let us gladly admit that growth in grace may keep pace with growth of intellect, and that intellectual pursuits kept in the right channel ought to deepen and to sweeten Christian character.

If we recognize the possibility of erroneous ideas concerning spiritual worship to-day, and if unnecessary features are sometimes emphasized, doubtless some one asks, What are the necessary qualities of true worship other than the two elements made prominent in our Saviour's words to the woman of Samaria—a question more easily asked than answered. And doubtless it were wisest to follow His example and leave the question as He left it. The depth of feeling, the tenderness of heart, the loyalty of purpose, the sincerity of life—indeed, all the things which we naturally associate with spiritual power—are included in our Lord's phrase, "In spirit and in truth."

Some of us are acquainted with the experience of the aged mother who had been to church, and, on returning home, told her children that they had such a good meeting that day. In reply to their many questions about the sermon, the text, the Scripture reading, and the singing, she had to confess that she did not remember. The children expressed astonishment that she should think they had a good meeting and not be able to tell anything about what was said. The mother made reply: "I don't understand it, but it's something like this," and, pointing to a piece of muslin on the grass in the yard, she continued, "You see that piece of muslin; I don't know how, but some way under the influence of rain and dew and sunshine that muslin becomes whiter and whiter. I don't understand it, but somehow under the influences of meeting to-day I felt my heart becoming mellow and mellow."

This is what it amounts to. To worship the Father in spirit and in truth can't be explained. The indescribable can't be described. Spiritual worship can't be subjected to accurate analysis. But, perhaps, like the mother whose heart became mellow and mellow, we know when we are in the atmosphere of spiritual uplift; perhaps, like she did, we can carry away the impression that the influence of the hour of worship is good. And if, when we are about the lawful duties of the week, we feel our hearts becoming more tender, our spirits more truly in harmony with the Divine will, and our lives in more sympathetic touch with mankind—is it not because we are worshipping the Father in spirit and in truth?

BY ELIZABETH C. WINN.

That this first illustrated book on medical missions published in America may be placed in all our missionary libraries and find its way into our homes and mission circles is the earnest hope of those who have read it and felt its power.

Reviews of "Opportunities in the Path of the Great Physician" may be found in various leading missionary periodicals.

The "Missionary Review of the World" says of it, "No other book covers the ground so well." Robert E. Speer wrote to the author, "We needed such a book, and I am glad you prepared it. Constant inquiries came to the office for information regarding our medical missionary work, and we can now just refer them to this volume."

Numerous illustrations, maps and charts add to its value. The first chapter gives comparisons between medical help here and that in heathen countries; those which follow tell of work in Korea, China, Siam and Laos, India, Persia, Syria, Turkey, Arabia, Africa; and "Where little is done"—Mexico, Central and South America, the Philippines and Alaska. The book is an incontrovertible argument for medical missions. In the first chapter is the following paragraph:

"A Christian Eskimo in Alaska, in reply to the question why his people received the gospel so readily, said: 'When these teachers first came they did not command our attention by what they preached, but when they gave us medicine and said this and that ailment would be cured, we looked to see if what they said was true. And because their medicines proved to do just what they said they would do, we learned to believe that what they preached was equally true. We learn now that the Saviour, Jesus, when on earth, not only preached, but healed. So I give my counsel that wherever missionaries set out to work among the heathen they should take the word of God in one hand and medicine in the other.'"

The chapter on Syria is of intense interest, as they all are. Among the noble mission band of physicians there is Dr. Mary Pierson Eddy. Describing the work at Ras Baalbek she wrote: "During this time (three weeks) I have performed over forty operations on the eye alone, and have seen about five hundred new patients. Yesterday I removed a tumor; the operation lasted one hour and forty-five minutes. How my staid professors in New York would stand aghast at the boldness with which I undertake operations! No aseptic surroundings, no clean hospital ward to put them in afterwards, but with God's blessing and the fresh country air and the utmost care and cleanliness during the operation, we obtain most excellent results." Of the robber clans who were her neighbors to the west of this place she wrote: "One's soul recoils from meeting such men of blood, whose records are those of violence and cruelty; but our safety in these parts depends entirely upon their good will, and I constantly say to my helpers, and to myself, 'These, too, must be won for Christ.' 'How can they believe on Him of whom they have not heard?' Yesterday a delegation came from a neighboring village, headed by two young men, dressed in Damascus silk and heavily armed. They came from a Moslem prince to ask me to go visit a patient in their village." Again, Dr. Eddy writes: "Yesterday a poor Bedouin woman came a three days' journey to see me. This woman had never heard that there was a Christ, and her deep interest in the tale of what He did for us was wonderful to watch. When she heard of His death she exclaimed: 'I will have blood sacrificed; the choicest of my flock is His!' She was much puzzled to hear that Christ had done it all and required nothing of her, and that the perfect sacrifice had been offered once for all. She replied: 'But I must show my love. I will sew a robe for the poorest of my tribe, and tell Him, Master, I do this for Thee, for Thou didst so much for me.'"

Medical missions of the world are before us in this book. May it be read, as it was written, with prayer, and so lead many to a deeper interest in work which follows so closely the steps of the Great Physician.

SECOND QUARTER.

LESSON I.

FOURTH MONTH 5, 1903.

PAUL'S FAREWELL TO EPHEBUS.

Acts 20: 28-38.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts 20: 35.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Third mo. 30.—Paul's farewell to Ephesus. Acts 20: 17-27.

Third-day, Third mo. 31.—Paul's farewell to Ephesus. Acts 20: 28-38.

Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 1.—Exhortation to elders. 1 Peter 5: 1-11.

Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 2.—Beware of deceivers. 2 John.

Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 3.—Established in Faith. Col. 2: 1-9.

Seventh-day, Fourth mo. 4.—Self-sacrifice. 2 Cor. 12: 10-19.

First-day, Fourth mo. 5.—Out of tribulation. Rev. 7: 9-17.

The present lesson contains part of one of the most touching passages in the book of Acts; indeed, in the New Testament. The whole passage should be read (Acts 20: 17-38). Paul, after the uproar in Ephesus (20: 1ff.) went to Macedonia confirming the church, then passed over into Greece, spending three months in the scenes of his former labors. He then took ship at Philippi, and, according to the custom of antiquity, crossed the upper part of the Ægean Sea, and then coasted along the western shore of Asia Minor until he reached Miletus, thirty-six miles from Ephesus. He evidently did not consider it safe to leave the port where the ship was lying, but wishing to see the influential members of that church where he had labored for three years, sent for them to come to him. Paul was on his way to Jerusalem, closing his third missionary journey. The time was about 57 A.D. Verses 17-27 are a brief review of Paul's life at Ephesus and are most valuable in giving an insight into his character and methods of work.

28. "Take heed." The responsibility of the church rests chiefly with you, therefore be watchful. "Unto yourselves." Most valuable advice to every one. Do right, be right, first yourself, then you will be fitted to watch over others. "The flock." The body of Christian believers. (Compare John 21: 9, R. V.) "In which the Holy Spirit hath made you overseers." Note that the Revised Version says "in" not "over." There are three important points: (1) The "overseers" are in the church, and are not to lord it over their brethren; (2) whatever may have been the exact office of the "overseer," or "bishop," it is, beyond all question, true that there were several in one church, and not one over several churches as it is now in churches where there is episcopal organization; (3) It is clear that the "elders" or "presbyters" and "overseers" or "bishops" were the same persons—the terms are used synonymously. Compare verses 17 and 28. Whether the church organization which calls for Bishops, Priests and Deacons is desirable or not, it does not have the sanction of Apostolic usage. "Purchased with his own blood." Matt. 20: 28; Rom. 3: 24; Eph. 1: 7; Heb. 9: 12.

29. "I know." He felt sure of what was to come. "Enter in." Foes from without.

30. "Of your own selves." Foes in their own household of faith. Compare 1 Tim. 1: 20; 2 Tim. 1: 15; 2: 17; 3: 8, 13; Rev. 2: 2. "Perverse." Truth-distorted, the most dangerous kind of error. "Draw away the disciples after them." Revised Version.

31. "Three years." A round number, not necessarily exactly three years. "Warn." Better "admonish." "With tears." Showing his intense earnestness and his desire for their spiritual welfare.

32. "I commend," etc. This beautiful and touching prayer needs little comment. "Word of his grace." The gracious words of promise and comfort in the gospel. "Build." A favorite metaphor in the New Testament.

33. Paul now in no boastful spirit recalls to their remembrance his manner of life among them. "I have sought you, not yours."

34. "These hands," etc. Compare Acts 18: 3; 1 Cor. 4: 12.

35. "I have shown you as to all things." Set them an example to be followed in spirit in whatever condition they were. "Weak." Here primarily those who need this world's goods, but probably meant to include all who are in need or who are weak physically or spiritually. "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus." It is most interesting to know that these beautiful words are not in the Gospels, where we should naturally expect to find them. There were many "sayings," "logia," of our Lord which were not recorded in the Gospels. Compare John 21: 25. The Revised Version brings out the emphasis better—"Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."

36-38. The original is even more graphic—"They kept kissing him," and embracing him as if they could not let him go. "That they should behold his face no more." See also verse 25. It seems almost certain that this is an instance where Paul was using his human judgment and was mistaken. Events in his subsequent history are hard to explain except by a later visit to Ephesus. Compare verses 22, 23. The simplicity and directness of the narrative seem to be those of an eye witness.

TOPIC FOR FOURTH MONTH FIFTH.

"WHAT THE PARABLE OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN TEACHES US."

Luke 10: 30-37.

Second-day, Third mo. 30.—Samaritans that got good. John 4: 39-42.

Third-day, Third mo. 31.—Jews and Samaritans. Luke 9: 51-55.

Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 1.—What we owe neighbors. Ex. 20: 12-17.

Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 2.—Practical love for neighbors.—Lev. 19: 13-18.

Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 3.—Helping our neighbor. Prov. 3: 27-29.

Seventh-day, Fourth mo. 4.—Love fulfilling the law. Rom. 13: 8-10.

The question of the lawyer was answered by another, so that the parleyer with words was made after all to reply to himself; only the point of view was shifted so that he must see the untenableness of his position. He was looking for a boundary, restricted and exclusive, so that he might be excused from being neighbor to any but a chosen and congenial few. Jesus made him acknowledge the acceptable neighborliness of the condemned Samaritan. It was a surface question that the inquisitor had retreated to. "What shall I do?" had shriveled to, "Whom need I love?" Christ made him realize that the vital question of needy humanity is, Whose love do I need?

The Church fathers allegorized this parable—as indeed all of them, almost—to the point of grotesqueness; yet we need not hesitate to say that it is filled with a deep significance. The journey of life is a perilous one, and, while some pass its snares and dangers in safety, others fall by the way. Shall the upright condemn the fallen and say that there is no need for any to fall where they themselves passed by unscathed? There is a great deal of suffering that might have been avoided, and sin is always culpable, but it does not become us to censure or to "pass by on the other side."

The priest and the Levite were intent on preserving a spotless exterior and keeping their engagements with punctuality; but they were likewise earning the judgment, "Inasmuch as ye did it not." If this unfortunate wayfarer was able to observe their approach, he might have expected much from these models of respectability. But disappointment need not beget despair; help may come from sources the most unexpected. The Samaritan, almost an outlaw, so that he might be glad to escape insult and harm for himself in his journey through an unfriendly country, moved by feelings of humanity, succored a stranger even to the point of caring for him when it seemed he might have shifted the burden to other shoulders. There is none of the lawyer's careful drawing of lines here. Penuriousness in loving is an anomaly.

A manufacturer in an eastern city told once of how his firm was saved from ruin in a time of great financial stringency by the voluntary deposit with him of the porter's savings. It wasn't a question with the manufacturer as to who was his equal, but as to the timeliness of the assistance. The will to help is the trait that recommends the Samaritan. We can but recall the sentence as to the publican, "I say unto you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other." The expression of the confidence of this workingman in his employer not only saved the business to the latter, but secured for himself continued opportunity for employment. Our every outlay of capital for the sake of others enriches no less him that gives than him that takes.

Once let a man get the notions that he is doing God a great honor by denying himself the delights and the profits of business, and is making a sacrifice in order to propagate the kingdom of heaven, that man's influence is gone forever.—Joseph Parker.

Correspondence.

High Point, N. C., March 2d, 1903.

To the Board of Home and Foreign Missions, New York Yearly Meeting of Friends.

Dear Friends: The month of February has just closed, and we are about to enter upon our spring term. Our total enrollment for the month of February is 173—boys, 83; girls, 90. Forty-six of these were boarders—boys, 26; girls, 20. The enrollment for February was small because of smallpox, which was prevalent in some quarters of the town.

The industrial side of the school is keeping pace with the literary side at present, and we are much encouraged at the prospect. Since our last report John Isley, a graduate of last year's class, has charge of the bricklaying class. Isley's work in bricklaying is very satisfactory. He has a class of twelve boys under his instruction. This class receives instruction each day from one to four o'clock p.m. By spring they will be able to do any ordinary brick work. Mr. Green's class in carpentry is doing fairly good work. There are three boys in the cooking school. Other boys have applied, but we have not been able to accommodate them. The boys seem especially anxious for cooking because of the inducement some of them have held out to them. One boy says he is promised $35 per month next summer if he can fill the place, and he is trying hard to prepare himself. The number of students taking some trade is as follows:

Bricklaying, 12; carpentry, 8; boys in cooking, 3; total number of boys, 23; girls in cooking, 13; girls in dressmaking, 7; total number of girls, 20; total number of persons learning some definite trade, 43.

I hope we shall have no occasion to do any less along this line than we are doing at present, and if we can continue as we are going now we may have occasion in the future to be proud of our effort.

Three of our students, two of whom are graduates, have been teaching in the public school of Guilford County and Alamanance County during the winter. I have made investigation, and have received very satisfactory reports concerning their work. One of these young men, Benjamin Foust, has just closed a four months' school at his own home. On the 28th of February, upon invitation, I visited Benjamin Foust, being the occasion of his school closing. I found his people grateful to High Point for having trained one of their own young men who could come back to them and render them such service as he had given the four months he had been in their midst. They seem to have nothing but praise for him.

At present I am directing the farm work in person, and shall do so unless you feel that you can again shoulder the responsibility of $15 or $20 per month for a man as foreman. I am sure we are going to need another horse or mule in order that our work may be carried on successfully. I hesitate to say anything to you about these needs, but the industrial side of the school is expensive, and I am sure that we are doing as much with $50 as some schools are doing with four times that amount.

Mrs. Griffin wants $25 for the cooking school. This amount is necessary to put in articles such as are needed to teach the students how to cook. Thus far she has been supplied from such things as we have had in our store-room, but she needs something more now. Besides articles of food she needs food charts and such other articles as are necessary for demonstration purposes.

With grateful acknowledgment for all that has been done, we beg to assure you that we are trying to do the best we can, with what has been placed at our disposal. I am,

Very sincerely yours,

A. J. GRIFFIN.

God does not save men as a watchmaker who repairs and sets a watch, but as a king who recalls his servants to their duty. The invitation is a guarantee of the power to accept it.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

"The American Friend is a continual source of inspiration to me, and I wish it were in the hands of every young Friend."

Elma Fulghum, Chicago, Ill.

"The editorials alone in The American Friend are worth the price of the paper."

Eliza H. Cary, Wichita, Kans.

Edwin Loft is now holding meetings at Cumming, Iowa.

M. C. Pearson has returned to his home, Knightstown, Ind., after a few weeks' evangelistic work in Ohio.

Robert E. Pretlow has recently spent two weeks in Indiana, and is now again at his work in Wilmington, O.

Alice A. Mendenhall, who has an article in our issue this week, is located at Newberg, Ore., during the present year.

Allen Jay, Levi Cox and Howard Watkins attended Spice-land Quarterly Meeting, Ind., on the 13th, 14th and 15th inst.

P. W. Raidabaugh was in Philadelphia last week to attend the stockholders' meeting of The American Friend Publishing Company, of which he is a director.

Allen Jay, Anna B. Thomas and Sarah M. Scull attended the funeral of Harriet Green, an account of which will be given next week. She was buried in the old New Garden Cemetery.

Leona Longstreth, a graduate of Friends' University last year, has resigned her position as a teacher in the High School at Douglas, Kansas, and has accepted the call to the Friends' Mission at Matamoros, Mexico.

Eastern Quarterly Meeting was held in Cincinnati, Ohio. Second month 27th and 28th, and Third month 1st. E. O. Ellis preached helpful sermons, and addressed the Christian Endeavor meeting First-day evening.

Cincinnati Monthly Meeting has raised money by free-will offerings with which to purchase a high-class stereopticon. An Easter festival will be given, to which the parents and friends of all the Bible School will be invited.

Edwin Loft and T. C. Teas held meetings at Hanley, Iowa, recently, and as a result the meeting at that place, which has been "laid down" for some time, was again "taken up." Brother Hayes, of Des Moines, will have a religious care of the meeting.

The annual debate between Friends' University and Cooper College, Kan., took place in Hunsell Hall at Friends' University the evening of the 13th instant. The university team championed the side in opposition to labor organization and won the debate.

Rebecca Morgan, who has been taking work in the Friends' University, Wichita, Kansas, was called to Cucamonga, Cal., by the death of her son's wife, and arrived at that place the 21st ult., after being detained by a snow and sandslide for almost sixty hours.

The W. C. T. U. held a contest at Ogden Particular Meeting, Cal., on Seventh-day evening, 14th inst., consisting of oratorical and musical exercises, which was participated in by eleven contestants. All did their part well and to the satisfaction of a large congregation.

On First-day evening, Third month 15th, the Christian Endeavor Societies of Beach Grove and Ogden, Cal., held union services at Ogden Meeting House. A large audience convened. Much interest was manifested, and a great many responded in testimony and prayer.

A very interesting series of meetings has just been held by Friends in Traverse City, Mich. It followed a union revival effort in which eight different denominations, including Friends, took part. The union services were led by Edward Francis Smiley, an evangelist. From the two efforts the Friends will receive some twenty-five new members. The Friends' meetings were in charge of Henry McKinley, the local minister, and John Danks, an evangelist from the Pacific Coast.

Anna Gordon, vice-president of the National W. C. T. U., and Hattie Brand, State Secretary of the work in Indiana, attended East Main Street Meeting, Richmond, Ind., First-day morning, 15th inst. Their presence was an inspiration and their words found ready hearers.

Three young men were received into membership with Friends in Cincinnati on the 15th inst. At the meeting Wm. H. Taylor preached an instructive sermon to young men. The house was well filled, there being several present who were attending Friends' meeting for the first time.

Friends and their neighbors in High Point, N. C., have raised money and purchased a desirable site for a new Friends' meeting house on the main street of the city and in a central locality both for Friends and the town's people. They hope to get a suitable building ready for use by fall.

A very successful meeting was held at Pleasant Valley, Kansas, last month by M. L. Swafford and others, resulting in a number of conversions and renewals. Six have joined Friends, and the meeting was very much strengthened. The severe cold weather caused the meetings to close.

On the evening of Second month 13th the annual Inter-collegiate Debate between Earlham and Butler College occurred at Earlham. The unanimous decision of the judges was given in favor of the Earlham team, making the sixth successive victory for Earlham in Inter-collegiate debating in Indiana.

Friends who have settled at Paonia, Col., have recently started a meeting, which is growing in numbers and interest. Several families have moved in from Iowa, and others are looking that way, so that a flourishing meeting is a future possibility. Already there is a missionary society with thirty members.

On the 27th ult. Elwood O. Ellis, of Richmond, Ind., clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting, lectured in the Friends' Meeting House, Cincinnati, on "Palestine." The room was beautifully decorated for the occasion with flags of all nations. The violin solos rendered by Jessie M. Jay were a feature of the exercises.

Greensboro Friends, North Carolina, have purchased the lot joining their meeting house, which gives them possession of a large corner lot, on which are located their brick meeting house and a two-story residence. These buildings are to be re-arranged and adapted to better accommodate the meeting and the minister's family.

New York Yearly Meeting has done a noble work in North Carolina for the education of the colored people, and still the work goes on, though the committee will feel sorely the loss of Robert I. Murray. We print this week under Correspondence the last report of the principal of the school to the yearly meeting's committee.

Charles Goddard and family, of Durham, Maine, have moved to Allen's Neck, Mass., where he will engage in gospel work within the limits of Dartmouth Monthly Meeting. His daughter, Nellie Goddard, who is a faithful Christian worker, has been staying at Smith's Neck the past winter, where her labors have been much blessed by the Master.

Rose Hill Quarterly Meeting was held at Rose Hill, Kansas, the 6th, 7th and 8th inst. It was attended by the Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic and Pastoral Work, Josiah Butler, and Anna Ray, of China Monthly Meeting, Maine. Their presence was appreciated. Their sermons were timely, instructive and edifying.

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting was held at New London, Ind., the 14th and 15th inst. Richard Haworth was present in the interest of the Christian Endeavor work, and Mercer Brown, of Spiceland, Ind., in the interest of the temperance work. Brother Brown gave a very interesting and instructive address on Seventh-day evening. Brother Haworth addressed a meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society on Sabbath afternoon. The different sessions of the quarterly meeting were times of blessing.

John Danks, having visited in gospel service Friends in Maple City, Manton and Traverse City, has now begun an evangelistic work in Onaway, Presque Isle County, Mich. This is a small lumber town in the very northern portion of the lower peninsula, a rough, wicked place; but Friends have a meeting there, and may win the place for Christ. Prayers are asked for the work.

Friends' Meeting at Muncie, Ind., enjoyed a spiritual uplift as a result of a series of meetings which closed on the 5th inst., under the clear, practical and powerful preaching of Harry R. Keates, of Glen's Falls, N. Y., assisted by the pastor, Charles E. Hiatt. There were several conversions, and many gave testimony to having received definite blessing. Several have united with the church and others will unite.

Stella Quarterly Meeting occurred at Cherokee, Okla., the 6th, 7th and 8th inst. It was a time of real spiritual uplift, twenty-five or thirty having taken steps for personal consecration and renewal. The preaching was attended with special power. On Seventh-day Morris Lemson, from Luna, spoke on "Christ, the Son and Sent of God." On First-day Warren J. Elder gave a strong evangelistic appeal.

A substantial and convenient home for the local minister is being constructed by the meeting at Traverse City, Mich. It is situated on the lot adjoining the meeting house, on a very pleasant corner in the residence portion of the city. Enough money has been given in the form of promissory notes to insure success. No donations are asked, but any free-will offering would be thankfully received. The home will remain the property of the meeting.

Compared with membership, THE AMERICAN FRIEND has proportionately a larger circulation in California than in any other yearly meeting, there being a regular subscriber for every five members. Philadelphia has the second best showing, with one subscriber to every fourteen members. The greatest gain in subscribers during the year in the Central West was in the State of Ohio.

Joshua L. Baily has been much confined to his house this winter with a prolonged attack of la grippe. He has, however, been active in his wide interests in the work of the church and in philanthropic movements. He recently sent copies of Hilprecht's "Exploration in Bible Lands" to a number of the libraries of Friends' institutions. The poem in our issue this week is by his brother, Thomas Baily, who is in his 80th year.

Harriet Green, of England, and Seneca Stevens, of New York, preached in Deep River Quarterly Meeting at Springfield, N. C., on the 7th inst. In the meeting for business Harriet Green and companion, Sophie Fry, spoke of the importance of education and the need for such work in North Carolina. They spoke highly of the work at Guilford College, mentioning especially the religious spirit which pervades the institution.

The meeting house at Waynesville, Ohio, built many years ago, has recently been remodeled, and is very inviting in its new appointments. J. L. Spicer visited and preached in the meeting one day. J. L. Spicer spent the 7th ult. in his former home, New York City, and preached in Twentieth Street Meeting House in the morning. In the afternoon he addressed the New York Christian Police Association, of which he was one of the organizers. In the evening he took part in the Brooklyn Christian Endeavor meeting, and also in the exercises of the evening at the re-opening of the newly-arranged meeting house.

Liberty Monthly Meeting, Oklahoma, has built two new meeting houses this year. The first one finished was dedicated the 22d ult., on which occasion a large congregation attended, some having driven many miles in order to be present. Prof. J. Edwin Jay, of Friends' University, made the address, and spoke on peace in an evening meeting the same day. The meeting house has been nicely finished and furnished. It is called "Bethel." It stands in the midst of a fine country, and, being on a ridge, it overlooks the district for many miles in all directions. Susie Allen, an able minister, is located in the monthly meeting, and holds regular services at Bethel and Liberty, the meeting point where the other new meeting house, which is almost finished, is being erected.

Berkeley Quarterly Meeting met at Berkeley, Cal., 7th and 8th inst. Robert C. Root gave an able address on peace, which was appreciated by all. The three meetings in the quarter are in good, active, working order, as shown by the reports. San Francisco Meeting reported their need of a meeting house, and a committee was appointed to receive donations and assist in selecting a suitable place for the building. Following this discussion, Levi Gregory, who is a member of the Executive Committee of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting, presented the need of a Building Fund to assist in the work of extension and building of new meeting houses. The subject met with favor, and over $250.00 was subscribed. On Seventh-day evening the Christian Endeavorers held a missionary meeting, the topic being, "Our Responsibility Along the Lines of Mission Work." Anna S. Parish spoke on the preparation of the missionary candidate, telling of the call of Eva Pennington to China. W. J. Musgrover, a student volunteer from the University of California, told of the work of the Volunteer Movement. R. Esther Smith gave a very strong address on "It's Unfair." On Sabbath morning Joseph H. Peele, of North Carolina, who is sojourning at San Jose, preached very acceptably. Levi Gregory, the evangelistic superintendent, reports a prospect of a new meeting being started at Los Palos, Fresno County, where a few families of Friends have settled. Jessie Wilmore has a prospect of settling at Los Palos if a meeting is established. Lew B. Ong, of Cleveland, O., attended part of the quarterly meeting.

BORN.

FRAZER.—Second month 24th, 1903, to Oliver M. and Laura E. Frazer, a son, James Edwin Frazer, at Thorntown, Ind.

DIED.

BARRINGTON.—At his home in Washington, D. C., Third month 15th, 1903, William L. Barrington, in his 78th year. He was born in Dublin, Ireland, of Quaker ancestry, taking the degree of Master of Arts from Dublin University. As vice-consul at Dublin at the time of the Chicago fire, he was instrumental in collecting a large relief fund for the sufferers from that disaster. He was for many years a member of Baltimore, and later of Washington Monthly Meeting, though unable to attend meeting for a number of years on account of failing health.

BRATTAIN.—At her home in Indiana, Eleventh month 7th, 1902, Anna Brattain, the widow of Benjamin Brattain and daughter of Henry and Huldah Davis, in her 88th year. She was loved by all who knew her. She was a member of Salem Monthly Meeting. She rests in peace.

CORNELL.—At South Dartmouth, Smith's Neck, Mass., Third month 10th, 1903, Abbie H., wife of Philip A. Cornell, aged 65 years. She was a beloved member and elder of Dartmouth Monthly Meeting, and an active worker in every church interest.

MOORE.—At Los Angeles, Cal., Twelfth month 31st, 1902, Agnes C., beloved wife of Marcellus E. Moore, and member of Los Angeles Monthly Meeting. She was a devoted Christian.

NICHOLS.—At Easton, Me., Second month 28th, 1903, Mary Jane, wife of Joseph B. Nichols, in her 71st year. She was a Christian from early childhood. She joined with Baptists when thirteen years old, and united with Friends at thirty.

WILSON.—At Roswell, New Mexico, Second month 24th, 1903, Flora E. Wilson, daughter of William M. and Zilpha Wilson, in her twenty-second year. She was converted at the early age of seven, and since that time exemplified the fruits of an intimate acquaintance with Christ. She had graduated from Haviland Academy in 1899, and since the fall of that year was a student in Friends' University, where her active Christian influence has been deeply felt.

THE LITTLE HAND.

O moon-pale blossom that ruffles and dips
And ripples in wind that is sweet with your lips,
I have come to you, hot for the truth about truth.
I have come to find God. If I look in the dew
And the depths of your silk—shall I find him in you?

How it stirs—little rose! How it stirs and is still!
How it blows, and is sweet, and is terribly still!

Little child, little child—with me here by the rose,
I can find you no truth. What the moon-blossom knows
Is its secret, for God; and they shut us away.
Take my hand. Let us search for the truth and the work.
Of the truth through the dead hush of earth.

How it clings—little hand! How it clings to my own!
Here is Truth! Ah, the little hand clings to my own!

SENTIMENTALISM ABOUT NATURE.

In his essay on Thoreau, James Russell Lowell says: "I look upon a great deal of the modern sentimentalism about nature as a mark of disease. . . . To a man of wholesome constitution, the wilderness is well enough for a mood or a vacation, but not for a habit of life." An idle life in the wilderness would no doubt be depraving, as such a life would be anywhere. Moreover, it is agreed on all sides, as we have seen, that there is

FOOLED THE HOSPITAL.

Was Pronounced Incurable But Got Well on Pure Food.

Sometimes in a case of disease resulting from the use of improper food the symptoms are so complex that medical science cannot find the seat of trouble, and even the most careful hospital treatment fails to benefit. A gentleman of Lee, Mass., says: "On April 1st, 1900, I was sent home by one of our Massachusetts hospitals, saying nothing more could be done for me. I have been a great sufferer from nervous diseases and rheumatism and nervous prostration, and had previously been treated at Sharon Springs and by a number of doctors without getting much assistance.

"One day I was feeling worse than usual when I read an article about your Grape-Nuts that impressed me so that I sent out for a package. I commenced using it at breakfast the next day.

"For fifteen months I never missed one day. If you ever saw anyone grow strong and improve it was I. I gained from 125 pounds to my old weight 165. I will always be a cripple from rheumatism, but otherwise I am so much improved that I now feel as well as any man in this country." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There is a receipt book in each package of Grape-Nuts that will interest the housekeeper.

something forced and unnatural in the direct observation of the wilderness by an idle person. Man was intended to take a part himself in the struggle for existence—not to be a mere spectator of the struggle. But Mr. Lowell seems to go further than this. It hurts one's feelings to have him speak so disrespectfully of nature—and he a poet, too! "Well enough for a mood or a vacation!" I think that a man might account himself fortunate if the "habit of his life" legitimately brought him into the wilderness. He would learn sincerity and simplicity there. "It is impossible," Thomas Hardy remarked, "for a person living on a heath to be vulgar;" and a heath is but a treeless wilderness. A man, no doubt, can be brutal in the wilderness, as elsewhere—even more so, perhaps. It was an acute observation by Coleridge, "When the country does not benefit, it depraves." But the tendency of life in the wilderness, "other things being equal," is toward refinement and thoughtfulness. At the least, it teaches a man to be quiet. There is a mystery in the beautiful, inanimate world, which has not yet been solved; men go to it for peace and rest, and return content. "A forest is in all mythologies a sacred place," said Thoreau. Let anybody wander alone upon some mountain-side or hill-top, and watch the wind blowing through the scanty, unmown grass, and it will be strange if the vague consciousness of some presence other than his own does not insinuate itself in his mind. He will begin to understand how it was that the ancients peopled every bush and stream with nymphs or deities.—From "Books About Nature," by Henry Childs Merwin, in the April "Scribner's."

UNCONSCIOUS MARKS OF TRADE.

Men carry unconscious signs of their life about with them. Those that come from the forge, and those from the lime and mortar, and those from the humid soil, and those from dusty travel bear signs of being workmen and of their work. One need not ask a merry face or a sad one whether it hath come forth from joy or grief. Tears and laughter tell their own story. Should one come home with fruit, we say, "Thou art come from the orchard;" if with hands full of wild flowers, "Thou art from the fields;" if one's garments smell of mingled odors, we say, "Thou hast walked in a garden." But how much more, if one has seen God, has held converse of hope and love, and hath walked in heaven, should he carry in his eye, his words, and his perfumed raiment the sacred tokens of divine intercourse!—Henry Ward Beecher.

The Christian owes it to his divine Master, to his own soul, and to his fellow-man to labor for the more abundant life that is promised. Since he is to represent Christ to sinners he should regard no work or sacrifice too great which will help him to do so worthily.—J. A. Cross.

He who never looks up to a living God, to a heavenly presence, loses the joy of perceiving that presence, and the universe slowly turns into a dead machine, clashing and grinding on, without purpose or end. If the light within us be darkness, how great is that darkness! —James Freeman Clarke.

A CHARMING TRIP

is in reserve for those who contemplate visiting the Pacific Coast during the spring. On May 2d, and from May 11th to 17th, inclusive, special excursion tickets will be sold to Los Angeles and San Francisco and return, via the Southern Railway, at extremely low rates. These tickets permit of stop-overs, and are good to return until July 15th, 1903.

Round-trip rate from Philadelphia will be $66.75, going and returning same route; going one route and returning another, $68.25. Corresponding low rates from other points.

In addition to the Standard Pullman sleeping cars, operated daily, the Southern Railway operates tri-weekly, high-class, personally-conducted excursion sleepers from Washington to Los Angeles and San Francisco without change, via Atlanta, New Orleans and El Paso, in which the berth rate is only $7.00 from Washington to the above points. These cars leave Washington at 8.45 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Charles L. Hopkins, District Passenger Agent, Southern Railway, 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., will furnish all information.

The editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND desires to secure a complete set of The Christian Worker. Any person who possesses an entire or partial set, and is willing to sell the same, will please inform him as soon as convenient.

BETTER SHOW

For Her Children Than She Had.

They will do it because they don't think carefully, but parents who give coffee to children reap their own punishment in the puny, sickly looking little ones.

Many and many a child has been started on the road to disease that ended in death, by being improperly fed and given coffee, which is a rank poison to many a highly organized human being.

A lady of Atlanta, Ga., says: "My mother was a slave to the whims of her children, and let us eat and drink anything we called for, particularly she gave us coffee and lots of it.

"I grew up delicate, nervous, half-sick and miserable. When I was about grown I began having serious spells with my heart and my condition became so bad my friends decided I could not live long. At a consultation of physicians one of the doctors proposed that I discontinue coffee. This was years ago before Postum was discovered. I quit the coffee, and in a year or two my heart was perfectly well.

"Several years later when I had a home of my own imagined that the stimulant of coffee might benefit me, so I started in on it, and in a few days the old symptoms of heart trouble returned. I quit it and took up Postum Food Coffee for my morning beverage, and the heart trouble disappeared. I find Postum aids my digestion and has helped to build up my whole system.

"I now use it three times a day, and give it to my children with the knowledge that it is a powerful, delicious liquid food instead of a pernicious poison." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

RESTING.

BY THOMAS L. BAILY.

I'm resting in the shadow,
The shadow of the cross;
No earthly power can harm me,
I cannot suffer loss.
My Saviour sees me resting,
He bids me trust in Him;
He knows my earnest longing
When earthly joys grow dim.

I'm resting in the sunshine
Of God's eternal love;
No darkness can alarm me,
For all is light above.
My Saviour sees me watching,
I know I need not fear;
He knows how much I love Him,
And He is ever near.

I'm resting in the morning,
Or 'neath the noontide heat,
Or when the day's declining,
Still resting at His feet.
I'm trusting in His promise,
Whatever may betide.
In all my joys and sorrows—
To be my friend and guide.

Still trusting then my Saviour,
I'll calmly rest and wait,
'Till He shall come and call me,
And meet me at the gate.
Then resting e'en forever
In my appointed place,
How sweet will be the ending,
To see Him face to face!

THE PRJEVALSKY WILD HORSE.

In the April "Pearson's" is a description of the nearest approach to the domestic horse among wild horses. The Prjevalsky supplies an important bit of evidence in the chain of evolution between the sixteen-inch ancestor and the horse of to-day.

About twelve years ago, a noted Russian traveler, Prjevalsky, crossing the deserts of Central Asia, accidentally came upon this hitherto unknown wild horse. The only pair on exhibition in America is at the Zoological Park, New York, this being the last of the collection.

They are between four and five feet high at the shoulder and are of a yellowish-brown color, with short, dark manes. There is no forelock, but the tail is like that of the domestic horse. While not permitting familiarity, they are comparatively tame, and one has only to look into their mild, brown eyes to be assured of the possibility of complete docility. One man, after a solemn inspection, remarked, "I can't see much of a curiosity about them." However, comparison of the wild horse with the magnificent collection of fossil remains of wild horses in the department of vertebrate paleontology in the American Museum of Natural History will no doubt make it of more interest to most visitors, and of educational value to all who may be curious about the horse and his ancestors.

Judy: "Will ye give me yer promise, Dennis, that ye'll love me foriver?"

Dennis: "Sure, an' oi'd like to do that same, Judy, but oi'm hardly of the opinion that oi'll last as long as that."—

NEVER TOO LATE

To Try a Good Thing.

"I am fifty-two years old, and for forty years of that time I have been a chronic catarrh sufferer," says Mr. Jas. Gieshing, of Allegheny City; "with every change of weather my head and throat would be stuffed up with catarrhal mucus.

"I could not breathe naturally through the nostrils for months together, and much of the time I suffered from catarrh of the stomach. Finally my hearing began to fail, and I realized something must be done.

"I tried inhalers and sprays and salves, which gave me temporary relief, and my physician advised me to spray or douche with Peroxide of Hydrogen. But the catarrh would speedily return in a few days, and I became thoroughly discouraged.

"I had always been prejudiced against patent medicine, but, as everything else had failed, I felt justified in at least making a trial.

"Our good old family physician, Dr. Ramsdell, laughed at me a little, but said if I was determined to try patent medicines, he would advise me to begin with Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, because he knew what they contained, and he had heard of several remarkable cures resulting from their use, and furthermore that they were perfectly safe, containing no cocaine or opiates.

"The next day I bought a fifty-cent box at a drug store, carried it in my pocket, and four or five times a day I would take a tablet; in less than a week I felt a marked improvement, which continued, until at this time I am entirely free from any trace of catarrh.

"My head is clear, my throat free from irritation, my hearing is as good as it ever was, and I feel that I cannot say enough in praise of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets."

These tablets contains extract of Eucalyptus bark, blood root and other valuable antiseptics, combined in pleasant tablet form, and it is safe to say that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are far superior in convenience, safety and effectiveness to the antiquated treatment by inhalers, sprays and douches.

They are sold by druggists everywhere in the United States and Canada.

THE ATMOSPHERE OF DWELLINGS.

Under the head of "Child Training," in the April "Delineator," are a number of valuable suggestions for keeping the air of the house pure. Among them are the following:

The use of stained floors and rugs in preference to carpets.

A thorough daily airing of each room. Shaking and brushing clothing out-of-doors.

Removal from the bedroom at night of clothing worn during the day.

Daily airing and occasional beating of mattresses and blankets.

Open war against the feather duster.

A dry cellar at all seasons.

Frequent inspection of plumbing.

Little furniture and no uncovered vessels containing soiled water in the bedroom.

Opening windows at night; discarding weather strips.

Plenty of sunlight.

MARY TO JOHN.

*Together in our hearts we keep this day ;
'Tis one lone year since that dread hour of pain,
Since He gave up and took His life again,
Since thou, my second son, hast been my stay,
And still we love to talk of Him alway.
Dost thou recall His baby eyes ? 'Tis vain,
Thou wert a child with Him : how plain
I see the head that on my breast did lay,
To-night I feel His little fluttering hand.
Yea, John, He was with God, the living
Word :
I always knew His high and heavenly place.
Yet He is mine,—thou canst not understand,
Thou knewest Him as Master and as Lord,—
But, oh, to-night I see His baby face !"*

THE LIFE IS MORE THAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE great mass of Christian believers are unable to do much reading, and in their busy, occupied lives they are hardly able to do very much thinking upon the deep questions which are now before the world. The result is that they often feel sadly perplexed. They hear just enough and they read just enough to be seriously disturbed, without ever being able to untangle the web of truth and error. Now under these circumstances what is the Christian believer to do, the man or the woman who cannot go down into all these questions and work them out for himself? The first advice we have to give him is that he go steadily ahead, living by the faith he already has. Nothing yet has been discovered which weakens the fundamental faith of the Christian. The fact of sin is as terrible as ever. The need of salvation is as urgent as when the publican cried out, "God be merciful to me a sinner." The fact that Christ was very God tabernacling among men is unshaken, and as much deserves our faith now as at any period in the history of the world. The reality of the Holy Spirit, at work upon human lives, convicting for sin, and baptizing to holiness of life, has been demonstrated in power, and can no more be doubted than the power of the moon on the tides. Salvation from sin through the cross of Christ, and the power of the resurrected life, stand every known test. Let the simple, earnest believer go steadily on practicing his faith and increasing in it. But let him meantime be very careful how he passes judgment on matters which lie beyond his reach. The problems of science cannot possibly be understood by those whose minds have not been trained to deal with them. It takes years of close and painful study before one is able to grasp the full meaning of any scientific conclusion. It always makes a farmer smile to hear a city person talk of agriculture because everything he says shows his hopeless ignorance of the mysteries of farming. But the mysteries of science are infinitely deeper and harder to fathom. He who has worked seriously at any department of scientific study is very slow to give an opinion. He will not speak until he is sure he knows. Now to whom shall the untrained, though questioning, Christian believer go for light on the bearing of scientific discoveries upon religious truth? Shall he go to those who really know, or to those who imagine and guess and conjecture? Shall he go to those whose lives are devoted to these things, or to those who have jumped at hasty conclusions without any genuine study of the real facts at all? The answer seems simple.

The first thing of all, however, to consider in matters of this kind is the spiritual life and power of those who are able to give light on the bearing of scientific research. Are they themselves growing deeper and more spiritual? Do their lives testify that they are safe guides? Have their studies taken from them their fresh, positive faith, or are they more sure each year of the truth which has fed humanity through the centuries? The real test lies here. Some persons hastily conclude that a man is no longer safe because somebody has heard that somebody else heard that he said something which seemed dangerous. It is difficult to talk or to write much and not be misunderstood. But how about the man's spiritual life? Does he show that he has found the source of power? This ought to decide our attitude toward those who are reputed to be wise in the hard problems now before us. Those who have devoted themselves to the difficult work of finding out what really is true, and who through it all have kept the faith and have come out higher up, should be trusted when they speak, and those who are anxious for light should with confidence go to such guides, if they are not already satisfied with what they know.

THE ACTUAL GAINS OF MEMBERSHIP LAST YEAR.

IN our study of gains and losses for 1902, at the opening of the year, we reported a net gain of 93 members, which seemed from the figures at hand to be correct. Since that time the statistical reports of all the yearly meetings have been carefully investigated and some interesting revelations have come to light. If the statistics were correctly kept, then the difference between the additions to the meeting and the losses by death, resignation, release or removal should give the actual gain or loss for the year. But in many cases this simple mathematical rule will not work. Take, for example, Western Yearly Meeting. The additions to its membership last year amounted to 1,006 persons. During the same period it lost 965. Therefore it gained 41 members. But alas this conclusion seems disproved by other figures. In 1901 it reported 15,915 members; in 1902 it reported 15,196; therefore it lost 719 members. There are two possible ways out of the difficulty. Either the total number for 1901 was wrong, or there is a mistake in the report of additions and losses for 1902. It is more than likely that the total figures for 1901 are wrong; that is, that they show 760 members too many. On this assumption Western gained last year 41 members instead of losing 719, as the report would naturally indicate.

The reports from Indiana Yearly Meeting show an error on the same side of the account of 80. Their actual gain in membership for the year was 138; but a subtraction of the totals for 1901 and 1902 gives a gain of only 58. Kansas Yearly Meeting reports a gain last year of 212. But a subtraction of the total losses from the total additions leaves a gain of only 104. Therefore Kansas is carrying in its total for the year 1902, 108 persons for which it gives no account. Taking now a review of all the yearly meeting reports, we discover a net gain during the year of 909 members, while the subtraction of totals gives, as we indicated above, a gain of only 93. We get the first figures (909) by subtracting total additions from total losses; the other figures (93) result from subtracting total membership of 1901 from total membership of 1902. Evidently there is an error somewhere. The probabilities are in favor of the gain of 909, because the reports of additions and losses are more likely to be correct than are the old figures which have been carried on from year to year. If this is true, the net gain of last year was a large and encouraging one. But our study should make the fact plainly evident to every one that statistics as at present reported are not accurate. A committee of the Five Years Meeting is considering a uniform method of keeping the meeting records and of reporting the annual statistics. It is now hoped that a plan can be proposed before the coming yearly meetings which shall in some measure simplify the difficulties. For the present let us comfort ourselves with the hope that we made a gain of 909 in our membership last year.

It is very easy to cherish fine theories of duty, but very difficult at times to put them into practice.

The heart hath reasons that the reason knows not of.—Blaise Pascal.

LAST SCENES CONNECTED WITH HARRIET GREEN'S DEPARTURE.

[Letters from Friends give us valuable information about the last hours of Harriet Green's life and of the loving tokens of appreciation at the funeral. We print them for the benefit of her many friends. Our account of last week contained one or two errors. She died on the 18th at 7.30 in the morning—not on the 17th, and she had not yet labored in Iowa, Ohio, or Wilmington Yearly Meetings.—Ed.]

WORDS FROM PRESIDENT L. L. HOBBS.

Our much-beloved friend, Harriet Green, after a very brief illness, passed away in the early morning of the 18th. She had been apparently in usual health until Seventh-day night, when she was taken quite ill. On First-day morning she was still suffering, but she could not give up her wish to attend the meeting at 11 o'clock in Greensboro, which was the First-day of our quarterly meeting. She gave a very impressive sermon at that hour, though doubtless she must have been in great pain. It had been expected that she would also preach in the evening, but she had to give this up and requested Sophia M. Fry to take her place. She passed a restless night, and continued to grow worse on Second-day. She was tenderly nursed at the home of Dr. James E. and Mary Cartland, and a physician was in constant charge.

Late in the afternoon of Second-day she grew worse, and it was decided in a consultation of physicians that she was suffering from appendicitis, and that nothing could relieve her save an operation, and her case was considered critical. Dr. Stokes, of the Salisbury Hospital, came down and accompanied her to the hospital, and, after the operation, it was thought that there was some chance for her improvement; but all hope soon disappeared, and she quietly passed away at an early hour on the following morning.

I may say that dear Harriet Green had the tenderest care and most thoughtful and skillful treatment at the Salisbury Hospital, Dr. Stokes being a surgeon of rare skill and kindness, and the nurse who had charge of Harriet was an English woman who had had four years' training in England, and it seemed to us all quite gratifying that she should have had so kind and efficient care all through her brief illness. I should be glad for Friends everywhere to know how lovingly she was cared for and how peaceful was her close.

We have esteemed it a great favor to have with us our dear friends Allen Jay, Anna B. Thomas and Sarah Scull. Allen Jay was the principal speaker, and the presence of Anna B. Thomas seemed most fitting, as she had known Harriet Green from childhood. These Friends from a distance, together with many others from High Point, Greensboro and other localities in our State, showed the wide interest and loving sympathy of those among whom Harriet Green has labored in this country.

The service was held in Memorial Hall, the college audience room, and the students were present en masse, for Harriet Green had endeared herself to all of them. The occasion was one of deep solemnity, and while we contemplated the beautiful activity and earnestness of her life with touching appeal, there must have come to every one a desire to emulate her example and to do his part toward performing the work which she had laid down.

The long line which followed the coffin was a wonderful tribute to the hold which Harriet Green already had upon the hearts of the people of North Carolina. We laid her to rest midst roses, carnations and violets, not very far from the site of the old New Garden Meeting House; and it seems a very pleasant coincidence that this should be in a spot formerly dedicated to the church—the cause so near her heart. It was her request to be buried at Guilford College.

What it can mean to North Carolina Yearly Meeting and to Guilford College that Harriet Green was called upon to lay down her work among us is not for us to know. With bowed heads we acknowledge that it is the work of infinite wisdom and love which has taken from us one who seemed just beginning her service amongst us.

Much love and sympathy was felt and expressed for Sophia M. Fry, who has been her faithful companion so long in this land, and whose words and labor of love have been blessed to many. She will remain here a few days, and then go on to Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York, calling on a few Friends at each place, then home soon to England.

[A personal letter from Sarah M. Scull gives a sweet picture of the burial.]

The funeral was beautifully and tenderly arranged. The students gathered quantities of violets and covered the coffin with them; then a number of them contributed of their small means and bought white carnations. Greensboro Monthly Meeting sent a beautiful bunch of white roses. The carnations and roses were laid on at the grave, just before lowering—it was very sweet, and all of them felt and expressed much love for her. About 6 o'clock in the evening we all went out to the grave again to see how the students had covered it. The mound was entirely covered with violets, double and single, wild morning glory and white hyacinths, so thick that the earth scarcely showed through, and all round, at the bottom, a border of small pieces of evergreen. It was beautifully done. The Friends at the College say they think that having her grave there, will be an inspiration to the students.

WORDS FROM THOMAS NEWLIN.

Somehow I feel that the work of Harriet Green must go on. In the few short weeks she was in North Carolina she had been a great inspiration, and had quickened the spiritual life in many places. I feel that there should be a monument to her memory here at Guilford. Her last audible prayer was for the students of Guilford College, uttered while she was in great suffering. The loss to American Quakerism, I feel, is the greatest we have met in a generation.

"REMEMBER THE SABBATH DAY TO KEEP IT HOLY."

BY ELIZA D. H. MENDENHALL.

When Jehovah made His covenant with His people He wrote upon stone, "Keep the Sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee." But this Sabbath day is not the Sabbath day to us simply because God appointed it and set it apart for Israel. It is also the Sabbath day to us because it meets the crying needs of our bodies and our souls. He has fashioned upon the granite of our human nature the same law which He handed from Sinai.

It is a sacred and ancient institution of civilized society, because, as far back as we have record, there have always been some nations who have remembered it and made it holy with their faithful, prayerful, loving observance. Before the law was written upon Sinai, we read that a double portion of manna fell upon the Sixth day, and that they gathered it up upon the Sixth day for the Seventh day's use. The Assyrians kept a Sabbath, or Rest day, set apart. The Persians, the Egyptians and the Greeks adopted it, and Rome had her Sabbath every eighth day of the week.

France made, in her foolish pride, her sorrowful experiment of denying God and enthroning the Goddess of Reason, destroying her cathedrals and churches and her Sabbath, but she came back through the blood and the fires of revolution to repent in sackcloth and in ashes to open her churches, re-establish the Sabbath and espouse her old-time faith in God.

This need of the Sabbath is universal and is founded deep in every natural law that governs and insures our welfare.

You have doubtless read the instance of the criminal condemned to penal servitude for life; but who after serving thirty years was given his liberty because of good conduct. He went rejoicing to his early home, but it was deserted. His wife was dead, his children grown and scattered. He found no familiar friends in the old familiar places, no friendly voice or smile, no one to remember him, and so he went back to those prison walls that had sheltered him so long and begged to come in. It was the only home he knew.

But if that man had had one day in every week, through all those years, to mingle with his friends; if his life could in this way have kept in touch with the outside interests of their lives, he would not have gone out a stranger and an alien to find them; he would have been glad to keep and to use his freedom in this outside world. In some such way God has given us the Sabbath, that we may keep in touch with Him, and with the affairs of His kingdom; that we may not be strangers and aliens, but may learn to know Him as He is, and be His heirs and joint heirs in that eternal life He came to give His children; that while we may not understand, but shall always marvel at it, we yet shall not shrink, but shall rejoice in our high destiny; and so this day has been given us to lay down the cares, to smooth away the wrinkles, to wash away the stains of toil from our hands, to purify our bodies, and to robe them in fresh linen and goodly apparel as a sort of outside symbol to the world, of that righteousness we would put on within.

But how many of us read the Sunday newspapers which crowd into our minds, already tired with the activities of the week, not only the interests and the issues of one day in the week, but of all the days in the week combined? How many of us allow our minds to be led away from that attitude of worship which is essential to all communion with Him and so defeat His purpose and defraud our souls, slowly but surely, of the glory of our inheritance?

We who believe in God and in the keeping of the Sabbath often violate it. I remember reading of two ladies traveling in Mexico. They stopped at a railroad station to stay over Sunday, and one of them wanted some handkerchiefs washed. Going to a Chinese laundry across the way, they made known their errand. The Chinaman shook his head and said: "Me no washee to-day." The lady thinking he was just lazy laid a silver dollar on the linen and pushed it toward him on the counter. The Chinaman turned, took down a Bible from a shelf, and said: "Me China-man. You Melican lady. Me love that book. You no good lady." It was rather a strong rebuke, but surely no Chinaman should have a higher ideal of a consistent Christian life than we have as professing Christians.

When we use our Sabbaths intended for rest and worship as a day of toil or idle pleasure we are courting the national disaster that has come to every nation that has forgotten God and desecrated His laws in the past.

The men who are striving to legalize Sunday base ball are failing to see that when this holy Sabbath is broken down there is little left to hinder the grinding spirit of commercialism and the great greed of capital for labor from devouring their Sunday rest and pleasures and appropriating that day, as it has appropriated every other day in the week, to its own ends.

The Sabbath is our most ancient and divinest safeguard to national liberty and prosperity. Every intelligent citizen, as well as every Christian, is bound to stand for it and to vote for it unitedly, but having done that we have only begun to do our duty.

Every great moral question touches some other moral issue, and we must deal with motives and causes as well as results if we legislate efficiently.

Under the present arrangement six days out of every seven are spent by the common laborer, from dawn until dark, to put the bread in the mouth, the coat on the back, and the roof over the head. There is no time left for relaxation or play unless the Sabbath is appropriated, and for this reason the greed so prevalent in our business world should be condemned.

If the Christian employer wants the Lord's Sabbath kept inviolate let him be ready to keep that other law next to it, and have no other gods before him. Let him not have the desire of gain and his real need of money blinding his eyes until he makes undue demands upon the life forces of those who serve him. Let him lessen the hours of labor if too long. Let him give just compensation for that labor, and let him grant regularly a half-holiday to give chance for legitimate games and pleasures necessary to a strong body and a contented frame of mind. There must be money to buy books and papers. There must be time for reading and thought. There must be opportunity for rest and relaxation in every life if it yield its best returns in labor. This is no idle dream, nor poetic business theory. It is plain common sense and common justice, yielding its own practical results.

HAVE REVIVALS CEASED ?

BY LEVI D. BARR.

In the face of present conditions, spiritual sloth and religious drouth, one may well ask this pertinent question. It does not require the gift of prophecy, nor vision of a seer, to point out the fact that sight is swift and faith is slow. It does seem that faith in divinely-appointed means has given place to modernized methods in many so-called churches which in reality are little more than social clubs, whose chief aim seems to be the development of literary taste and intellectual gifts and fostering settlement ideals. It should be borne in mind that the business of the Church of Christ is primarily the evangelization of the world. On her escutcheon is written, "Holiness unto the Lord." "Non-compromise" is her watchword, and "Victory" her battle cry. The world is not to be won to Christ by lowering the standard of the Church. No trifling with Christ's ultimatum, "Ye must be born anew" to meet the demands of the carnally-minded will ever dislodge the enemy. The business of the army of Jesus Christ in this world is to wage a warfare against "the triple alliance," "the world, the flesh and the devil." Ours to disturb the peace of the world, not to flirt and cajole. Nowhere are we warranted to meet the enemy under a flag of truce.

Yet the Christian orator is warned not to unmask sin lest he become sensational. National, State and municipal wrongs must be ignored lest he be classed as a politician. And if the armor-clad knight, with sword of spirit, is to attack sin, he must be very careful lest he frighten the game away. And thus the demand for comforting preaching, soothing messages and inoffensive discourses has had the effect of coloring the utterances of many who have been called of God to speak the words of life. Many a minister, after having faithfully delivered a God-given message, has been eldered and cautioned and warned not to repeat the mistake again, until anything short of a Paul or Elijah retracts and then retrogrades. I know full well that the preacher who dares proclaim his convictions of right and insists upon conformity to the divine law will presently be looking for a new field of service. And for this very cause many evangelists who should have their faces Godward to catch the smile of His approbation have transferred their vision to the faces of their congregations, fearing the power of some prominent member more than the frown of Jehovah. Need I insist on the truth of these trenchant words? Examples are not wanting. Oh, how we need trumpet-tongued prophets, who will dare to "speak the words of life whether they will hear it or no." It is not in the commission that we are to keep our pulpits, or be patted approvingly by some carnally-minded official. We have no business with the approbation of some people. "If ye were of the world the world would love its own, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."

It was asked of a young woman how she liked a sermon preached by a popular minister. She replied, "Oh, it was splendid, lovely; I don't believe the devil would have found any fault with what he said." The same eulogy might be pronounced over many efforts.

Then again others are wasting time. Think of the Church of Christ with a commission to "preach the word," "to disciple all nations," spending her time in the discussion of infinitesimal questions, immaterial and insignificant, whilst thousands for whom Christ died are perishing. Oh, how we need to take our weapons out of the clouds and turn them upon the enemy, and pour a fire of divine shot into their ranks until there shall be consternation in the camp of the Philistine! An emasculated gospel and an expurgated Bible and up-to-date ministry has failed to bring about the surrender of the enemy.

The writer is not in sympathy with the current opinion that we need new methods for dealing with sin or sinners. It is not in evidence that man with his opulency of gifts, material and intellectual, is any more Christlike in nature or amiable in character; neither is he immune from lust, avarice, greed and sinfulness. But, on the contrary, that he is heir to the same infirmities, beset by the same limitations, and capable of the same plunges of moral degradation, and in need of an infinite Saviour.

The Friends' Church, with 95,000 members, ought to find a place before God in humility, where she could weep out her shame, and seek pardon for her infidelity, and pray for wisdom to direct her the coming year into a victorious conquest of human hearts. Let no one congratulate himself or herself that we have done well to hold our own and gain 90 or 95, as per statistics. While we spend thousands to endow universities and colleges, and build splendid edifices for worship, it seems to me it is enough to stop the harps of angels that our work is productive of so little practical results in soul saving. The Church that loses sight of the commission will die, and should.

Let the Church of Christ confess her sin. Let repentance, conversion, sanctification and holiness be sought after, and let us forever abjure the inane dogma of human goodness. A building is no stronger than the material of which it is composed. It is equally true that a Church will be strong of faith and power only as the individual membership is strong of faith, purpose and power of the Holy Spirit. Oh, for the breath of God to smite the trees of vice, sin and unrighteousness that flourish within the range of the armies of Jesus Christ. Shall we not gird ourselves for the conflict and march forward to victory. "Go ye," and "Lo I" am with you always even unto the end of the world.

THE BOOK OF GOD IN THE HAND OF MAN.

BY BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT.

Nature is a book of God declaring His glory and showing His handiwork. We stand with awe and wonder between the open pages of this colossal book, transparent leaves of sky above us, and below us leaves of land and sea, deep and numberless.

History is a book of God—for through the ages God has "made known His ways unto Moses," and unto kings and wise men and unto the children of Israel and other peoples in all lands.

Man himself is a book of God, framed and fashioned after the divine thought. Was it Horace Bushnell who preached that noble sermon on "Every Man's Life a Plan of God?" And are not all saints "living Epistles," setting forth God's wisdom and grace to be "read and known of all men?"

Is God, who is thus self-revealing in Nature, in history and in human personality, without direct witness in the realm of literature? Is the Author of all things the Author of a Book as well? All literature that represents man's genius is in an important sense from God.

And certainly that human literature that is most radiant with truth, with ideals, with ethical conceptions and with authoritative demands upon man's conscience, confidence, affections and will must in a still higher sense be from God. But is there not another Divine Book somewhere?

Let us begin our quest among the shadows—for shadows there are, thick and heavy in this world. Let us ask: Why these mazes and mysteries that make such midnight for the race? Is it possible that by a judicious concealment God has protected mankind from an awe that might be compulsory and terrifying; that by the very uncertainty that fills life He has conserved individuality and freedom, and made it possible to turn life into a test and a school of personal character?

Is it not probable that God, immanent in nature, powerful, necessarily concealed, present though invisible, apprehensible but not comprehensible by man—is it not probable that He will provide a guide for His pilgrim children lost and bewildered as they must be among the mysteries and complications of human life; and lost too and bewildered in a state of forfeited innocence, accumulated guilt and inherited tendencies towards evil?

Is it not probable that He will somehow, somewhere put into the heart of human society a Personality both human and divine—a Personality living among the uncertainties with a holy confidence in eternal righteousness, and with a love for humanity that will for its sake forfeit life itself—a Personality strong, serene and “able to save.”

But should such a Personality appear and make History with its anticipations, processes and consumations, is it not inevitable that this wonderful Career with its struggles and tragedies and triumphs and teachings should go into Literature? And that by the hand of man?

But this is the Story of our Bible—the Book of God in the hand of man—by the hand of man. Man produced it, not knowing, not fully realizing in its several stages of development all that he was doing. God wrought and man wrote. And he wrote under the spell of a divine afflatus. And we have the Book—a book of history, of biography, of human nature, of human passion and sin and aspiration, of divine action and light and grace. The heart of the book is the story of the life of Jesus—the incarnate God. That story gives a radiance to every page. It opens with the sublime declaration: “In the beginning—God.” It closes with words of infinite grace—a benediction of the “Lord Jesus.” The first verse of Genesis is the day dawn. The last verse of Revelation is noon day.

It is a Divine Book. Man could never have produced it. The greatest human genius could never have conceived it. For one thing, and it is the main thing, no human being ever had the authority to say what is said in the Book. But whatever God might have done, He certainly did not make the Book without the help of man. It is a Divine Book, but by God’s great grace it is also a human Book. It bears on its pages the impress of the individuals who wrote it and of the civilizations under which they wrote.

God’s Book in the hand of man has been a stimulus to intellectual activity and research, the most original, ingenious, bold, persistent, fascinating and enriching. No one can adequately estimate the value of this contribution to the literary wealth of the world. And no age has been affected by it more widely or more advantageously than the present.

How far the human element entered into the composition of this Book is still an open question. No part of the Book can be thoroughly studied without taking this factor into consideration. And this adds to the interest and value of the Book. It sheds light on the divine action, the divine processes, the divine wisdom in His adaptation to local and temporary conditions—His patience and love and infinite tact, if we dare to use that term.

And the Book of God is still in the hand of man for revision. The reverent critics assure us that the deeper they go and the wider the sweep of their explorations, the more they find of Christ, of His shadow and of His presence. This is the protection of scholarship in its critical work—the light of life that fills the pages from the first creative word in Genesis, to the shining of the Star of Bethlehem, the glory of the transfiguration, the tongues of fire at Pentecost, and the glory of God that doth lighten the holy city of Jerusalem on the last page of Revelation. It is Christ the personal Guide in every part of this divine Guide-Book that gives it power and preciousness. Have no fear for the Word of God in the hand of man. Christ Himself is in the boat. It cannot capsize.

The Book of God must be in the hand of every man, of every woman, of every child, everywhere, every day. It is the Word of Christ. He fills the Book. “Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly.” (Col. 3: 16.) In it He says, “Come unto Me,” “The words that I have spoken unto you are spirit and are life.” Read and ponder the Word as a means of grace.

I love to think of D. L. Moody with his Bible in hand. It was to him the Sword of the Spirit, a weapon of truth, a medium of spiritual power. I love to recall Wesley with his emphasis on the “Thus saith the Lord.” I love to recall the picture of William Carey when he left for India, as he stood on the ship’s deck holding up his open Bible as a signal to his brother who had come to see him off: “As long as I could see him I saw William standing with his open Bible.” It was as though he had said: “This is what takes me to India. This is my message. This gives me strength and hope and peace.”

Dear reader: The demand of the age is the Book of God in the hand of man—not merely to find “texts” to preach from, or to sustain sermonic propositions: not merely to get material for “talks” or “lessons”; not merely for fine scholarly criticism to show shades of meaning in the “original” or a comparison of “readings,” or other polemic or pedagogic or professional purpose (all of which may be legitimate enough in its place); not merely for literary effect in public discourse to add charm to an essay for the press—but to let God’s truth pour its radiance on your own soul; to stand in its light that it may warm and strengthen you; to let Christ in His Word touch you with His own touch of power and make you more a “man of God complete, furnished completely unto every good work.” (2 Timothy 3: 17.)

The majority of men are lost, not because they are criminals, but fools; not because they sought wickedness, but drifted into it; not because they purposed folly, but simply because they never had a wise and enduring purpose.—W. J. Dawson.

Political economy cannot regenerate the individual, nor can the evils of the world be cured by law.—C. A. S.

Awake! Face the foe!
Fan the ember aglow
That still in the conscience are slumbering low.
While victims are weeping
Can Christians lie sleeping!
For God and His cause strike the death-dealing blow.
The saloon must go.
For God's word says so.

—"Ram's Horn."

William Caine, M.P., leader of the Temperance element in the House of Commons, died suddenly on the 17th of Third month.

Statistics show that the prohibitory amendment saves annually to the people of Kansas six million dollars. In a little over twenty-one years this means a saving of $126,000,000!

There are many mothers, nurses and others who have charge of children, and who readily give paregoric to their children, who would hesitate to do so if they knew that the active ingredients of that drug are alcohol and opium.

The newly-elected sheriffs of Maine show a disposition to enforce the law. As one said: "I want every deputy to notify all the dealers that between now and next Monday they must dispose of their goods and paraphernalia, or suffer the consequences."

A recent president of a State medical society said: "The health of the people demands the suppression of the saloon." And he was right. If any disease, like smallpox or cholera, caused one-half as many deaths in our country during a year as has intoxicating liquors sold over licensed bars, the United States Congress would appropriate a hundred thousand dollars to stamp out the disease and then appoint special officers to see that the health orders were enforced. This would be right and the people would give such a measure their hearty approval.

In this day sobriety has come pretty nearly to mean total abstinence. As a cold business proposition, great corporations and private firms are enforcing practical abstinence. They demand such a condition of their employees that practically any drink at all becomes too much drink. Science has come from another direction to support the same end. The old idea of the efficacy of moderate drinking finds no support in modern medical science. "A man is as old as his arteries" is a saying well known in medicine.

When the arteries take on the ossified character the end is at hand. Now, modern science says that frequent indulgence in alcohol tends to produce arterial ossification.—Selected.

Whatever may be said of England's new liquor law, it cannot be denied that it is going to result in an increased agitation of the question. The law provides that liquor dealers may not sell to any one "in the slightest degree under the influence," nor may they permit "any such drunken person" to remain on the premises. Any one found on the street "under the influence," whether disorderly or not, is to be arrested, and any one who lends a friend money on which the latter gets "the slightest under the influence" lays himself liable to arrest and imprisonment, with a month's hard labor. The question now to be decided is, When is a man under the influence?

Liquor men are fully alive to the importance of reaching the public through the printed page. The National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association has a "protective literary bureau," which devotes its time to the printing and distribution of liquor tracts. In a circular issued to the trade, and calling for contributions, the bureau says: "The money will go ten times farther in this way and do one hundred times more good than if spent in any other manner." If this is true, why should not temperance people be willing to distribute the tracts which are so abundantly provided on every phase of the subject? Friends attending Philadelphia Yearly Meeting will find a supply at Friends' Institute, and are cordially asked to assist in their judicious distribution.

The Fifty-seventh Congress, which has just adjourned, signalized its closing hours by passing the immigration bill, with the two Prohibitory amendments which temperance people have been advocating for many years. These are:

- (1) The amendment forbidding the sale of liquor in immigrant stations; and,
- (2) The Landis amendment, forbidding the sale of liquor in the capitol building.

Both are important. They mark two decisive steps toward divorcing the national government from its partnership with the liquor business.

The one bitter defeat of the temperance forces was the loss of the Hepburn bill, framed to amend the interstate commerce law so as to protect local option and Prohibition territory from illicit liquor sellers.

Greeley, Weld County, Colorado, was founded by Nathan C. Meeker, who was associated with Horace Greeley in 1869. All who participated in the movement had equal opportunities. Lofty ideals have been a living force in this successful community. One of the main features of Greeley is that there they have prohibition which actually prohibits. This is a part of the original plan. Only "temperance people" were invited in the beginning to join the community.

In all the deeds it is provided that land shall be forfeited if in any way it is connected with the traffic of intoxicating beverages. Among the people there is a sentiment—indeed, a practically unanimous sentiment—against the sale of intoxicating beverages in Greeley, and measures have been taken once or twice to suppress the so-called “blind pig” which show that a man incurs a serious risk both to his person and his property if he attempts to violate the prohibitory regulations of the city.

Theodore L. Cuyler says, in his “Recollections of a Long Life”: “The only sure cure for drunkenness is to stop before you begin. . . . The fountain-head of drunkenness is the drinking usages which create and sustain the saloons, which are often the doorways to hell. In theory I am and always have been a legal suppressionist; but the most vital remedy of all is to break up the demand for intoxicants, and to persuade people from wishing to buy and drink them. That goes to the root of the evil. In endeavoring to remove the saloon it is the duty of all philanthropists to do their utmost to provide safe places of resort, as the Holly Tree Inns and other temperance coffee houses—for the working people. And another beneficent plan is for corporations and employers to make abstinence from drink an essential to employment. . . . The experience of three-score years has taught me the inestimable value of total abstinence; the benefit of the righteous law, when it is well enforced, and also that the Church of Christ has no more right to ignore the drink evil than it has to ignore theft or Sabbath desecration or murder.”

A CERTAIN CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.

The following remedy has never been known to fail:

One ounce of Determination, mixed with Divine Strength, equal parts of Faith, Hope and Prayer.—Spring balm of Total Abstinence—taken slowly will cure the most chronic of cases.—“The National Advocate.”

A GREAT VICTORY.

In any event, now that the abolition of the Army saloon is to be faithfully tested in a scientific way, we are thoroughly optimistic as to the consequences. The liquor press was vociferous for the restoration of the Army saloon, but it was unable to bring it about. The Army officers and the War Department joined in the recommendation of the canteen. It shows that the Congressmen are nearer the people than the Army officers or the War Department, and that the people of the United States are determined that the abolition of the canteen shall have a fair test before the act is rescinded. It is a direct victory for the temperance forces of the country. The decisive character of the victory will more and more appear as the readjustment of the Army to the new conditions shows its beneficent results.—“The National Advocate.”

A BRAIN POISON.

Alcohol is often spoken of as a brain poison, and no truer word was ever spoken. Physiologically, alcohol has a great power of attacking the brain with the most harmful results. Thirty-one per cent. of the insanity of the country is found to be due entirely to the use of strong drink, but in addition to this there is a great loss of brain power due to drink. Men are muddled and stupid; some get dead drunk; others are merely foolish; but these are all stages of brain poisoning due to alcohol.—Walter N. Edwards.

RUM AND INSURANCE.

Actuaries of Insurance Companies in this country are now turning their attention to this question. One foreign expert cautions the companies against making any allowance for even moderate drinking. This, he says, may easily lead to excess. He adds: “The outlook for a man who should fall ill with pneumonia, typhoid fever, dysentery, nephritis, heart disease, diabetes and affections of the liver is bad enough under the best circumstances, but if the patient is an intemperate man his hope for recovery is reduced very materially, and the fight for life is desperate, if not hopeless.”

The question of heredity is also being considered, as it is found that the children of heavy drinkers are personally poorer risks than those whose ancestors led temperate and pure lives.

FOURTH MONTH 12, 1903.

THE RESURRECTION.

The circumstances under which the Epistle to the Corinthians was written have already been noticed in the notes on the lesson on Self-Control (Second month 22d). The section contained in chapter 15 was probably written to meet doubts concerning the resurrection of the dead which existed in the church at Corinth. There appears to have been a speculative unbelief concerning the doctrine which would cause great injury to the Christian faith if allowed to spread. The word “some” in verse 12 implies that there were not many persons who held these views. They do not appear to have been Sadducees, and were probably those who had been heathen. This chapter is the one doctrinal section of the Epistle. The line of argument is, "(1) denial of bodily resurrection involves denial of Christ's resurrection and so contradicts the gospel; (2) Christ's resurrection is the pledge of the victory of God's kingdom, and the ground of the believer's hope in Him; (3) the principle of the resurrection runs through nature; (4) Christ's coming will bring about the resurrection of the departed and the transformation of living saints." "The resurrection of the dead is more than an event; it is the final moral victory won for man by our Lord Jesus Christ."

20. "But now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first fruits of them that are asleep." R. V. "Now." "The ground is cleared and the foundation laid for the declaration that the Christian dead shall rise in Him." "First fruits." Alluding to the first ripe grain of the harvest which was offered as a symbol of the coming harvest. Lev. 23: 10-14.

21. "Because through one man sin came into the world, through union with a new source comes redemption and through redemption life." Rom. 5: 12, 15.

50. The argument is to some extent reiterated and summed up. "But this I affirm." There is to be no misunderstanding. "Flesh and blood." Human nature in its present state. The kingdom is a spiritual one. Compare Rom 14: 17. "Corruption." Perishableness. "Incorruption." Imperishableness. The two are different in nature.

51. "Behold I tell you a mystery." R. V. Paul began with the historical fact of Christ's resurrection and then reasoned from it, and now he gives a specific revelation to bring his argument to a close. "Mystery." Here the word means "a truth that transcends the human intellect to understand," but at the same time it has been made known by revelation. "We all shall not sleep, but we shall all be changed." American R. V. As if to say, "Our perishable flesh and blood, whether through death or not, must undergo a change."

52. "In a moment." The change will be instantaneous. There will be no advantage for the dead. "Trump," "Trumpet." Compare Ex. 19: 16; Heb. 12: 19; Zech. 9: 14; Matt. 24: 31.

53. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." "Must." It is a case of necessity.

54. "This corruptible . . . this mortal." The same idea repeated for the sake of emphasis. "The saying that is written." The reference is to Isaiah 25: 8, but it is not a quotation, and Paul seems to have the Septuagint Version in his mind. The revisers read in Isaiah, "He hath swallowed up death forever." Death is conquered.

55. "O death where is thy victory? O death where is thy sting?" R. V. Again there is a reference, but not an exact quotation. Compare Hosea 13: 14. "Death has conquered us; Christ has conquered the conqueror." Compare Heb. 2: 14, 15.

56. "Death follows sin, not simply as a physical, but essentially as a moral consequence." Compare

Rom. 5: 12, 16; 6: 23. "The poisonous fang is pressed in by the law." The whole of Romans 7 is a comment on this verse. Indeed, this verse might almost be said to be a summary of the statements of the seventh of Romans.

57. Compare with Romans 7: 25; 8: 1. "Giveth." It is a present realization—the certainty of victory may be ours before the conflict ends. It is a gift; it is not earned; it comes "through our Lord Jesus Christ." Through Him the most timid, shrinking believer may be assured of victory. Rom. 8: 37; 1 Jno. 5: 4.

58. "Wherefore." In view of all that has been said, in view of these facts—"be ye steadfast," in your faith, in your efforts. "Abounding." Faith in a resurrection produces a consciousness of boundless and endless power for work. "Work of the Lord." The work which He commands and which is done in His service. Col. 3: 23; Mark 13: 34. "Not in vain." It will endure; it will be blessed. Compare Gal. 6: 9; Dan. 12: 3.

TOPIC FOR FOURTH MONTH TWELFTH.

CHRIST'S TEACHING ABOUT THE RESURRECTION.

John 11: 21-27, 40-44. (Easter meeting.)

Second-day, Fourth mo. 6.—Old resurrection truths. Ps. 49: 13-15.

Third-day, Fourth mo. 7.—The Jews' faith. Dan. 12: 1-3.

Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 8.—Denied by the Sadducees. Mat. 22: 23-33.

Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 9.—A reasonable doctrine. Acts 26: 6-8.

Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 10.—Preached by Peter. Acts 4: 1-3.

Seventh-day, Fourth mo. 11.—The blessedness of it. Rev. 20: 1-6.

The teaching of Christ demands faith, but it never leaves that faith without support. The paradox at which the human mind balks is proven to be veriest truth and reason. The creation had taught the same fact since the beginning. Death seems to be each autumn the conqueror of life; yet with the spring-time life is shown conqueror of death. The faith of nature is ever greater than the faith of man. Some thought Christ might have saved Lazarus from the power of death had He but arrived in time; but now that he is in its grasp hope is past. A brief command shows the power of the "new creation," and propounds straightway the query of an endless life. Yet of Lazarus we are assured that he again "fell on sleep." The exemplar is the self-sufficient, everliving Christ, conqueror and lord of death, hell and the grave.

It is, after all, small wonder that death has seemed the stronger: "The way of all living" is never remote from our observation and thought. So swift a follower is the death angel that it is hard sometimes to know that the bringer of life has entered the household ere the little voice goes out in silence.

Yet how brief is the unbroken stillness of earth when set in contrast with the eternal praise of the world to come. In such contrast we have fit measure for the weakness of death, dread monster though it is, when put over against the power of life. It reigns, indeed, in our mortal bodies, but immortality is the potential endowment of the mortal, and over that death has no more power.

All that we know of death is negative, privative; its source and stronghold is sin; itself a departure, a missing of the mark. Life is positive, constructive; in it the law of increment prevails. Resurrection stands for the demonstrated banishment of death and for the bringing in of conditions the most favorable to life. Eternal life is begun in the regeneration; its years on earth are years of proving and of tutelage; it may fall back at some test or reject some lesson, and so bring a blight upon itself that may mean its extinction. The resurrection is the seal of an eternity of life. It is conditioned purely "in Him," and thus are vouchsafed its triumph and its perpetuity.

It is in the resurrection state that we shall find the community of the spirits of just men made perfect. The perfecting belongs to that state, the justifying to the present, but the two are inseparably joined.

WORK AMONG THE POOR WOMEN OF RAMALLAH, PALESTINE.

Outside of Christian countries the condition of women is pitiable. Considered much inferior to men, they are treated as different beings, and often simply as the property of their husbands. Christianity alone has the thought of lifting them up, and of teaching them to live better. Bible women come to them as angels of mercy with tidings of God's love, proving by acts of kindness and helpfulness the reality of their message. The following extracts show how varied are their ministrations and how gratefully they are received.

WILFRID ROWNTREE.

Second month 22d.—Visited four houses, and talked with the women, who were very attentive. When I was repeating to them the words of our Saviour about forgiveness, an old woman said she never heard anything like it before, and she was going to try and live up to it.

Second month 23d.—Visited three houses, and washed the sore eyes and feet of some little children, as the mothers were not able to manage the little things, not having the heart to touch their sore eyes. When the poor children lose their eyesight the mothers never blame themselves for the neglect, but say, "It is from God."

Second month 24th.—Talked to fourteen women; encouraged some girls to go to school, where they can learn all that is good for their future; and mixed bread for a woman who was very tired, as she had been out since two o'clock in the morning gathering brush for fuel.

Third month 1st.—Visited a few women, and tried to teach them how to keep their houses clean.

Third month 2d.—Gave to a family a piece of soap and a wash-cloth. The result was good. On Sabbath the girls came with clean faces to the meeting.

Third month 8th.—One woman asked me to help her to cut out a dress. It took me quite a while to cut and baste it. A little help is valued a great deal by these people.

Third month 10th.—Visited two houses. In one of them I had to settle a disagreement between the husband and wife.

Third month 22d.—Went only to one house, where a very sick baby, one year and two months old, was dying. I asked the mother what she was going to put on it after it passed away, and she said: "The same that she has on now." So I returned to the mission and managed to make up a little white frock and hood, and then carried them to the mother. The poor little child had suffered for months with her head, which was enlarged almost as big as two heads of a grown up person put together. Her eyes looked wild with pain, and she was always crying. After giving the garments to the mother, I went out for a walk with the girls and teachers of the Training Home. When coming back, I asked about the child and found that she had died and been buried while we were out.

Third month 23d.—Bathed a little sick baby, giving the mother a cake of soap and a piece of soft cloth for a towel. You may search in all the houses without finding an old white rag. After I got through the mother was so pleased, and said, "May your steps be toward heaven." This is an exclamation they use to any one who goes to their houses and helps them in such ways.

Third month 24th.—Talked with fourteen people. A young man asked for a Bible. A woman asked me how we get to know so much. Then she exclaimed, "May God lead you in pleasant ways, because you are leading us to what is right." Some of the women thought it was very hard to forgive others. I read to them the 18th of Matthew, about the unmerciful servant, and said, "When I come again, I want to see how much you remember of it."

Fourth month 20th.—Read to a number of women who were very attentive. One of them said to a woman who lives near the mission, "Happy are you, for you can learn many good things."

Fourth month 28th.—This is Good Friday, and it is the custom here for the people to go to the graves to lament on this day. As I went into the first house one woman said, "I wish you were here earlier, then you would have gone with us to lament your brother." I had a good chance then to speak to them about the heathen customs that have been handed down to them from old times, and I tried to show them the right way the best I could.

I often meet women with indescribable filth on their veils and dresses. Ask them the reason they are so, and their answer will be that they are celebrating the death of one of their relatives. This is their way of mourning.

Fifth month 3d.—Talked to many people who listened with interest. One woman who was mourning the loss of a son had not changed her garment for months. I persuaded her to do so before I left the house.

Fifth month 5th.—Visited five houses. In the first I saw the "lord of the house," and asked him if he could read. He said "No; he wished some man could teach him, and he would give him one of his daughters for a wife."

Sixth month 15th.—Had a talk with eight women. Some of them were very attentive, and some looked so tired and worn out. Being harvest time, many have to go far from the village to help in the harvest, or to carry food to the laborers.

Sixth month 27th.—Visited five houses. In three there were sick people. Their relatives cannot give them anything of comfort, though they are kind to them, and it is a wonder many of them pull through. In one house, the priest and a number of men were smoking and gossiping round the sick room. (A "house" generally consists of one room only.)

Tenth month 13th.—Visited five houses; spoke about the Bread of Life that sustains the soul; gave a piece of soap, a towel and a wash-cloth to one woman; washed the three little girls' faces, hands and feet; cleaned the room and put things out in the sun. The mother had sore eyes, and was very grateful for what was done for her.

Tenth month 20th.—Told to a number of children stories that interested them, and spoke to them about going to school regularly.

Many people like to send their children to our day schools, but the Greeks opened a school, and the priests threaten the people to disown them from church, not to baptize their children, nor to pray at their funerals, if they send their children to other schools. (This only worked for a few days. The children came again in spite of all that was done, because they knew our schools were so much better. —W. R.)

Eleventh month 1st.—Visited three houses. I was asked by some of the women to go often. They want to learn a few words of prayer. They show great sorrow for their ignorance and their untrained lives.

The Missionary Committee of the Christian Endeavor in the Girls' Training Home often make little garments of old and new materials, whatever they can spare and get, and I give them to some who are in great need, and also the little money we earn for this purpose.

Heaven's gate is closed to him who comes alone. Save thou a soul, and it shall save thine own.—John G. Whittier.

The merit of an act depends upon our motive and another's need.—"The United Presbyterian."

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

"I enjoy THE AMERICAN FRIEND more and more as the years go by and I wish to heartily endorse and commend it for its position on all essential questions of Quakerism."

Prof. Edwin Morrison,

Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

James Wood and family are spending some time at Old Point Comfort and Hampton.

Peter W. Raidabaugh acceptably attended Brooklyn Meeting on First-day, the 22d.

Allen Jay, of Richmond, Ind., attended the funeral of Harriet Green, at Guilford College, N. C., the 20th ult.

George McGraw, a minister from Nebraska, acceptably attended Whitewater Monthly Meeting, Ind., the 19th ult.

Emma Coffin was expected to begin a series of gospel meetings in the meeting at Marshalltown, Iowa, on the 29th ult.

Fred T. Coppock is engaged in revival work in Hiawatha Quarterly Meeting, Neb. Souls are being saved and added to the church.

Emma T. Coffin conducted a successful series of meetings at New Sharon, Iowa, in Second month. Souls were saved and the meeting strengthened.

I. N. Rich, pastor at West Branch, Iowa, was recently called to hold a series of union meetings at North Loup, Neb. Success attended the effort.

Leannah Hobson, of Westfield, Ind., has been engaged for religious service in the meeting at Centerville, Ind., and will resume her duties this week.

Harry R. Keates recently closed a series of meetings at Westfield, Hamilton County, Ind. His labors are much appreciated. He is now engaged in like services at Carmel, Ind.

Jefferson W. Ford and Helen Farr Ford are doing very acceptable work in the meetings of Mt. Vernon Quarterly Meeting, South Dakota. They are much appreciated by the people.

Sarah Caroline Hadley, a minister, has been liberated by Wilmington Monthly Meeting, Ohio, to attend Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, New York Yearly Meeting, and also some of the meetings of Friends in Virginia.

C. E. Newlin, a member of Indianapolis Meeting, addressed the citizens of Richmond, Ind., the 19th ult., on "The Twentieth Century Problem: Our Civic and Industrial Life." He is a forcible speaker, and his effort was highly appreciated by his audience.

A movement to enlarge the meeting house at Haverford, Pa., at an estimated cost of about $10,000, to be raised mostly by private contributions, having the consent of Western District Monthly Meeting, is now progressing, the required amount seeming already well assured.

Buffalo Monthly Meeting, Kan., is prospering spiritually, and increased interest is manifest. The responsibility and field for Christian labor is also enlarging, as a number of emigrants, attracted by the opportunities afforded by the gas and oil well, are settling in the vicinity.

Albert Syze, who has been laboring this year at Yorktown Heights, New York, hopes next year to find an opening where he can secure some business occupation which will support him and still give him an opportunity to carry on his religious work. He is well qualified, and Friends will be interested to hear of his desire.

New York Friends have had severe losses by death this spring. Since the departure of Robert I. Murray, Benjamin Barrington, Robert M. Ferris and J. Howard Yarnall have all been called home. Robert M. Ferris has for years been chairman of the Mission Board of the yearly meeting, and he has been a zealous laborer for this cause.

Walter T. Carpenter and wife, of Richmond, Ind., are a remarkable couple. They are in their 93d and 92d years, respectively, and put many younger people to shame in the regularity with which they attend meeting, both at the Sabbath Day and also the mid-week meeting. Their voices are often heard in prayer and testimony.

We have received two little booklets from S. Adelbert Wood, which many Friends will enjoy reading. One is by Charles M. Mead on Christ's "View of the Fatherhood of God," with an introduction by S. Adelbert Wood; the other is on "Substitutional Righteousness," by Brother Wood himself. They can be had from him, Adrian, Mich.

George C. Wise and wife, members of the Baltimore Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Committee, recently spent ten days in gospel service in Somerton Meeting, Nansemond County, Va. They held a number of meetings and visited all the Friends' homes in the meeting; also a number of other families. On the evening of the 14th ult. George C. Wise gave his instructive temperance lecture, illustrated with stereopticon views.

The (Philadelphia) "Friend" has this item upon the death of Harriet Green: "Harriet Green, who came from England nearly a year and a half ago, on a second religious visit to American yearly meetings and their membership, has recently deceased at Salisbury, North Carolina, and was buried at Guilford College on the 17th inst. [the date should have been the 20th]. This solemn event brings to memory Susanna Fales, Stanley Pumphrey and William Foster, whose lives were sacrificed to arduous labors for American meetings."

Marion Quarterly Meeting, Ind., was held the 13th and 14th inst. The meeting was favored with the company and labors of Joseph O. Binford and Fred Smith. On Seventh-day morning J. O. Binford made an earnest appeal for workers, followed by Thomas E. Williams, from Amboy Meeting, who emphasized the need of personal work by Christians in the everyday walks of life. At the business session all the monthly meetings sent in reports but one. Fred Smith made an appeal in behalf of the meeting at Farmland, and $75.00 was subscribed. Following the report on missions a superintendent on systematic and proportionate giving was appointed. On Seventh-day evening the quarterly meeting Christian Endeavor Union held a social, which was well attended. Thomas E. Williams addressed the meeting on Sabbath morning, and again in the evening.

We received the following notice from Lillie Willits, Indianapolis, Ind.: "For some years we have been received donations of flowers from Friends surrounding Indianapolis during the spring and summer for distribution among the hospitals and 'shut-ins' of the city. Most of our friends have been liberal and faithful in sending in bountiful supplies by express all summer long, paying their own express charges. Surely the reward has been far in excess of the effort and expense. It is again time for the planting of flowers. Will not those within reach of us kindly plant an extra amount for flower mission work for those who are shut in and away from such blessings of nature? In His name they will bring brightness and cheer wherever they may come. Address or deliver all flowers to 30 Jackson Place, in care of Lillie M. Willits. From there they will be distributed by young ladies of the First Friends' Church."

Our young Friends who are interested in a college education will appreciate the following information:

"The Educational Committee of the Philadelphia Branch of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae desires to be of service to girls and women who wish to go through college or to do some college work.

"The following lists, along with general data, will be sent on application, accompanied by a stamp for each: 1. The colleges of the United States represented in the Association of Collegiate Alumnae. 2. College-preparatory schools of Philadelphia and suburbs.

"LAETITIA MOON CONARD, Chairman,
"4323 Sansom Street, Philadelphia.

"ANNA PALEN, Secretary,
"127 Harvey Street, Germantown."

New Garden Quarterly Meeting, held at Greensboro, the 14th ult., was well attended. In the meeting for worship Harriet Green and Seneca Stevens were favored in preaching. Good reports came in from all the monthly meetings, showing that under the Uniform Discipline there is an increased activity on the part of ministers and Bible School workers, and an increased attendance. The harmony and convenience among visiting and resident Friends resulting from the use of the Uniform Discipline were noticeable. The claims of THE AMERICAN FRIEND were presented. Harriet Green spoke of the need for young people in the ministry, and called attention to the advantages at Guilford College for spiritual as well as intellectual improvement. The chairman of the Yearly Meeting's Peace Committee asked that the coming anniversary of the Hague Conference be celebrated in a way calculated to advance the cause of peace. On First-day Harriet Green remained at Greensboro and Seneca Stevens attended the meeting at Guilford College.

Leon L. Tyler, principal of Fairmount Academy, Ind., has called upon the friends of that institution to give it more adequate support. His appeal is well introduced as follows:

"Fairmount Academy has done well what many similar, though richer schools, have been permitted to do on larger scale. Although a young school, its influence is now to be seen in the lives of the 160 young men and women who have gone out from its halls. Almost without exception the young people of this vicinity now seeking higher education are Academy graduates. There has always been in the Academy a distinct call upward and onward. But shall its work finally cease for want of an endowment fund when its fellow schools in the East have been amply provided for? Are we less interested in the future of our children and the church?

"The Friends' Endowed Academies of America have set in motion life currents which have flowed into and enriched every channel of church activity. With very few exceptions, the leaders of Quakerism in America have caught their first inspiration in these little schools, the continued existence of which has been made possible only by the wise and generous provisions of those who builded better than they knew."

"Can we do better with our substance—accumulated by industry and self-denial, under the bountiful goodness of God—than to make permanent a place where the lifting power of Christian education may have full sway? Shall we run the risk of waiting until the critical period is passed before we try to give the boys and girls the best spiritual surroundings possible?"

DIED.

ALLEN.—At West Roxbury, Boston, Mass., Third month 5th, 1903, Frances, youngest daughter of C. Frank and Caroline Hadley Allen, aged 3 years and 5 months.

FURNAS.—At Indianapolis, Ind., Third month 16th, 1903, Maurice K. Furnas, son of John H. and Ella Furnas, aged 17 years. He was a member of Indianapolis Monthly Meeting.

MATHEWS.—At Baltimore, Md., Third month 1st, 1903, Rachel Brooks Mathews, wife of the late Hockett Mathews and daughter of John and Mary Brooks, in her 71st year.

MOSHER.—At Motor, Iowa, in the home of his son-in-law, C. W. Smith, Second month 23d, 1903, Stephen Mosher, a little over 75 years of age. The deceased was a quiet, faithful Christian and a birthright member of Friends. Funeral services were held at Ackworth, Iowa, on the 25th.

PALMER.—At the home of his daughter, Agnes Roberts, Wilmington, Del., Third month 18th, 1903, Alexander Palmer, in his 82d year. The deceased was a lifelong and loyal member of Marlton Monthly Meeting, N. J.

TAYLOR.—Near Anaheim, Orange County, Cal., Second month 12th, 1903, Amanda M. Taylor, in the 76th year of her age. She was a Friend from childhood, having been a member at Richmond, Ind., Oskaloosa, Iowa, San Jose and Alamitos Meetings. Her faithful and consistent life commanded the love and esteem of those among whom she lived. In death she triumphed.

MADAME WU'S ENLARGED FEET.

The story of the change in Madame Wu's feet since she came to this country as wife of the late Chinese minister is an interesting one.

Madame Wu determined to endure the tortures of unbinding her feet in order to have the use of them. The toes were turned under and pressed against the ball of the foot. Very gradually the bandages were loosened and little by little the stunted toes were allowed to resume their normal position, and in time she was able to walk without support of bandages.

"My feet are quite big now," she said as she surveyed them critically in the drawing-room of the consulate. "But I do not care, for I am not in sympathy with the little-foot practice of my country. It is unnatural, and deprives a woman of so much that is beautiful and useful in life.

"It makes her dependent, too, and what chance has a woman to develop who is hampered in this way? I like to think my feet are of a size proportionate to my height, and indeed I wish they were. Yes, I have Chinese slippers on now, but when I go out I wear American shoes. I find them more comfortable for walking.

"There are many American customs which I like and shall introduce in China. The Chinese women are eager to take their place in life along with the women of other nations, and I hope it will not be long before they will be given a reasonable amount of freedom."—Exchange.

DROPPED THEM.

Quit the Medicines and Got Well On Grape-Nuts.

Made over on a change of food is rather a fascinating experience. Sounds like fiction, but an employee of the Anaconda Copper Co., of Anaconda, Mont., had just that experience, being cured on Grape-Nuts.

"For several years I was so run down from indigestion and improper foods that I had to resign a $125.00 a month position in Chicago," he says. "I was in such a bad condition that if I stooped over the sour food came boiling up into my throat and out my mouth.

"I lost nine months' valuable time, and three of Chicago's best physicians said I must die. I weighed about 140 pounds, which is skeleton weight for me. So I resigned myself to my fate and went home to the country to die. It was there a cousin introduced me to Grape-Nuts and new life. I threw all my medicines away, and at the end of two weeks' use of Grape-Nuts had to admit that I had gained 4 pounds. In the next few weeks I ate absolutely nothing but Grape-Nuts and pure rich cream and gained 18 pounds.

"I began to take interest in the events of the world again. From this point my recovery has been rapid and to-day I am physically in the best condition I ever was in my life. I had no trouble to get a position with the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. at a better salary than before.

"This is what Grape-Nuts has done for me. It saved my life, thanks to pure food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

WHERE BILLINGTON HAD THE ADVANTAGE.

Two or three miles back of Plymouth, Mass., is a modest little pond called Billington's Sea. Billington, an adventurous Pilgrim, had climbed a tree, and looking westwards had caught sight of the shimmering water. He looked at it with a wise surmise, and then the conviction flashed upon him that he had discovered the goal of hardy mariners,—the great South Sea. That was a great moment for Billington.

Of course the Spaniards were more fortunate in their geographical position. It turned out that it was the Pacific that they saw from their peak of Darien; while Billington's Sea does not grow on acquaintance.

But my heart goes out to Billington. He also was a discoverer, according to his lights. He belonged to a hardy breed, and could stare on new scenes with the best of them. It was not his fault that the Pacific was not there. If it had been, Billington would have discovered it. We know perfectly well that the Pacific Ocean does not lave the shores of Plymouth County, and so we should not go out into the woods on a fine morning to look for it. There is where Billington had the advantage of us.—S. M. Crothers, in the April "Atlantic."

OUT OF HIS PROVINCE.

A disagreeable lawyer met his match in a witness, as the following story from London "Tid-Bits" sets forth.

"I presume, my good fellow, you're a laborer?" said the lawyer to the witness, who was plainly dressed.

"You are right. I am a working man, sir," replied the witness, who was a civil engineer.

"Familiar with the use of the pick, shovel, and spade, I presume."

"To some extent. These are not the principal implements of my trade, though."

"Perhaps you will condescend to enlighten me as to your principal implements."

"It is hardly worth while. You don't understand their nature or use."

"Probably not," loftily, "but I insist on knowing what they are."

"Brains."

DEFINITIONS OF HOME.

A prize was offered recently by the London "Tid-Bits" for the best answer to the question, "What is Home?" Here are a few of the answers which were received:

"Where you are treated best, and you grumble most."

"A world of life shut out, a world of love shut in."

"Home is the blossom, of which heaven is the fruit."

"The golden setting, in which the brightest jewel is 'mother.'"

"The father's kingdom, the children's paradise, the mother's world."

"The place where the great are sometimes small and the small often great."

"The center of our affections, around which our heart's best wishes twine."

"The jewel-casket, containing the most precious of all jewels—domestic happiness."

"The only spot on earth where the faults and failings of fallen humanity are hidden under the mantle of charity."

"A little hollow scooped out of the windy hill of the world, where we can be shielded from its cares and annoyances."

"Home is the central telegraph office of human love, into which run innumerable wires of affection, many of which, though extending thousands of miles, are never disconnected from the one great terminus."—Selected.

"You pretend," said the fault-finding stranger, "that this is a real city! Look at your streets. Look at the dense pall of smoke that—" "Well, it's real smoke, isn't it?" exclaimed the native, defiantly.—Exchange.

Events and Comments.

N. K. Fairbanks died at his home in Chicago last week. He was one of the Western leaders in the great industrial movement in this country in the latter half of the last century. His name was associated with lard, oil and soap chiefly, although in his latter years he was a large operator in grain and on the Stock Exchange, and was interested in various financial institutions.

A complete revision of names of Indians in the United States is now being made by the Government. The object is to eliminate the many almost unpronounceable and vulgar Indian names and to substitute permanent names that will show the family relationship, retaining any existing names that are proper and which will enable title to allotments, etc., to be kept clear.

Reports from the wheat districts of Eastern Washington, Oregon and Idaho show that winter wheat will not exceed half of the normal acreage. As winter wheat forms the basis of most brands of flour manufactured for the Orient, a big shortage in the Northwestern crop is already certain. This will necessitate heavy importations of Eastern grain next fall, both for making flour and shipping in bulk to the Orient and Australia.

A reign of honesty touching the enforcement of the law prohibiting the sale of liquor has begun in Maine, evidently having its origin with the justices of the Supreme Court, and this departure is likely to produce important results. Liquor dealers are being not only fined, but sent to jail, and this is producing consternation among them. For the first time they are compelled to entertain some wholesome respect for the law.

For the first time in the history of the United States Courts, and by authority of a special act of Congress, four United States Circuit Judges sat together to hear arguments in a case, the trial being the fight of the Government against the Northern Securities Company of New Jersey in the celebrated merger suit. By this arrangement, the case can go immediately from this court to the Supreme Court of the United States, whereas, in the general court proceeding, it necessarily would go through the Circuit Court of Appeals, and a delay of from two to three years would probably ensue.

Owing to the immense fields of ice that gathered on the rocks above Goat Island, the American fall at Niagara was practically dry last week, and for the first time in fifty-five years residents and visitors hunted for relics and souvenirs about reefs that human feet never before touched.

Urgent appeals have been made to the War Department for the relief of the native Eskimo and Indian inhabitants of Northern Alaska, who are said to be in an extremely destitute condition as a consequence of a strict enforcement of the laws prohibiting the taking or killing of fur-bearing animals in that territory. Instructions have been sent to the department commander to investigate the situation and, in his discretion, to distribute rations in cases of emergency.

Two new labor organizations, one in Indiana and the other in New York State, are introducing some reforms into labor union methods. They have been incorporated and propose to advance the interests of their members by more liberal and more just methods than the older unions are using. There is ground for the growing dissatisfaction and just criticism which many of the old methods provoke, and the public greets with interest the introduction of effective reforms.

The officials of the French army are much disturbed over the spread of tuberculosis among the soldiers, and the Minister of War is endeavoring to find a way to check the disease. French soldiers are also falling victims to typhoid fever in rather startling numbers. The general health of the French army has been poor, and there must be some reason for it, as 99,000 men have died from disease since the treaty of Frankfort, while the German army has lost only 13,000.

The government's Irish land bill has been introduced in the British House of Commons, and passed its first reading last week. The second reading was set for Fourth month 22d. The bill proposes a free grant of $60,000,000 for the purposes of the bill. Tenants are to pay 3¼ per cent. interest on loans from the government. It also provides that untenanted farms and grazing lands shall be sold to neighboring tenants, and that three commissioners shall supervise the sales. The bill will doubtless become a law by the First of Eleventh month, and it is hoped its reforms will promote peace and contentment in Ireland.

One of the most peculiar Arctic expeditions ever planned is that of Dr. J. Charcot, the celebrated Frenchman, who will sail on Fifth month 15th from Saint Malo on a specially-built ship. The expedition, while at the expense mainly of Dr. Charcot, is also to be under the auspices of the Pasteur Institute and the Museum of Natural History of Paris. Dr. Charcot believes that the study of bacteriology may be aided greatly by analyses of air and water in the polar regions, and, above all, by examinations of the intestines of polar animals for "primary" microbes, which are so abundant in warm or temperate latitudes.

MORE THAN HALF

Suffer from Coffee Drinking.

Coffee does not set up disease with all people using it; on the other hand, it absolutely does create disease in thousands and thousands of cases perfectly well authenticated and traceable directly to coffee, and nothing else.

This statement may hurt the feelings of some coffee drinkers, but the facts are exactly what they are.

Make inquiry of some of your coffee-drinking friends, and you may be certain of one thing: one-half of them—yes, more than half—suffer from some sort of incipient or chronic disease. If you want to prove it's the coffee, or would prefer to prove it is not the coffee in these cases, take coffee away from those persons for from ten days to a month; don't change the food in any other way, but give them Postum Food Coffee, and the proof of whether coffee has been the trouble or not will be placed before you in unmistakable terms.

A young lady in the St. Mary's Academy, Winnipeg, Can., says: "One of our teachers suffered a long while from indigestion. She was a coffee drinker. She became worse steadily, and finally was reduced to a point where the stomach did not retain any food; then electricity was tried, but without avail. She of course, grew weak very fast, and the doctor said the case was practically incurable.

"About that time I was attracted to a statement in one of the papers regarding the poisonous effect of coffee and the value of Postum Food Coffee. The statement was not extravagant, but couched in terms that won my confidence and aroused me to the belief that it was true. I persuaded our teacher to leave off the morning cup of coffee altogether and use Postum Food Coffee.

"A change took place. She began to get better. She has now regained her strength, and is able to eat almost every kind of food, and has taken her position as teacher again." Name given by postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"A soul saved is God's angel of light to a world in darkness."

MAN'S PART IN GOD'S PROVIDENCES.

God's providences are larger than our own planning. If the day is fine on a Sabbath that has been set apart for special services, we are apt to think the weather "providential." But if the day should be stormy, is that any less providential? Does it not depend largely upon ourselves? If we can turn a disappointment into something that makes for righteousness, it becomes providential to us. We can thus get good in an unexpected way. It is our recognition of God's hand in our circumstances that makes them providential opportunities. Thus does God honor man in making him a co-worker. God always expects us to do something toward bringing about results. He has no use for a man who expects God to do it all.—Sunday School Times.

I'll fill each day with the little things,
As the pressing moments fly;

The tendril, which to the great oak clings
Grows strong as it climbs on high.

I'll trust my Lord, though I cannot see,
Nor e'er let my faith grow dim;

He'll smile—and that's enough for me—
If it's done with a thought of Him.

To cover up our own broken heart that we may comfort another in similar trial is to follow in the footsteps and patience of Jesus Christ.—The United Presbyterian.

MONEY TO COOKS.

$7,500.00 Donated, to be Divided Among Family Cooks.

The sum of $7,500.00 will be distributed between now and midsummer among family cooks, in 735 prizes, ranging from $200.00 to $5.00.

This is done to stimulate better cooking in the family kitchen. The contest is open to paid cooks (drop the name "hired girl"—call them cooks, if they deserve it), or to the mistress of the household, if she does the cooking. The rules for contest are plain and simple. Each of the 735 winners of money prizes will also receive an engraved certificate of merit or diploma as a cook. The diplomas bear the big gilt seal and signature of the most famous food company in the world, The Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., of Battle Creek, Mich., the well-known makers of Postum Coffee and Grape-Nuts. Write them and address Cookery Dept., No. 412, for full particulars.

This remarkable contest among cooks to win the money prizes and diplomas will give thousands of families better and more delicious meals, as well as cleaner kitchens and a general improvement in the culinary department, for the cooks must show marked skill and betterment in service to win. Great sums of money devoted to such enterprises always result in putting humanity further along on the road to civilization, health, comfort and happiness.

THE "FLAT" POINT OF VIEW.

People grow to regard all nature from a "flat" point of view. A little girl I knew went into the country last summer, and heard for the first time the tinkle of the bells as the cows came home at evening.

"Oh," she said, "I hear the ragman coming!" The ragman who drove through her street had cow-bells on his cart. To her the cow-bells may always suggest the ragman. Such impressions are not easy to live down.—A. B. Paine, in "The World's Work."

THREE-DAY TOUR TO WASHINGTON.

THE ADVICE CAME HOME TO ROOST.

The President of one of the prominent railway corporations in America was making a stirring address to an audience of young men, and dwelt with particular emphasis on the necessity of making a good appearance.

"When you are looking for work," he said, "be careful that you are presentable. If you have only twenty-four dollars in the world, spend twenty dollars for a suit of clothes, three dollars and a half for a pair of shoes, and fifty cents for a hair cut and a shave. Then walk up to the job, wherever it may be, and ask for it like a man."

This advice was greeted with great applause, and the railway president sat down amid a storm of cheers.

The very next morning a dapper-looking young fellow walked into the outer office of the orator, and handing a note to the clerk, said: "Please give this to the president." The note read: "I have paid twenty dollars for a suit, three dollars and a half for a pair of boots, and fifty cents for a hair-cut and a shave. I have walked from Harlem, and I would like a job as conductor on your road." He got the job.—Exchange.

PLEASURES.

A heart-stirring pleasure there is in the friendship of little ones. It may be fleeting, it may be fickle, but while it lasts it is worth while. Soft arms about one's neck, soft, fresh cheeks against one's own, flattering praises of the tales one tells, and flattering encores of the same; this simple joy has been one that has poured considerably into my own cup of happiness.

To-day, my cup runneth over. I am out for a holiday, and there is no one to say me nay regarding how I shall spend it. I have a little scrip in my purse, my staff (umbrella) in my hand, and the world is mine. My russet shoon are thick, my petticoats short, my hat light, my garments likewise; and I am minded to set out on a pilgrimage of pleasure. I care not where. I know not where. Only I know I shall have for company the blue and white above me, the budding trees about me, "sounds and sweet airs that give delight and hurt not," a philosophy that money cannot buy.—Katherine Pope, in "The Pilgrim" for April.

THE HAMMER OF GOD.

*Before my soul unrolled a pageant vast:
The mutable mysterious scroll of life;
Whose glorious images, with colors rife,
Emerged from out dim caverns of the past,
Then faded like a cloud, till there appeared
An anvil filling space, a mountain flame,
And One that stood beside, Whom none can name,
To wield the Hammer that all men have feared.*

*I saw the molten soul and body in fire
Prepared for that dire Hammer's fashioning,
Heard the eternal spaces echoing
Harmonious sound, and saw the sparks aspire.
My soul awoke and cried, "Take all of mine
And shape me to Thy purposes divine."*

HE WAS ALMOST KILLED.

The following is the account of an Englishman who came near being killed while traveling in Ireland:

He chanced to hear the conversation of four Irishmen. One said to his mate,
"And now where are you going?"

"Oh, I'm just going to Kilpatrick.
And where are you going?"

"Oh, I'm just going to Kilmory."

"How dreadful and barbarous they are to talk of their intended murders in such a public way!" thought the Englishman.

Assassin three (as the Englishman called them) now said: "Mate, where are you going?"

"Oh, I'm going home to Kilmore."

Assassin four then said: "Faix, you had better be going with me to Kil-

Recently Andrew Carnegie published a few rules for young men. Here are some extracts:

"Never enter a barroom, nor let the contents of a barroom enter you."

"Do not use tobacco."

"Having entered upon a certain line of work, continue and combine upon that line. Do not shirk, rather go beyond your task. Promotion comes from exceptional work."

"A man must discover where his employer's interests lie, and push for these.
The young man who does this is the young man whom capital wants for a partner who by and by reaches the head of the firm."

"Save a little always. Whatever your wages, lay by something from them. Never speculate. Never buy stocks or grain on margin. Never indorse. If you wish to help another, give him all the cash you can spare; never indorse. It is dishonest."—Herald and

THE VALUE OF A FACT.

BEHIND every one of the great inventions which in our time have transformed all methods of communication there has been the discovery of a simple natural fact: Nobody invented the fact. It was as old as the song of the morning stars. The new power came when somebody discovered it. Every step ahead in the art of curing men's ills of the flesh has been made by the discovery of some fact about the body. Three hundred years ago nobody knew that the blood circulated through the system, or that the lungs purified it. Doctoring in those days was mostly guess work, or the use of magic charms. As soon as the fact of circulation was made known every medical method was affected. The discovery that all contagious diseases are caused by microbes of some sort has revolutionized medical science to-day. None of these facts are new. The change has come because we have found out the facts. The men who shape the course of things in the great world are always on the watch for facts. No matter how high and mighty the man may be, he always bows to facts.

Now facts are just as important in the spiritual life as they are in the physical realm. Religious systems always crumble and decay if they are not founded on facts of life. Religious movements soon spend themselves if they are not rooted in the deep soil of spiritual facts. You can no more cure the soul than you can the body by high-flown theories which have no basis of fact under them. Many a life has been lost by bogus doctoring, and many a soul, too, has missed its true salvation by accepting some quack scheme of religion.

How shall we know that we are finding the religion of genuine fact? that we are not following "cunningly devised fables"? We must anchor on some undoubted fact. But is there any one test which settles the matter? What is that undoubted fact? Our test of a medicine is that it works the cure. Our test of wireless telegraphy is that it really sends the message across the ocean. Our test in religion is the same sort. The great fact that pins religion solidly down to certainty is the heart's own testimony: "I know I was blind, and now I know I see." A religion which has done nothing for a man's actual life is not a real religion. It is a concocted scheme which does not live in facts. He may preach it from the house tops, and proclaim it through Gath and Askelon, it is not the religion which made saints and martyrs. It is easy to be loud for circumcision (or some modern substitute for it), or to be still louder against it. But none of these things avail. They are beside the mark. They are like the theories of medicine before the discovery of blood circulation. The thing that counts is a new creation—the crucifixion of the old nature and the resurrection of a new man. Has that appeared yet in your life? That is a spiritual fact to fix upon. The religion which does that work in a man is from God and has the power of the ages in it. The air gets filled with chaff and dust, as men thrash over the old straw of theological controversy. Brothers, let us meantime go quietly ahead living on the clean pure wheat which feeds the life—the bread which cometh down from heaven whereof if a man eat he shall live.

GAINS AND LOSSES IN MEMBERSHIP.

As already reported, our gains by birth last year were 817; our losses by death 929, a balance on the wrong side of 112. At that rate birthright membership does not give us any promise of a future. We have another way of increasing our numbers which at present seems to offer rather more encouragement—we receive into membership those who are converted and convinced that our principles are true and right. There are among most of our meetings two recognized ways of receiving new members, viz.: by letter from other churches and by request on the part of those who previously had no church connections. By the former method, i. e., by letter, there have been 279 additions to our membership during 1902. During the same period 3,155 persons have been received by request, making the total additions other than by birth number 3,434. This is over five hundred more than were reported for the year previous and is a large gain in proportion to our numbers. Iowa Yearly Meeting leads all others in its additions by request, the number being 579. Indiana has almost as many, the additions by letter and request being 575. Kansas and Western report respectively 559 and 419.

Our losses are no more comforting than in former years. The figures still show an enormous leakage, and they indicate either that we take in persons who are not yet ready for membership or that we do not know how to feed the sheep and the lambs after they are once in the fold. Let the figures speak for themselves. We lost last year, by other ways than by death, 2,493 members. Three hundred and ninety-one of these asked for letters to other churches, where they are, let us hope, well cared for. The remaining 2,100 were either disowned (the exact number of disownments reported was 90), or "dropped" from the record books. Those who are "erased" or "dropped" without disownment proceedings are members who have lost their interest, grown cold, ceased to attend meetings, and thus cut themselves practically off from affiliation with the Church. It is possible that this somewhat easy method is sometimes too freely used, though it is hardly likely that meetings would dispense with members who gave any ground of hope that the meeting could be of use to them or they to it.

We must assume that there are at present more than two thousand of our members drifting away from us each year, drifting away not because they prefer some other religious associations, but because they have ceased to feel any deep and vital interest in religion altogether. The chances of ever reaching these persons again are extremely small, and we ought to realize that it is exceedingly serious business to have this happen year after year. No matter how perfect the church might be there would be some leakage, some drifting, but ought there to be so much as our figures show?

THE THREE PERIODS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF FRIENDS.

BY EDWARD GARDNER.

PREFACE.

The history of the Friends is divided into three distinct periods. The lines of division are not sharp, but the tendencies of each period are plain. In this thesis the first period, extending from the organization of the Society to 1718, is called the Formative, Aggressive period of Quakerism. This period was one of missionary work. Religion was of first importance to the early Quaker, and he was very earnest and active in his efforts to convert the world.

As time passed, business prosperity, the absence of persecution and a change in the spirit of the age dulled the keen edge of his religious life. Formality and the disposition to look backward rather than forward characterize the second period, the Period of Conservative Quakerism, extending from 1718 to the Separation in 1828. During this time, however, the Friends were very active in philanthropic work.

Their testimony against war was clear; they freed themselves from the curse of slavery and then began their crusade for its extinction everywhere. Rather as a matter of convenience the entire discussion of most of the important philanthropic movements of the Friends is given in this period only.

Toward the close of this period part of the Society were believed unsound in doctrine. This led to the Separation in 1828, and marks the beginning of a new era in Quakerism. This period extends to the present time, and is called the Revival of Quakerism. The Society renewed its activity, first in education, later in dropping obsolete customs and in adopting modern methods, and, what was of the greatest importance, in taking up home and foreign mission work, with something of its early zeal. Its mission is once more to spread the gospel.

It is intended in the pages that follow to discuss the leading characteristics of each period, and to present in one paper the historical development of the Society of Friends from its origin to the present time. The following are the most important books and pamphlets that have been consulted: "A History of the Society of Friends in America," by A. C. and R. H. Thomas; "George Fox," by Thomas Hodgkin; "The Friends," by William Beck; "Southern Quakers and Slavery," by S. B. Weeks; "The History of the Society of Friends in America," by James Bowden; "The Peculium," by Thomas Hancock; the reports of Friends' Conferences; "Portraiture of Quakerism," by Thomas Clarkson; "The True William Penn," by S. G. Fisher; "The Life of John Griffith," and "The Journals" of John Woolman, John Churchman and John Pemberton; "The Quakers as Makers of America," by David Gregg; "Primitive Quakerism and Christian Endeavor," by Prof. Elbert Russell; "Quakerism—Its Substance and Its Form," by Dr. Zaccheus Test, and "A Brief History of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends in America," by Mahalah Jay.

Especial acknowledgment is made to Prof. C. W. Hodgkin, Dr. Zaccheus Test and Eli Jay for their advice and assistance. The thoughts of the paper have nearly all been gathered from the sources mentioned, and it is quite likely that in some places the form of expression, even, has been followed. The children of Friends need to know more of the history of their Society than they do, and it is hoped that this paper may be of some use, in this way, to those who may read it.

THE FORMATIVE, AGGRESSIVE PERIOD OF QUAKERISM.

Stirring events mark the history of England during the first half of the seventeenth century. The contest between Crown and Parliament was long and fierce and resulted in the overthrow of Charles II., and the ascendancy of Oliver Cromwell, supported by a Puritan Parliament and a Puritan army.

Previous to this the Reformation had swept over England, but the Reformed Church had failed to satisfy the religious spirit of the people. Its communicants, who were loyal to the king, were gay in dress and manners and devoted to the pleasures of the world.

Puritanism was a revolt against the corruption of the Established Church. The Puritans went to the opposite extreme. They were austere in manner and severe in religious life and thought. They saw the terrible side of religion; they believed that God had fore-ordained the greater part of mankind to eternal punishment. On the one hand the Church of England depended too much on ceremonies and rituals; on the other hand, the Puritans attached too much importance to creed, sermons, confessions and external conduct.

It was an age of intense religious thought and activity. Besides the great churches, numerous sects sprang up, some of them with strange ideas of religion and strange modes of worship.

Protestantism, in its revolt from the Catholic Church, had failed to carry its principles to their logical conclusion. It had thrown off the supremacy of the Pope and the infallibility of the Catholic Church, only to receive the Bible with an almost idolatrous faith, and to be dominated by an oligarchy of its own choosing. Freedom of conscience, which was the inevitable result of the Reformation, was not yet granted, but was repressed by the combined power of Church and State.

In the midst of the bitter political strife and the fervid religious disputes and debates, the doctrine of the Society of Friends was announced. Old as the Scriptures from which it is drawn, it is remarkable for the man who brought it forth, for the zeal and fervor with which it was received, and for the immense influence, direct and indirect, which it has since exerted on the world.

The Friend, or Quaker, as he was called, believed himself to be the true representative of primitive Christianity; he opposed war, for he followed the Prince of Peace; he refused to swear, for his Master said, "Swear not at all"; he placed the clergy and the layman on the same plane, believing that every truly religious man was a priest of God; he demanded freedom of conscience and worship; he believed that woman was the equal of man, so he gave her the right to preach and half the meeting-house for her own; he adopted the plain language, because he believed in the brotherhood of man and was opposed to saying "you" to those high in rank and "thou" to inferiors as was the custom; for the same reason he was opposed to "hat worship," and kept his head covered in the presence of king or peasant. He was opposed to tithes, for his Master had said, "Freely ye have received, freely give"; he rejected all outward ordinance; he believed in the "Inward Light," the divine guide of conscience; he believed that inspiration is not limited to the writers of the Bible, but it is given in a measure to all men who will accept it, and that the man who correctly interprets the Scriptures must be guided by the Spirit that guided its authors. These were the cardinal principles of Quakerism as set forth by George Fox, its great founder.

George Fox, the son of godly parents, was born at Drayton in the Clay, in Leicestershire, England, in July, 1624. He was a serious-minded child, and at the age of 11 "knew pureness and righteousness." His parents thought at first to make him a priest, but he became the apprentice of a shoemaker who kept sheep, the care of these being given to Fox. Like his contemporary, John Bunyan, he loved solitude, and was of an intensely religious nature. Unlike Bunyan, his spiritual life did not begin with self-loathing and the sense of unforgiven sin. Both alike were pilgrims to the Celestial City; both were cast down by the sin and wickedness around them.

At the age of 19 Savonarola was seeking solitude, and three years later his depression and despair drove him into a cloister. At the same age Fox left home and broke off all communication with his family, and, for the next three or four years, he wandered from place to place, seeking the peace of God. At last the spiritual conflicts and the uncertain quest after God and His truth were dispelled by that close touch with Christ and direct revelation of Him that ever after characterized Fox and his followers.

In 1648 he began his missionary journeys, which lasted till his death in 1690, broken only by the many years spent in English prisons. During that time, like a prophet of old, he went forth with his message to Middle England, to Northern England, to Wales, Scotland, Ireland, Holland, Germany, to the British West Indies and to America. He wrote several religious books and addressed many letters to kings, magistrates and the people. Wherever he went people flocked to his meetings, and thousands accepted his doctrines and were converted by his preaching. During his later years he was not so active in traveling and preaching, but he performed the more important service of unifying his followers and perpetuating the Society, by devising that system of church government which, after more than two hundred years, still exists in all its essentials.

The character of George Fox was many sided. He combined rare good sense and executive ability with a deep spiritual nature. He endured imprisonment and persecution with grace and humility; he overwhelmed his adversaries in argument; he puzzled judges by his knowledge of law; with his hat on his head, he preached to Cromwell in his chamber and left with a friendly handshake from that great man. Whether enduring the beatings received at the hands of the mob, the abuse of arrogant judges, the insults of contemptible jailers, the horror of vile prisons, or defections in his own Society, he remained the same masterful enthusiast, pressing steadily forward in his great work of evangelization. "There is in broad Europe one free man," says Carlyle, "George Fox, the greatest of moderns,—he looks heavenward from his earth and dwells in an element of mercy and worship."

From 1648 to 1652 George Fox preached in the central part of England. He was met by criticism and by the hostility of the Puritans then in control of the churches and the government. He spent more than a year of this period in prison, but, while arousing much opposition, he was also gaining many adherents. Most of his converts were already Christians who were dissatisfied with the churches and were seeking a more spiritual kind of worship. Toward the close of this period he passed into Yorkshire, preaching to all classes and conditions of men. He was heard with interest and spoke from hillocks, in the market places, or to crowded congregations in the churches.

In the summer of 1652 he came into the neighborhood of Swarthmore Hall, in Northwestern England. "Like Mohammed's flight to Medina," says Thomas Hodgkin, "or Calvin's journey to Geneva, this visit marked a crisis in the history of a new religious movement." Before this the preaching of the Quaker missionaries, though earnest and powerful, had not built up an organized body of believers. But now, largely through the influence of Margaret Fell, the mistress of Swarthmore Hall, and her six daughters, Quakerism grew rapidly in the North of England.

Margaret Fell, herself a lady of high rank, was the wife of Judge Fell, who was a man of great influence. After hearing Fox preach a few times, she, with her daughters, was converted to the doctrine of The Friends. Margaret Fell was a woman of rare attainments. She was hospitable, influential, devout and loyal to her friends and to her religious convictions. The earnest band of missionaries which Fox gathered about him found a kind and sympathetic welcome in her home.

By 1654 there were sixty of these missionaries traveling over England. Nearly all of them were young in years and intensely eager for the salvation of men. They believed that Christ had visited every soul and by His Spirit was willing and anxious to bring it to Himself. It was this belief in a universal salvation and in the omnipresence of the Holy Spirit that led them everywhere, preaching the gospel. The rich and powerful, the lowly and ignorant were alike the objects of their earnest efforts. They preached to Cromwell, to the Pope and to the Sultan; with like zeal they labored in behalf of the Indian and the slave.

This missionary band itself was composed of men and women of great diversity in rank, education and character. Some of the missionaries were tradesmen, some had left the plow, some had been able preachers in other denominations, others were domestic servants, while still others were of the wealthy class. Primitive Quakerism appealed to all classes of men and gave new dignity and influence to its humblest follower.

As these missionaries went forth over the world, they were gladly received by many people. Organizations of the Society of Friends sprang up all over England. Yet, as has been said, England was in a state of unrest. Monarchy for the time being had given way to the Commonwealth under Cromwell. The Episcopal clergy had been displaced by the Nonconformists. Church and State were not, as in this country, separated, but politics and religion were blended. It was a time of plots, of excitement and of danger. Great was the courage needed by this earnest missionary band, for everywhere they faced the pillory, the whipping-post and the prison. Their power was feared by the preachers of the day. The Quakers would not take the civil oath and refused to remove their hats in the presence of the magistrates. Church and civil authorities working together persecuted and imprisoned the Quakers for these reasons, apparently, but in reality to prevent them from spreading their religious doctrines.

Few, if any, of these sixty missionaries escaped punishment. Noses were slit, ears were cut off, scourgings were administered and imprisonment, oftentimes in vile and unhealthy prisons, was imposed upon them. These missionaries seem to have been under no general control, but each minister went wherever he believed the Lord sent him. These preachers did a tremendous work. When the Spirit called they were ready to leave family and friends for other parts of England or for foreign lands.

"The missionary zeal of the early Friends," says Thomas, "has, perhaps, only been equaled in modern times by the Jesuits." As early as 1660 Germany, America, Florence, Mantua, Palestine, Tuscany, Italy, Rome, Turkey, Jerusalem, France, Geneva, Norway, Barbadoes, Bermuda, Antigua, Jamaica, Surinam and Newfoundland had been visited by the Quaker missionaries. These ministers went without remuneration, but in case they did not have means of their own, their necessary expenses were paid by the membership of the Society. These facts show that the Society of that period was an aggressive missionary organization.

PENELOPE GARDNER.

Penelope, daughter of Aaron and Mary Henley Hill, was born in Randolph County, North Carolina, Ninth month 11th, 1817. The home of her childhood was in a most beautiful part of the old North State, on the Uharee River, the region, as she used to say, "where the Muscadine grapes grow." This early home, with its pleasant surroundings and its godly influences, was much in her mind and conversation in the later days of her life, its memories bringing to her great comfort and pleasure.

Penelope Hill was given an education beyond the limits of the common school, and was for some years an able and successful teacher, thus helping to develop the executive power and calm self-reliance that so marked her character throughout life.

The influences of a Christian home and Christian surroundings resulted in her conversion in early youth, and for nearly three-quarters of a century she was a humble and devoted follower of the Lord she loved and served.

Penelope Hill and William Gardner were married in Uharee Meeting Fifth month 6th, 1841. They setbled in Guilford, but soon removed to Florence, where they lived until they came West, nearly twenty years later. This union was a most happy one. Penelope entered the ministry at Deep River Monthly Meeting of Friends in 1853, and for fifty years she performed the duties of a minister ably and faithfully; while William, to the end of his life, heartily supported and encouraged her in the work to which she had devoted herself.

They were deeply interested in education also, and in 1855 they established a school near their home at their own expense, erecting the building, employing the teachers, and providing necessary funds. This work they maintained till they left North Carolina, six years later.

PENELOPE GARDNER.

In 1861 they emigrated to Kansas, settling in Hesper, where they were soon joined by many relatives and other friends. This was their home for the rest of their lives. In her work as a minister, "Aunt Penelope," as everyone called her, went about much among the various meetings, often accompanied by her husband, strengthening, encouraging and building up others in the faith that was so precious to her.

They took a great interest in young people, and were always glad to help them to better things. It was not given them to rear children of their own; but, at different times, eleven children were taken into their home, and in comfort and thrift and in godly fear were brought to honorable and useful manhood and womanhood.

William Gardner died First month 19th, 1881. His loss was sorely felt in the meeting and in the community, but much more deeply by the one whose life he had shared for two score years. After the death of her husband, Penelope Gardner lived with her sister, Margaret Davis, also widowed, in a home not far from the Hesper Meeting House, where she continued her work as a minister until within a year of the end of her life. Many near relatives were about her, and to her life yet seemed full of comfort and blessing and opportunities for usefulness. When Hesper Academy was established she was one of the founders, and continued to be one of its liberal supporters.

Aunt Penelope's health began to fail seriously in the summer of 1902, and last Eleventh month she was brought to Lawrence to the home of her nephew, William G. Hill, and there passed beyond, Third month 11th, aged 85 years and six months.

In her days of weakness religious comfort did not fail her. The promises were with her, and she realized that her hope was "an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast." She had read the Bible through each year for thirteen consecutive years, and its precious truths were much in her mind and on her lips.

The unselfishness of a lifetime was with her to the end. Even in the last days of her sickness she was thoughtful of others, and the last sentence she uttered was, "The Lord bless my people." After days of pain came rest and peace; and at the last, with a clear mind and without fear, with the fullest hope and trust, her soul obeyed the summons that called her out of this world, in which her work had been so nobly done.

The life that is now ended was a long life, filled with helpfulness and good works; it was a sincere life, in every part ringing true to the voice of conscience and the religion that she professed; it was a beautiful life, lying in all its parts under the rich blessing of God and shining into the hearts of all who knew her; it was a life whose memory will abide, urging others to good works and fruitful endeavors.

Surely of such was the message to John in Patmos: "Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Funeral services were held at her late residence, after which her body was taken to Hesper, where a large concourse of friends and neighbors had assembled. Appropriate and impressive services were held, and she then was laid to rest Third month 15th, 1903, beside her husband in the cemetery at that place.

There's many a battle fought daily
The world knows nothing about;
There's many a brave little soldier
Whose strength puts a legion to rout,
And he who fights sin single-handed
Is more of a hero, I say,
Than he who leads soldiers to battle,
And conquers by arms in the fray.
—Eben E. Rexford.

Some Views on Present Topics.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

CARE FOR THE CHILDREN.

BY AMOS SANDERS.

I desire to offer a few thoughts toward the solution of a problem put before us in a recent issue. There are in almost every community of Friends the children of non-church members. Many of these can be induced to enter the Bible School and Junior Christian Endeavor. Experience shows that by far the larger number of those entering the Endeavor at from 7 to 12 years can be led to accept Christ as their Saviour and can be brought into the Church. This course at times does not meet with favor on the grounds that at this age they do not understand "Friends' principles," and that they are not able to determine what they will desire when they have reached mature years. Convincement comes very largely from association and training. It is true that the home life of non-members does not always allow the best opportunity for this training. Children, however, imitate those they admire and love. They admire those who express confidence in them and are kind and considerate of their welfare. This is the means by which birthright members are led to become "consistent Friends."

Carefully-prepared statistics show that 90 per cent. of all church members are converted or come into the Church through the Bible School, children's and young people's societies. This being true, it is the wise church that expends its larger energy upon the children. The writer was invited to attend a church meeting addressed by the members of the National Home Mission Committee of one of our largest and most conservative denominations. There were present many Sabbath School teachers. The following Sabbath being "Decision Day," the teachers were urged to spend the lesson hour leading the children to accept Christ as their personal Saviour preparatory to making a public confession and being received into the Church. The result was that a large number were gathered. Will they all make good Presbyterians? Probably not. But it is safe to say that many more will become steadfast Christians on account of it.

The Church should not only be an ingatherer, but should be a nurse as well. A very healthy child may starve to death. Caresses are good in their place, but it must have food suitable to child life. Not too much dandling, but a warm place with a well-regulated supply of the "milk of the Word" are the conditions of spiritual child-growth. It rests largely, under the Holy Spirit, with the Church whether children gathered from the outside make "good Friends."

The child world is the field of our hope. As a family without children is destined to extinction, so a church cannot perpetuate itself without a participating child membership. If present indications do not fail, a very prominent phase of the twentieth century church work is going to be a child harvest. If the Friends do not fall in line with this call of the Spirit, they can but suffer as an organization. In it is a partial answer both as to the question of our perpetuation and the increase of our birth-rate.

The Epistle to the Romans is the most difficult of Paul's writings. It is a great theological treatise, far more so than any of the other epistles, and it abounds in passages eloquent, but not always clear. It was written to a church which he had not founded, and which, at the time of writing the epistle, he had never seen. Still he had friends, and even kinsmen, living at Rome. See chapter 16: 7. From allusions in the epistle we learn that it was doubtless written at Corinth, Cenchrea being the seaport of Corinth (Rom. 16: 1, 23; also Acts 20: 2, 3; 1 Cor. 1: 14). It was dictated to one Tertius (16: 22), and was almost without doubt sent by Phœbe, the deaconess (16: 1). It was addressed to a mixed church; that is, one composed both of Jews and Gentiles (2: 17; 11: 13). There was probably a majority of Gentiles, though the Jewish Christians were evidently influential. There have been many claims that Peter was the founder of the church, but these rest on no solid foundation. It is far more likely that the church had no one founder, but that the gospel was carried thither by Jews or Hellenists of the Dispersion, who, visiting Jerusalem, had been converted to the Christian faith. That this is probably the case is shown by Acts 2: 10, 11. Compare Rom. 16: 7.

It is likely that the epistle to the Romans has done more to establish what is called "systematic theology" than any other book in the Bible. Like the other epistles, it has three distinct parts: The Doctrinal (1: 16 to 11: 36), the Hortatory (12: 1 to 15: 13), Personal (1: 1-15; 15: 14 to 16: 27). The present lesson is from the hortatory section, and the whole of chapter 13 should be read. It has been called "The Christian Citizen's Chapter." In the first part Paul dwells upon the duty of the Christian citizen to his rulers—to the civic government. When it is remembered what the character of the Roman Government was at that time additional interest attaches to his words.

7. "Render to all." All men, rulers or not, that which properly belongs to them, whether it be money, taxes, respect, or consideration. "Tribute." Taxes levied on goods and on persons. "Customs," that levied on goods. The idea of the verse is that due respect is to be given the "powers that be."

8. "Owe no man," etc. The previous verse leads on to the statement that all debts of all kinds are to be paid; love, however, cannot be repaid. It should be remembered that Paul in this chapter is speaking about the relations between man and man and the duties which flow from them. All these duties are summed up in the word love. Where true love exists the right kind of inter-relationship will soon prevail.

9. Paul repeats some of the commandments relating to the subject in hand. Note that genuine love for another would prevent the commission of any one of these sins.

10. The commandments are prohibitory—cast in the negative forms—but Love is positive. "Love to God is in fact the full acceptance of His will, His law; and love to others for His sake is therefore the sure way to carry out that law in its special precepts regarding duty to fellow-Christians and fellow-men.

11. "Knowing the time," etc. Paul seems to have thought that the coming of the Lord Jesus would not be very long delayed. This was a belief shared in by probably most of the early Church (compare 1 Pet. 4: 7; Rev. 22: 20). Paul in his later epistles speaks less surely than in his earlier. Compare Thess. and 2 Cor. 5: 1-10; Phil. 1: 23. "It is time for you at once to awake." "Salvation" here means the final and complete deliverance from sin. "When we first believed." R. V.

12. "The night." He compares the absence of Christ to a time of darkness like the night. 1 Jno. 2: 8. "Cast off." Compare Eph. 5: 11. "Put on." Paul was very fond of this metaphor. See 1 Thess. 5: 8; 2 Cor. 6: 7; Eph. 6: 13-17. Things that can only be done in the dark are not suitable for the Christian who is of the light.

13. "Let us walk becomingly as in the day." American Rev. Ver. Phil. 1: 27. "Not in revelling and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife, in jealousy." R. V. "The first two signify social excesses; the second excesses of the animal passions; the third, sins of combativeness." It was reading this and the following verse which so affected Saint Augustine as seeming to be a direct message to himself, that he was converted. In the original the word "drunkenness" is in the plural—it means, rather, "drinking bouts." The words "chambering" and "wantonness" are also plural, as if the apostle wished to include every kind of vice.

14. "But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." A continuation of the metaphor of verse 12. So put on the spirit of Christ as to reproduce it in your life. "Make not provision," etc. "Make not forethought of the flesh." To provide for the gratification of the animal appetites simply for their gratification is "to fulfill the lusts thereof."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. It should be noted that, while Paul counsels submission to the powers that be, he does not mean blind submission. Where questions of right and wrong are concerned the believer must refuse obedience. This position he and all the early Church maintained, even unto death.

2. The whole chapter is against self-indulgence of every kind.

TOPIC FOR FOURTH MONTH NINETEENTH.

THE SACRED SABBATH.

Matt. 12: 1-13.

Second-day, Fourth mo. 13.—Why instituted. Gen. 2: 1-3.
Third-day, Fourth mo. 14.—Shows God's goodness. Deut. 5: 12-15.
Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 15.—A type of heaven. Heb. 4: 4-9.
Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 16.—How Jesus kept it. Luke 4: 16-19.
Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 17.—An old-time defender. Neh. 13: 19-22.
Seventh-day, Fourth mo. 18.—In the early church. Acts 20: 7-12.

In the acts of God in the creation and in His words at Sinai the Jew found the basis for the day of rest, and from the Jew it has gone out to the civilized world. The Pharisee missed its spirit, as, doubtless, did the Puritan. Unspiritual or unequal conceptions of God are naturally followed by formal and distorted modes of worship, and right observance of the Sabbath is worship. Christ seemed to the Jews to override the very fundamentals of religious obligation because they had transposed means and end. They required to be taught that the Sabbath is for man, and not man for the Sabbath.

But Christ's "man" is not the depraved, willful pleasure seeker or wealth gatherer that too often demands the sacred day for his own uses. He is God's creation, and the verdict of religion and of science is that the seventh day is required not only for spiritual communion and refreshing, but for physical recuperation as well. "It is to-day substantiated beyond all question that man in the long run can produce more and better work by resting one day in seven than by continuous work." Workingmen are within bounds when they demand the weekly day of rest as an economic right, and the Church ought not to hesitate to join with them in efforts at protective legislation because they do not put their demands on grounds of religion. Christ's Sabbath ministry was to physical as well as to spiritual needs. To procure the cessation or the diminution of Sunday labor so far as it lies within our power, is a practical "good work" within the reach of each one.

The complexity of modern civilization comes in as a plea for a modified compliance with the teachings of the Scriptures; yet if omniscience (which includes prevision) is a proper characteristic of Deity, His word must be of continuing validity. If modern civilization is getting out of line with divine law, it is the civilization that needs adjustment, and not the law.

How do we aid ourselves in our "remembrance of the Sabbath day"? The voluminous and gaudy Sunday newspaper cannot be called a true mnemonic. The working of a force of machinists to overhaul the looms of a factory on the Sabbath to save working time does not accord with the idea of God; nor does the repairing of harness or husking out enough corn to feed through the next week, nor a multitude of so-called economies and indulgences. Sunday base ball and theater seem easily outside the mark; yet concerts and lectures and social amusements bridge the way by which many a departure is taken.

What benefits the individual without injury to his brother may rightly be enjoyed. To benefit our brother without injustice to ourselves is safely a Sabbath privilege—and Paul said, "I count nothing dear unto myself."

Missionary Department.

[Communications for this department should be addressed to Herman Newman, 718 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.]

AM I A CHRISTIAN OR NOT ?

Dr. De Forest, of Sendai, Japan, reports the following conversation recently had with an educated Japanese:

"I am a graduate of a Government College and studied two years in the Tokio University. I am now in business a hundred miles from here. I never heard a Christian sermon nor met a pastor nor missionary until to-day. This summer my attention was called to an English New Testament, which I read through with a great wonder. I was in trouble and this book seemed to promise divine aid, if I would only pray to God for help. I began to pray and He heard my prayer. Then I began to read the book through again. The miracles did not trouble me in the least, but my sins, for the first time, did. It was so terrible to see what I was that I contemplated suicide (how universal that is in Japan) to get rid of my despair. But the book seemed to teach that my life was not my own, and I had to abandon suicide. Then I found that God forgives sin, and I prayed for that. As I reviewed my past life it seemed that there was not a sin known on earth that I had not committed. In addition to my dissolute life, it came over me that stoning the windows of Christian churches in Tokio, which I used to do in fun, was a sin. Anyway, I saw no hope but in God's forgiveness, to whom I prayed and who has gloriously answered my prayers. It was so great and blessed a thing that I could not keep still, but practiced one day on my jinrikisha man to see if he could understand about God. And he got so interested that he came the next day to ask me to tell him more about God. Shortly after this I read Fiske's 'Idea of God,' and it shattered all my faith—it was a large way of looking at things. The God I had found was one who came very near to me and heard graciously my poor prayers. But Fiske's God was so large, filling the universe, that I felt he could not care for me any more. However, I rethought it all through with my Testament, and then it dawned on me that evolution needn't disturb my faith at all, and again I believed. Now I want to ask you a question: Am I a Christian or not? You are the first Christian teacher I have ever met, and I beg to know whether this new experience means that I am a Christian?"—"Bible Society Record."

NEWS FROM INDIA.

Sickness, plague, death; return of missionaries invalidated. This is our history at the present time, and we need your prayers greatly. Soon after my return to India the need of employing some of our women seemed urgent, and so gardening work was opened at Etarsi, and that none might be attracted who were not in need, only the sum of two cents a day was promised them. The work has taken much thought and active effort, working side by side with them, digging out terrible grass roots, with joints like mares' tails, each joint emitting roots. At 2 p.m. an hour is spent in sewing, repeating or singing hymns and Scripture, the while also a Bible lesson before their food, both these in the hottest part of the day. Food time is 12 o'clock.

Then plague broke out in Hoshangabad, and I found there was great anxiety about some of our young Christian women. Having lived so much among the people, it was far easier for me to nurse them than the others, so I offered to go and take charge of a plague camp. One after another, after days of nursing and giving us hope of recovery, they left us. The Mohammedan doctor, seeing how the young husbands cared for their wives and the way we cared for them, said "Almost I am persuaded to be a Christian," but alas, not quite! Five women, and then five men, died, and as no more cases appeared for eight days, I was able after a month to return to my work. It has been a sad time, and the town is pretty well emptied, people having fled in all directions, some even leaving relatives ill or dead in the houses; this, of course, spread the infection, and many died on their way—twenty to forty deaths a day.

Some of our Christian boys have endeared themselves to us by their willingness to help.

Christian servants at such a time as this make all the difference. So many have had all their servants leave them suddenly, but ours have stood by us. My two have taken extra work, cooking and keeping hot water for use night and day without grumbling, and keeping to their own tents, never going once to the town so that there should be no fresh infection brought to us. For this we praise our Heavenly Father.

We need prayer for some who have again heard the Saviour's call and yet seem careless, though the sorrows of death are round them; and for us that we may be faithful ministers of the Word, giving clear messages from the Master to them.

Two missionaries have to sail for England at once, with no prospect of return, through serious illness, and they are sorrowing and so are we, for we had looked forward to much work for and through them. Two more are invalided home, and one more in the country. Hence we are not strong for the work as we hoped to be. ANNA L. EVENS.

Educational.

FRIENDS UNIVERSITY.

The third annual debate between Friends' University and Cooper College of Sterling, Kan., was held on the evening of Third month 13th, at Friends University. The debate was won by Friends, notwithstanding several disadvantages, one of the team being almost too ill to appear. The question, "Resolved, That labor organizations are detrimental to public welfare," was supported on the affirmative by Wilbur Thomas, John Charles, W. L. Dunbar, of Friends University; on the negative by R. C. Wells, William Irving and Ralph Williams, of Cooper College. The speech by John Charles and the rebuttal by Wilbur Thomas were generally considered the best speeches of the evening. There was the usual amount of college excitement when the decision of the judges was rendered. A reception for the Cooper students was held in the spacious halls immediately following the debate.

The spring vacation occurred Third month 27th to 30th, inclusive. A large number of the students returned to their homes for the time. Professors Lucy Francisco and Daisy Dixon went to Lawrence, Kan.; Professor Truesdell to his home in Sterling, Kan.; the other members of the faculty remained in Wichita.

Several new students have enrolled for the last ten weeks' work, and more will enter after the vacation. Most of these are county teachers, coming in to take advance work.

The graduates for the spring number as follows: Eleven in the College department receive the degree, bachelor of arts; 10 in the School of Education, and 17 in the Preparatory School. Arrangements for commencement exercises are being made.

The seniors appeared at chapel recently wearing their new caps and gowns.

Friends University has now graduated two classes from the College department. It will, perhaps, be of interest to some to know what members of the alumni are doing. Of the class of 1901, Herman Newman, after a year at Haverford College, holds the position of assistant editor on THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Philadelphia; Cecil Howes is regular reporter on the Wichita "Daily Eagle"; John Howard is principal of the Friends Academy at Stella, O. T. Of the class of 1902, Benjamin W. Truesdell, after some graduate work at Chicago University, is professor of education at Friends University; Edna Goodwin is principal of the Friends' Academy at Friendswood, Tex.; Gordon Oldham has entered the Medical School of Johns Hopkins University; Henry Parker is in the Law School of Chicago University, and Leona Longstreth has gone as teacher to the Friends' mission school at Matamoras, Mexico.

The Haverford College Board has decided to cut up the old Grammar School building into quarters for students. The rooms will be very comfortable and convenient in all respects but one: they will involve a five minutes' walk to meals and to college exercises. In view of this inconvenience, the Board has concluded to reduce the cost of residence in this building to $350 or thereabouts. This sum includes board and tuition as well as room rent. Part of the building will be arranged for the residence of the family of a professor, and this will be occupied by Dr. L. W. Reid.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

"THE AMERICAN FRIEND is always welcomed and enjoyed in our home. I think it improves. I know it causes us to."
Amos Sanders, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Noah C. McLean is quite sick at Erie, Pa.

Nellie, wife of Levi D. Barr, is now at home in Los Angeles, Cal., much improved in health.

Warren Gardner has removed from Evans Mills Monthly Meeting, N. Y., to Auburn, N. Y.

H. D. Lane, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, was in Philadelphia the 31st ult., and called at the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

William A. Mowry, a well-known educator and writer, has written a telling tribute to the work done at Friends' School, Providence, R. I.

Largely through the work and influence of Hiram Hadley, a law has been passed in New Mexico requiring that all executions of capital punishment shall be in private.

Dewitt Foster, while visiting relatives at Augusta, N. C., held an appointed meeting on the evening of the 15th ult. His service was appreciated, especially by the young people.

The Training School for Christian Workers at Los Angeles, Cal., opened for the spring term with an increased attendance. The management expect to be in their new building for the fall term.

Both branches of Friends at Fishertown, Pa., will unite on Fourth month 13th, 1903, in celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of Dunning's Creek Monthly Meeting.

The beautiful lines from Whittier on the cover of our issue of Third month 26th, will be found in his poem, "Lines to Lydia Maria Child," which is published in the Cambridge edition of his works, page 205.

Our friend, Gertrude Cartland, is about to change her home from Newburyport, Mass., to Amesbury, where she will live near the Friends' Meeting House, and near the home of John G. Whittier, who was her cousin.

Thomas Armstrong expects to leave Long Beach, Cal., Meeting at yearly meeting time, and take up his residence at Whittier, Cal. His long service in Whittier and Long Beach Meeting has been very successful.

J. B. Rayner has opened at Calvert, Texas, a Bureau for Temperance and Prohibition Enlightenment Among the Colored People of the South. This work will be reported monthly in the "Union Signal" and "New Voice."

In the items of Third month 26th the one relating to the W. C. T. U. contest at Ogden, Cal., should read Ogden, Ohio, and the one concerning the Christian Endeavor union service at Ogden and Beach Grove, Cal., should be Ogden, Ohio.

In a ten-day meeting, recently held at Valley Mills, Ind., the resident minister, Anna Mills, was assisted by ministers and workers from Indianapolis Meeting, among whom were Albert J. Brown and John D. Shearman. Definite good was accomplished.

Notwithstanding the frequent stormy periods which have been very severe this winter, David Sampson has not failed to visit Augusta. He was in attendance in the Bible School and meeting, Third month 8th, and also held two appointed meetings. His service was very helpful and inspiring.

Seneca H. Stephens, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and David Sampson, visited Augusta, N. C., the 29th ult. The very inclement weather prevented any appointed meetings being held, but the few who were favored to meet with these Friends were refreshed and strengthened.

"Opportunities in the Path of the Great Physician," by Valeria Fullerton Penrose, which was reviewed in our issue of Third month 26th, by Elizabeth C. Winn, is now in a second edition. It is a very important contribution to present-day missionary literature, and is published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.

The China Band (fourteen in number) conducted the services in Friends' Meeting, Los Angeles, Cal., the 22d ult. Charles Stalker was also present, and had service. Much good was accomplished. Some were reclaimed, and others decided for Christ. The meeting lasted nearly all day. The China Band left for their native home on the 27th ult.

Portland, Ind., Monthly Meeting was held the 28th ult. A committee of Winchester Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight was present; also Friends of White Oak and Olive Branch Monthly Meetings. One person was received into membership, and one was released by certificate. E. C. Thornton and Rosa Thorpe were re-appointed clerks.

The Bible School Committee of New England Yearly Meeting met by invitation at the home of the superintendent, Thomas Wood, on the 21st and 22d ult., where they were delightfully entertained in his hospitable home. Reports from the various schools were taken up and discussed, and plans laid to assist and encourage such schools as need help.

West Lake Quarterly Meeting was held at Bloomfield, Ont., the 7th and 8th ult. Some were prevented from attending on account of bad roads; however, the meetings were spiritually refreshing. Walter Armitage, from Moscow Meeting, and William I. Moore, from Carleton Street Meeting, Toronto, were present and spoke. Some consideration was given to the advisability of changing the time for holding the quarterly meeting in order to secure more seasonable weather.

There has been such a demand for "The Holders of Holder-ness," life of Christopher Holder, the pioneer Quaker, which was issued solely for the Holder family, that to accommodate the libraries and the public a large edition will be issued and the books sold at exact cost. The book was published by Frank T. Holder, a prominent and wealthy Friend and ex-president of the Alexander Smith Carpet Co., of Yonkers, N. Y., who defrayed the large expense merely on account of his interest in the society.

Dewit Foster and Robert Pelt, late from Ohio, have been laboring for some time in their native State, North Carolina. They have had gospel service in Newse Monthly Meeting, Oakland, Nahunta, Rhodes, a new meeting belonging to Woodland Monthly Meeting, and Woodland. Their labors were attended with success, and many were awakened to a Christian life. As a result of the last two meetings twenty-six new members were added to Friends. These new members were given a hearty formal welcome by the older members at the monthly meeting, held at Woodland, the 21st ult.

At the annual Oregon State oratorical contest, recently held, and participated in by eight colleges and universities, Lucy Gause, of Pacific College, the only lady contestant, won second place, there being a margin of but one point between her and the winner. The next in rank was ten points below her. The subject of her oration was, "The Spirit of John Marshall." For the last three years Pacific College has held the highest rank in oratory of any institution in the State.

Berkeley Meeting is situated just across the bay from San Francisco, and at the gates of the University of California. With 170 members, made up of teachers, students, mechanics, professional and business men, with their families, the opportunity is one of the greatest that faces Friends anywhere. Such a situation has been made possible largely through the devoted labors of Addison and Rebecca Naylor, and others. The resident minister, Herbert T. Cash, is being greatly blessed in this increasing field of usefulness. He is supported by a splendid corps of workers. It is hoped that Friends who may pass through San Francisco will remember Berkeley Meeting.

Luke Woodard and wife, after serving two years and a half in Poplar Ridge Meeting, N. Y., have resigned their position, and are expecting soon to return to their home in Fountain City, Ind. All persons wishing to communicate with them in the future should address them at the latter place. Their separation from the work at Poplar Ridge is with mutual feelings of fellowship, and many in the meetings are saddened by the change. As a token of esteem a public farewell reception was given at the meeting-house on the evening of the 27th ult., when some handsome and valuable presents were given. A large company assembled on the 29th to hear Luke Woodard's farewell address.

The school work at Augusta, N. C., has been very encouraging this year. Notwithstanding the four months of public school in the immediate vicinity, the parents have shown their appreciation of a better system of instruction by sending some of their children to the denominational school. The pupils also manifest a worthy interest. Month by month the average attendance has steadily increased. At the close of the Blue Ridge Mission their primary teacher, Sallie C. Marshburn, was transferred to Augusta to assist during the closing weeks of this year, and it is hoped that this will open the way for a still larger school next fall. This school occupies a position in a frontier field in North Carolina Yearly Meeting, and deserves the sympathy and prayers of Friends.

BORN.

GREGORY.—At Berkeley, Cal., to Ernest L. and Effie F. Gregory, a daughter, Third month 18th, 1903, named Lydia Catharine Gregory.

DIED.

BRANSON.—At Philadelphia, Third month 16th, 1903, Mary Ellis, widow of Thomas Branson, in the 89th year of her age. She was a beloved member and elder of Philadelphia Monthly Meeting for the Western District.

CLARK.—At Washington, D. C., Third month 23d, infant daughter of Lindley D. and Dora B. Clark.

HOBBS.—At the residence of her daughter, Mary Davis, in Knightstown, Ind., on Third month 23d, 1903, Zalinda Hobbs, widow of Dr. Wilson Hobbs, and daughter of Achilles Williams, of Wayne Co., Ind., aged 78 years. She was a birthright member of the Society of Friends, an active worker in the meeting, and in her earlier days useful in the temperance cause.

MENDENHALL.—At the home of her daughter, Obaetta M. Welch, Harveysburg, O., Third month 5th, 1903, Jane H. Mendenhall, daughter of Isaac and Nancy Harvey Edwards, and widow of Obadiah Mendenhall, in her 65th year. She was a birthright Friend and a consistent Christian.

BOOK REVIEWS.

"Source Readers in American History." By Albert Bushnell Hart, with the collaboration of Blanche E. Hazard. The Macmillan Co., New York. Vol. I., "Colonial Children." Price, 60 cents. Vol. II., "Camps and Firesides of the Revolution." Price, 60 cents.

Modern educators are beginning to realize that individual consciousness has a growth and an unfolding just as the flowers or as the human body, and that there are stages in this process in which certain kinds of thought food are imbibed and retained with greater relish and less effort than at others. Thus the child delights in finding birds' nests and in watching the antics of young animals, while later in life he is ambitious to become popular with his fellows. These different tendencies probably never become entirely dormant, but they have their times of special activity, and, if cultivated at that period, will grow rapidly amounting at times to genius.

It is a well recognized fact that the average child of ten or twelve is curious to know about new peoples, and is thrilled with stories of adventure. Books containing such information are especially interesting during this period. The young mind craves such knowledge. It is this need which the authors and editor of the "Source Readers in American History" strive to meet.

The first of this series of books is "Colonial Children." The material for this work is taken from old letters and records written by people who were eye-witnesses of the scenes described. This gives the work vividness and freshness, and helps the reader to catch the spirit of the times. The early dealings with the Indians, adventures with wild animals in the new world, and the discoveries of strange plants and trees are brought forward with the enthusiasm of the early adventurers. The training of Indian boys and girls and the schools of New England and Virginia in colonial times appeal especially to modern pupils by way of contrast, and they form an excellent background for the future study of more extended histories.

"Camps and Firesides of the Revolution" is the second volume in this series. It contains nearly a hundred selections from the pens of those who lived about the time of the war for independence. The work opens with a chapter on "Home Life," which begins with a letter from Hannah Penn on "Thrifty Quaker Housekeeping." Then follow sketches describing "social evenings," "fashionable dress," "young Yankees frolicking," etc., all of which reveal human nature with its joys and trials, much the same as it is to-day. The chapter on "Highways and Byways" is almost a revelation to the modern child who is accustomed to "Pullman sleepers," "trolley cars," "bicycles" and "automobiles." The Indians appear not so much tribes of strangers as scattered groups of ignorant, unruly neighbors, who are constantly being imposed upon. The stories from the French and Indian war tell how the colonists learned their strength, and were made bold to show their independence. The closing chapters beautifully illustrate how there was too much free life and healthy adventure enjoyed and idealized at the firesides of our forefathers for them to quietly submit to what they believed to be oppression.

SMILES

Good Cheer and Good Food go Together.

Improper feeding is the source of most human ails. Sick people don't laugh much. It is the healthy and strong who see the sunny side of everything. Pure, scientific food will correct most ailments and bring laughter and good cheer in place of sickness and gloom.

The wife of a physician at Dayton, O., says: "Before I had finished the first package of Grape-Nuts, which I got at the urgent request of a friend of mine several months ago, I was astonished to find I was less nervous over small matters and worried less over large ones, laughed more readily and was at all times more calm and contented than I had ever been in my life. I found also that the hollow places in my neck and shoulders were filling out, and that astonished me, as I had always been very thin, as women with starved nerves are apt to be.

"After a time I discontinued the use of Grape-Nuts for two months, and found the old symptoms return at once. I went back to the use of the food again and feel well and strong. I can increase my weight at will from five to ten pounds a month by using more or less of the food. Before I was married I was for five years a trained nurse, and I have never in all my experience seen anything to act as quickly and favorably as this scientific food." Events and Comments.

An earth shock of unprecedented violence was experienced at Jerusalem one day last week. The entire population was panic-stricken, but the damage done was slight.

The Austrian War Minister has forbidden all army officers to join the anti-duelling league and has directed all retired army officers who are members of the league to resign.

The Supreme Court has handed down a decision in the so-called lottery cases, affirming the power of Congress to prohibit the sending of lottery tickets from one State to another by express or other means.

King Oscar of Sweden resumed the reins of government last week, thus terminating the regency of the Crown Prince, Gustave, which began First month 27th, in consequence of the King's ill-health.

In compliance with an act passed just before the adjournment of Congress, the first of the new Philippine coins has been struck. It is a one-peso piece, worth about fifty cents in our money, and is about the size and weight of a silver dollar.

An agreement has been made by the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Lehigh Valley, the Lackawanna, the Erie, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, to issue interchangeable mileage books. The agitation for these mileage books has been going on for a number of years.

The Popocatepetl volcano, which includes immense sulphur deposits in its crater, is reported to have been sold to an American syndicate in which the Standard Oil interests are largely represented, for $5,000,000. The purchasers intend to build a cogwheel railroad up the mountain and operate the sulphur deposits on an extensive scale.

The bartenders of Chicago have formed a total abstinence society. They say they have adopted total abstinence in self-defense and in the interest of their employers. Fully one-third of the bartenders and saloon owners of Chicago are said to be abstainers. In many of the large saloons the proprietors will not employ a man who drinks. A similar movement has been started in Jersey City.

Four acres of automobiles, massed in ranks thirty wide and ten deep, saluted Emperor William at the close of parade of these machines in Berlin.

A political phenomenon has occurred in the Central American State of Salvador. General Regalado handed over the presidency last month to General Pedro Jose Escalon, who was declared elected on Second month 19th. This was the first peaceful transfer of the presidency in fifty years, and has caused great rejoicing throughout the country.

The recent growth of the telephone business as brought out in the annual report of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company for the last calendar year is of most noteworthy proportions. Its total gross earnings last year amounted to $13,277,457, against $11,606,817 in the previous year; and the number of telephones have increased from 1,952,412 in 1900 to 2,525,606 in 1901, and 3,150,320 in 1902.

Nothing has done more to stimulate emigration from Great Britain to the farm lands of the Canadian Northwest than the reports of the American emigration into the same region. This is advertisement enough, and the stream from Liverpool this year is estimated at no less than 10,000 souls. South Africa, meanwhile, is being ignored by the British immigrant, and the expectations so sedulously fanned during the Boer war now serve only to deepen disappointment.

More than a million acres of land in California will be opened to settlers within a few days. This is situated between the Needles and Mojave, and borders on the Colorado River. Much of it is agriculturally valuable. The Southern Pacific has selection privileges in this great tract. Its throwing open is the result of the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court with respect to the famous grant made to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad by act of Seventh month, 1866.

Sportsmen all over the country, and especially in the Northwest, are looking forward to President Roosevelt's Western trip in the hope that it will have a far-reaching effect on the big game situation. The President knows much about big game, and especially about deer and elk, for he has hunted them many times, and understands how necessary it is to protect them, especially now when the elk are growing fewer each year and promise soon to become extinct.

Affairs at Monastir, Macedonia, are becoming daily more serious, and there are frequent assassinations by agents of the committees and by exasperated Muselmans. A mysterious "internal organization" exercises supreme influence on the Bulgarian population of the villayet, and preparations for a rising are being rapidly pushed by a large number of peasants armed with rifles. One battle has been fought in which a thousand men are reported to have been killed and wounded.

In seven years the number of persons carried by the railways of the United States has fallen off by twelve millions. At the same time the average distance traveled had risen from twenty-three and one-half to twenty-eight miles. More passengers by hundreds of millions are

PRIZES TO COOKS.

$7,500.00 in Cash to be Distributed.

Between now and July 1st, family cooks, whether employees or the mistress of the household, will be following the plan laid down for improvement in cooks in a contest for 735 cash prizes, ranging from $200.00 to $5.00, offered by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.

The winners must show improvement in general cookery as clearly stated in the rules for the test.

No one has to buy or pay anything whatever. It is simply an earnest effort on the part of Mr. Post to stimulate the household cook to more careful and skillful cookery.

To have light, sweet bread and cakes instead of heavy, sour and indigestible things. To have no more greasy, burned or dried-out meats. To have properly made coffee, Postum and tea. To have delicate and digestible, toothsome desserts and a table, clean, tasty and a pleasure to look upon.

And so $7,500.00 in actual money will be spent to encourage the cooks of the country to better effort. And you housekeepers, please forever abandon the term "hired girl." Teach your cook the dignity of her profession; call her the cook.

If her duties include other service, well and good, but don't detract from her professional title by calling her the "hired girl." That term don't fit a good cook. A certificate bearing the large seal of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., will go to each of the 735 winners in this contest. These certificates or diplomas will be as valuable to the holders as a doctor's sheepskin is to him.

A postal card to the Cookery Department, No. 412, of the big pure food factories of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., at Battle Creek, Mich., will bring a sheet of plainly printed rules for the contest.

traveling than ever before, but the steam railroads are not carrying the increase. The growth in the length of the average passenger haul on those roads means that they are steadily losing the short-haul business, which a younger and more vigorous rival, "the trolley," is claiming for its own.

A MISSIONARY'S DIFFICULTY.

Missionaries in India encounter no little difficulty in explaining the teachings of Christianity so the natives will understand them, as some of the most beautiful passages of the Bible are rendered almost ludicrous by translation. A returned missionary tells of the efforts of a young Hindu Bible student to render "Rock of Ages, cleft for me,

Let me hide myself in Thee," into the native dialect. The result of his labors translated back into English was about like this:

"Very old stone, split for my benefit,

Let me absent myself under one of your fragments."

—"Buffalo Commercial."

Here are some examples of what the British school boy can do when he tries hard:

"John Wesley was a great sea captain. He beat the Dutch at Waterloo, and by degrees rose to be Duke of Wellington. He was buried near Nelson, in the Poets' Corner at Westminster Abbey."

"The Sublime Porte is a very fine wine."

"The Possessive Case is the case when somebody has got yours and won't give it to you."

"The plural of penny is twopence."

The effect of coffee on brain workers is more injurious than on those who work with their hands, but still the hard physical worker is often seriously hurt with coffee.

A man from Mead, Wash., says: "Coffee drinking had a different effect on my wife than on me; it ruined her nervous system and put her in very bad condition that way. With me my nerves seemed to be all right, but my stomach was disordered, and I was suffering from dyspepsia from drinking coffee, so finally we concluded to begin using Postum instead of coffee.

"In a very few days the dizziness and headaches that she had suffered with more or less, disappeared, and her nerves kept getting better and my dyspepsia left; now I can eat anything. I have noticed that in hard work in the harvest field the days when I used coffee I was not near so strong and vigorous as when I used Postum.

"I have had many chances to prove, and have proved that Postum is far and away better for me than coffee, besides I am well now, and while I was using coffee I was half sick." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

*A roadway carpeted with palms and flowers,
A welcome shouted by the eager throng;
A thousand voices sing in David's song,
"Messiah comes, the nation's king and ours!"*

*Shouts, songs, and palms! Yet, as the week goes by,
The shouts are silenced and the palms are dry,
Till that last day, when blackness shrouds the sky,
And those who shouted then to-day cry, "Crucify!"*

*A cold dark morning and a new-made tomb;
Three weeping women groping through the gloom,
To dress a corpse from which the life has gone:
"And who shall roll away for us the stone!"*

*Only one streak of twilight, cold and gray,
Whitens the east and gives a hope of day;
But see, it mounts the heavens! "The sun, the sun!"
See for the world Eternal Life begun.*

HELPING GOD ANSWER PRAYER.

"LET me have the key to the storeroom, father, and I will answer your prayer," was the somewhat wise remark of a little boy whose father had prayed that the Lord would help and feed the poor people of the neighborhood. We are all much too apt to forget that our work is by no means done when we have said our prayers. It really has only just begun, for nobody can pray truly without taking up the task of helping God answer the prayer. Take Christ's model prayer as an example of what it means to pray; "Hallowed be thy name" is the first request. But how is God's name to be hallowed? It is not something God can do without us; it is something which the man who prays has to do himself. It is a pledge of the soul to make not only this prayer but the whole life manifest the holiness of the Divine Nature. If the world ever discovers the holiness of God it will be through us, and when we come to Him with our own needs we should begin with the prayer that we may rise to an appreciation of what the divine and holy name means.

That is a fit prelude to the great words which have already risen from millions of hearts: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done." When will the kingdom come? Never, so long as we ask for it as though we had nothing more to do with its coming. The next sentence tells what the kingdom is: "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." That means that the sway and rule of God in our lives is the kingdom. It has come when God's will is done by us and in us. We ask for its coming, and then we join in the great task of winning the divine victory. We make our lives contribute to His great ends. As soon as the victory is won in a single one of our lives, as soon as one of us makes God's will our will, in that spot of the earth where we live the kingdom has come. To pray for it is to join with God in bringing it. He cannot answer this prayer unless we help Him answer it. Does not that partly explain why, after nineteen hundred years of the daily repetition of the Lord's prayer, the results seem so meager?

The same deep truth is clear in the rest of the prayer, where the request is for simple, common, human needs—food, forgiveness, guidance, strength. We ask for daily bread, but meantime we co-operate to the best of our strength to make the fields yield the harvest, and we should not praise the faith of the strong man who should rise from his knees after saying this prayer and spend his working day in a comfortable chair at home. That we should call tempting God. We are "co-laborers with God" in filling the basket and store. We ask His help and join with Him in winning what we seek. The prayer for forgiveness shows how much is expected of us. What a solemn thing to ask! "Forgive us as we forgive!" What a heavy readjustment of life that prayer demands! If we are to have the joy of God's forgiveness we are to bring to Him a forgiving heart. It is our task to bring our life up to the level of our words. His forgiveness comes to us just as far as we co-operate with Him in bringing it. Is it not so also with that cry for freedom from temptation? We may not pray that God would keep us from testings and temptings, if we ourselves go where we are almost sure to fall into them. To say, "Lead me not into temptations" ought to mean a corresponding effort to shun primrose paths that are sure to lead where dangers lurk. "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world," the same Saviour says elsewhere. In the world our life is to be. But we are to join with Him in making it a life not of the world. When the tempter has caught us, the prayer will be, "Deliver us from evil," but even here we have our part to do. God drags no man out of the slough against his will. He carries no one up the shining heights without the toil of knees and heart and hands. Deliverance He certainly has for us. But we are to help Him win this greatest battle of our lives—the battle of Armageddon, where the beast is conquered and the new name comes out in the forehead.

THE DRINK TRAFFIC.

THERE can be no question that there has been a rather startling increase in the use of alcoholic drinks in the last few years. The custom of drinking at dinners is growing steadily, and there are numerous comments current upon the amount of drinking which is indulged in by women in almost all walks of life. Those who travel are constantly surprised to find how many persons order drinks served with their meals, and between meals as well.

This impression is confirmed on all hands by official figures. "The American Grocer" reports that the annual bill for "stimulating beverages" has reached the enormous total of $1,369,098,276, which is $129,989,281 more than the average expenditure for the last five years. This bill, it must be remarked, includes non-alcoholic drinks which stimulate, such as tea, coffee and cocoa. The total cost, however, of these mild stimulants is only $196,533,041. "The Literary Digest" has figured that the nation's drink bill last year cost $17.33 for each individual man, woman and child, which would be about 4.7 cents apiece each day of the year. The same periodical shows that the users of alcoholic drinks spend an average of $69.32 per capita for intoxicants, which would be about 19 cents apiece each day of the year. "The New York Press" has calculated that the rate of consumption of alcoholic beverages per capita went from 17.90 gallons in 1901 to 19.48 gallons in 1902, though it is recognized that the increase has been largely in the use of beer and wine rather than of distilled liquors.

There are a few facts which offset this gain in the use of intoxicants and from which we may extract a crumb of comfort. The bar which has so long disgraced us in the National Capitol is at last removed, let us hope forever, and our lawmakers will at least be compelled to go outside the legislative halls for such drinks. There is a sounder sentiment in Maine in favor of the rigid enforcement of the law than has existed for years, and the State Legislature has again this winter pronounced by an overwhelming vote to continue the method of exclusion. The moral sentiment is the greatest possible gain, and if the present determination can be maintained and the law can be enforced, it might turn the tide at a time when a temperance victory is desperately needed. New Hampshire and Vermont have gone out of the prohibition column and are now local option States. The condition of enforcement was, however, so bad that the change means little immediate loss for the temperance cause. By a tremendous protest from the best people all over the State, New Hampshire was saved from the enactment of a bad license law, and secured a good local option law. In Vermont the situation is far from hopeful for the present, as a great number of the towns have voted for license. Altogether there is much to keep the temperance worker humble, and, if he had only human support, even discouraged. But this may be counted on, as sure as the planets in their orbits, the saloon is hostile to all true human interests, and in the years of God it is a doomed institution.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

OUR friend, Eliza B. Chase, daughter of Pliny Earle Chase, of revered memory, has performed a valuable service for all who travel in Eastern Canada, and for many more who belong to the great class of fireside travelers. In her "In Quest of the Quaint" she describes regions close across our northern border, which, though of great charm, are as yet comparatively little known. The Lower St. Lawrence, Bay Chaleur, Lake Huron, formed the field of her investigation, and artists, teachers, sportsmen and other vacationers might be grateful for such a guide and memento of holiday times. Simple and rhythmic old canoe songs—some handed down from earliest settlers, were jotted down as the author heard them; and in her translations she endeavors to retain the character of these voyageurs' chansons. There are many legends—obtained in French from old residents and not hitherto published—which add their fascination to the scenes; and items of general interest, history, and statistics, are interspersed. The numerous illustrations and the cover design are from water-color and pencil sketches by the author. The book is published by Ferris & Leach, Philadelphia, and will be sent postpaid for $1.50.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING begins at the Arch Street meeting house on Second-day morning, the 20th of this month. It has been in many respects an eventful year in the history of the yearly meeting, on account of the labors of the committee which was appointed one year ago, and the sessions which are approaching will undoubtedly be occasions of more than ordinary interest. The afternoon and evening meetings will be held as usual at the meeting house on Twelfth Street, a full program of which is given in another column of the paper.

THE THREE PERIODS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF FRIENDS.

BY EDWARD GARDNER.

With the visit of Anne Austin and Mary Fisher to Boston in 1656, the Quaker doctrine and the Quaker character began their invasion of America. These two devoted women were cruelly treated by the authorities of Boston, and as soon as possible they were sent back to England. Other missionaries came almost immediately, and there began in free America that long drama of persecution and punishment by the authorities of Massachusetts and most of the other colonies. This was met on the part of the Quakers by persistent efforts to preach the gospel and patient endurance of the indignities heaped upon them.

The common people did not share with their rulers in their dread of the Quakers, but this was an additional cause for increased bitterness and activity of the authorities. Massachusetts, the stronghold of Puritanism, resorted to the most severe measures in order to keep Quaker doctrine from gaining a foothold. When other punishment failed to quench the zealous spirits of the Quakers, scourging was resorted to, ears were cut off, tongues were bored, and even the death penalty was inflicted on three men and one woman.

Through it all the Friends here, as in other colonies, led, as they believed, by the Holy Spirit, continued to preach and to suffer, gaining converts everywhere. In the course of ten years the most severe punishments were abandoned; it was not till 1724, however, that full religious liberty was finally obtained in Massachusetts, when the English Government interfered to prevent Friends from being fined and imprisoned for refusing to pay taxes for the support of the clergy.

The Jerseys, falling into the hands of Friends, were settled and controlled by them. It was in Pennsylvania, however, that the "holy experiment" of ruling a great commonwealth on the principles of justice, love and peace was to be successfully demonstrated. Pennsylvania was purchased of Charles II. by William Penn in 1681, and thrown open to settlers of every religious belief. Friends, especially, from England and the Continent, emigrated to Pennsylvania so rapidly that in 1700 it was one of the most prosperous of all the English colonies.

The period from 1682 to 1754, during which The Friends had control of affairs, was called "The Golden Age of Pennsylvania." During that time no outbreak of the Indians occurred, and the principles advocated by The Friends were carried out in a practical manner throughout the colony. "While William Penn's principles prevailed," says Clarkson, "or the Quakers had the principal share in the government, there was no spot on the globe where, number for number, there was so much virtue, or so much true happiness, as among the inhabitants of Pennsylvania."

In England the history of The Friends during the Protectorate and throughout the reigns of the Stuart kings is a story of almost unparalleled devotion, enthusiasm and patient suffering. With the accession of Charles II. an act of Parliament prohibited all meetings for worship other than those in the Established Church, as gatherings dangerous to the peace of the realm. Refusal to take the oath of allegiance and supremacy involved the penalty of imprisonment for life or at the king's pleasure.

As Friends refused to take the oath because of their religious convictions, and, as, unlike other Non-conformists, they held their religious services boldly and with open doors, the persecution against them was redoubled through the efforts of their enemies or of the tyrannical adherents of the Crown. During the twenty-five years of the reign of Charles II. thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-two Friends were imprisoned in the terrible prisons of England; one hundred and ninety-eight were transported beyond the seas, and three hundred and thirty-eight died in prison or of wounds received in violent assaults which were made in order to break up their meetings.

With the accession of William and Mary to the throne, persecution of the Quakers gradually ceased, and the most strenuous period of their history was completed. As has already been intimated, George Fox spent the last fifteen years of his life not so much in active missionary work as in planning and developing a comprehensive system of government for the large and growing Society of Friends. Disorders and a tendency towards disorganization arose about this time which threatened the very existence of the Society. One of these schisms will be discussed on a future page.

Through the system of yearly, quarterly and monthly meetings which was developed, the unity and strength of the Society were preserved and a wise and efficient authority was created in each meeting. This authority restrained the impetuous members, corrected and disciplined the erring ones, and strengthened and encouraged those who were timid. This system of government has been moderately successful. Its weakest element has been the practical independence of the several yearly meetings. Those that have adopted the Uniform Discipline will now be under one general organization. This will certainly strengthen the Society and make it a unit in purpose and action.

William Penn was one of the most distinguished and influential of the early Friends, and took an active part in the history of the Society. He interceded at court on behalf of imprisoned Friends, and so great was his influence with Charles II. that he secured the release of hundreds of these unfortunate people. He accomplished the great purpose of his life in establishing a powerful colony where freedom of worship was granted to every man. His death, which occurred in 1718, seems to coincide, approximately, with the close of the first period in the development of the Society of Friends.

The Society had now been in existence about three-quarters of a century. From a mere handful it had extended itself over England and Wales; Scotland, the storm center of Puritanism, had felt its impress, and a Scotchman, Robert Barclay, was the most powerful and logical writer The Friends have ever produced. It had established itself in Germany and Holland, and, crossing the Atlantic Ocean, had found a home in the West Indies. It had landed on the rock-bound shore of New England, and had succeeded in softening the stern New England heart. It had made converts among the cavaliers of Virginia; it had been welcomed to Rhode Island; it was influential in the legislation of the Jerseys and Maryland; it was in control of Pennsylvania, and had been established in the remaining English colonies.

Statistics of that period are uncertain, but it is estimated that in 1700 there were 66,000 Friends in England and Wales. The population of Pennsylvania at the time of Penn's death is placed at 40,000, half of the inhabitants being Friends, and it is thought that in 1760 there were at least 50,000 Friends in America. Consequently, it is safe to estimate the whole number of Friends at the time of Penn's death at 90,000.

It was an aggressive period. The Friends had thrived on persecution. The spiritual life of a people ready to suffer and to die for their religion, we may be assured, was of a keen, active and elevating nature. The Quaker Church at this time was in the flush of vigorous life. It may well have looked forward to the evangelization of the world and to the universal dominion of Christ's Gospel of peace, mercy and benevolence.

Thus far in their short history the Friends had demonstrated two great and important truths to the world. First, by the settlement and successful control of Pennsylvania they had shown that it is possible to conduct a government in accordance with the teachings of Christ. The civilized world of to-day is slowly coming to their standard of ethics and to their fundamental doctrine of peace as a basis for government. Second, in their conflict with the authorities for their religious liberty, they showed the tremendous power of a people ready to follow the highest dictates of conscience, and ready to suffer in meekness until bigotry and tyranny have worn themselves out and are willing to give up the unequal struggle. "It was the cheapest victory England ever had won for her liberty because it was a victory that ended in love, and held up God's Truth."

A CONFERENCE AT GUILFORD COLLEGE.

We feel that we have enjoyed a season of great favor here at Guilford College, by the tarrying in our midst for a few days of our dear friends, Joseph Elkinton and Alfred C. Garrett. Since the report in THE AMERICAN FRIEND of that delightful little gathering in the Berkshire Hills last summer, some of us have been earnestly desiring something of the same kind here, especially ever since we learned that Alfred Garrett purposed spending a few weeks in our vicinity at the far-famed health resort, or rather resort for rest, at Pinehurst.

Through correspondence a very elastic kind of program was arranged. Invitations were sent out to persons in all of the quarters, chiefly young Friends, as Alfred Garrett's concern is primarily to them. We knew that at this particular season not many were so situated that they could respond, still with Friends of our meeting, students and faculty of the College, quite a respectable gathering resulted. There were present representatives of New Garden, Deep River, Yadkin Valley, Western and Eastern Quarters.

At Alfred Garrett's request an occasional paper by some of our own members was introduced, while Joseph Elkinton added much both to the life and interest of the occasion. I think we all met with the feeling, "not theology, but Christ; not formalism, but spiritual life"; and this spirit prevailed, and there was a real cementing power of the Lord manifest throughout.

In his introductory address, Alfred Garrett spoke of the "Relation of Bible Teaching to the Society of Friends." In this he took us back to some of the original positions of the society, such as its call to exemplify the higher Christian life to the world—Friends' views in regard to the gift of the ministry, worship, the earnest, systematic, persistent study of the Bible, the observance of the quiet hour, the necessity of holding to the eternal truths which the Society of Friends stands for, and at the same time reaching out to help in the salvation of the world—the work of bringing men to Christ.

The "Bible Talk on Love and Unity" was full of inspiration. He again took the old Quaker stand that without unity we had better not go forward. The treatment of Christian love was exalted. The new commandment was spoken of in such a way that to many of us it seemed "opened" as never before.

Thomas Newlin's paper, "How to Study the Bible," presented a different class of work from that commonly applied to the preparation of Sabbath School lessons, and should be heard throughout our yearly meeting. The lazy, slipshod methods which are too much followed in this important work deserve censure; and the very narrow conception of the amount of work necessary to fit one to teach opens the door to all kinds of misconception. The Holy Spirit is the best interpreter of the Bible; and, while in a very deep and true sense the Holy Spirit does teach history, and science, and art, and literature, these are not learned by immediate revelation, but by painstaking, laborious study. When the lesson has thus been studied, then the Holy Spirit can make the most efficient use of it through the teacher. This and much more was made evident by the successive talks by Alfred C. Garrett and others. In one of these we were presented with an admirably arranged course in Bible study.

Professor J. F. Davis spoke of "Friends' Beliefs Concerning the Ordinances." In this he compared different manuscripts of the New Testament, showing that many of the passages quoted to sustain the ritual of the various churches are not found in the oldest manuscripts, but are the work of ecclesiastical propagandists of a much later date. While this was not the reason they were not observed by the early Friends, the position of the latter was fully sustained by the findings of modern scholarship. Alfred Garrett followed with reference to the baptism of the Spirit and the spiritual communion, which are the positive, emphatic beliefs, and which do away with the outward, ritualistic forms.

A very interesting paper on "The Missions of the English Friends" was presented by Clara Cox, of High Point. The writer showed the great amount of work accomplished by these Friends, and incited American Friends to emulate their example. Our Friend Eli Reece, also of High Point, brought before us "Opportunities and Essentials for Service," in a paper specially prepared to meet the needs of our young members. A discourse by Joseph Elkinton on "The History of Our Discipline" was also very interesting, while his lecture on the Doukhobors gave great pleasure as well as much profitable instruction to a very large audience in Memorial Hall. The services of this dear Friend were also very acceptable and helpful in our meeting on First-day, and the presence of both in our college and in the community has given great satisfaction.

The real benefit of such an opportunity cannot be outlined as a program. To many of us it was a spiritual feast. Without any war of words as to this doctrine and that method, we came together in our Father's presence for spiritual uplifting and strength for the needs of the hour, and the lessons given in great simplicity and old-time earnestness did indeed refresh and comfort us.

Seneca Stevens, a minister of New York Yearly Meeting, was in attendance a part of the time. His presence and such part as he took in the conference were very acceptable.

Alfred Garrett gave his address, "The Heart of Quakerism," in Friends' Meeting House at Greensboro on First-day evening; and Joseph Elkinton lectured on the Doukhobors at High Point on Second-day night.

The International Lesson.

SECOND QUARTER.

LESSON IV.

FOURTH MONTH 26, 1903.

PAUL'S JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM.

Acts 21: 3-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The will of the Lord be done. Acts 21: 14.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Fourth mo. 20.—Paul's journey to Jerusalem. Acts 21: 1-16.

Third-day, Fourth mo. 21.—Paul's call to the ministry. Gal. 1: 1-24.

Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 22.—Salvation for the Gentiles. Eph. 3: 1-21.

Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 23.—Rules for Christian living. Eph. 4: 1-28.

Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 24.—Paul's record. Phil. 3: 1-15.

Seventh-day, Fourth mo. 25.—Paul's care. Col. 2: 1-23.

First-day, Fourth mo. 26.—Paul's charge. 2 Tim. 4: 1-8.

The lessons now take up the history of Paul. In Lesson 1 of the present quarter we left Paul at Miletus, bidding farewell to the overseers of Ephesus. Chapter 21 begins with Luke's account of the remainder of the journey to Jerusalem. The ship followed the regular route of the sailing vessels of that day. From Miletus they sailed to Cos, then to the Island of Rhodes, and then to Patara, the seaport of the province of Lycia. Here the vessel on which they traveled thus far appears to have ended her voyage, for the narrative says, "Having found a ship crossing over to Phœnicia, we went aboard and set sail." From verse 3 we learn that this vessel was a merchantman ("for the ship was to unlade her cargo"). The vessel was doubtless a larger craft than one they left, as from the account we learn that the captain took a direct course across the open sea to Tyre. The absolute accuracy in details in the account of the voyage is indicative of a careful writer and of an eyewitness.

3. "Discovered." In the original a nautical term exactly equivalent to the modern "sighted." "Leaving it (Cyprus) on the left hand." That is, they passed close to the southwest corner of the island. Tyre—the celebrated city of the Mediterranean, so often mentioned in the Old Testament, and in ancient history.

4. "And having found the disciples." This rather implies there were not very many. Paul had probably been at Tyre before. Acts 15: 3. "Seven days." Circumstances had been so favorable that Paul reached Syria earlier than he expected if we may judge from Acts 20: 16. This was probably due to fine weather, and a full moon which enabled the captain to take "a straight course" from Patara to Tyre and thus save the time which would be taken up in a coasting voyage. The voyage from Miletus is thought to have occupied a week. "Said to Paul through the spirit," etc. It was revealed to them that Paul would suffer, and they naturally inferred that he should not go. That this is the correct interpretation is confirmed by verses 11, 12.

5. "The days." The seven days, which were doubtless needed for unlading and lading the ship. The affectionate farewell is touchingly described.

6. "On board the ship." The original implies that it was the same ship heretofore spoken of.

7. "Ptolemais." This city was about thirty miles south of Tyre. It is the Accho of the Old Testament (Judges 1: 31), and the Acre, or St. Jean d'Acre, of modern times. It was about halfway between Tyre and Cæsarea, and, older than either, still survives, a town of 8,000 or more inhabitants. Here Paul's sea voyage ended. And the remaining part of his journey, about 110 miles, was made by land.

8. "And on the morrow we departed and came to Cæsarea." R.V. This place was the Roman capital of Palestine. It was 70 miles from Jerusalem. Paul had already been here three times (Acts 9: 30; 18: 22). It was here that Paul was imprisoned for two years (Acts 24: 27). "Philip." He is to be distinguished from Philip the Apostle, and is the one mentioned in Acts 6: 5; 8: 5, etc. As the preacher to the Samaritans he must have been in close sympathy with the Apostle to the Gentiles. The "Evangelist." This word only occurs twice elsewhere in the New Testament (Eph. 4: 11; 2 Tim. 4: 5), and seems to have rather "denoted an employment than an order." The title is not found in the early church writers (Apostolic Fathers), which seems strange.

9. This verse shows clearly that in Apostolic times women did preach (for this is what prophesying means). The word "prophesy," when the Bible was translated, meant preaching, as is abundantly shown by contemporary literature, notably by Jeremy Taylor's celebrated tract, the "Liberty of Prophesying," written to defend freedom of preaching. Compare Acts 18: 26; Rom. 16: 1, 2; Acts 16: 14, 15. "Virgins." This mentions the fact and cannot be taken to mean more.

10. "Agabus." See Acts 11: 28.

11. Compare 1 Kings 22: 11; Jer. 13: 1-11; 27: 2; Ezek. 4: 1. The girdle was that by which the loose oriental robe was drawn in at the waist. It was universally worn, and was often laid aside when resting or when in the house. This prophecy was not absolutely carried out, inasmuch as the Romans bound Paul, but as this was done at the instigation of Jews, it was accurate in spirit.

12. "We." Luke, the writer, and probably Trophimus, and Aristarchus, and perhaps others (see Acts 20: 4). They seem to have felt that these words of Agabus were intended as a warning to Paul.

13. Paul is sure that his place is to go on. Compare Luke 9: 51.

14. Paul's friends recognized that he was following divine guidance, and that the future must be left in God's hands.

TOPIC FOR FOURTH MONTH TWENTY-SIXTH.

AN EVENING WITH ARCTIC MISSIONS.

Job 38: 22, 23, 29, 30.

Second-day, Fourth mo. 20.—God in the Northland. Ps. 147: 16, 17.

Third-day, Fourth mo. 21.—The snow obeys his will. Job 37: 6-10.

Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 22.—The North people His. Ps. 95: 7, 8; 100: 3.

Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 23.—God King of the earth. Ps. 103: 13-22.

Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 24.—Sun of the sunless. Ps. 84: 11, 12.

Seventh-day, Fourth mo. 25.—Salvation for all. Rom. 10: 11-15.

If one could venture to propose a different Scripture reading for this topic than the one assigned by our officers, Isaiah 43: 4-7 might seem preferable. God's love to Zion gives her large boundaries, and His love to every creature would draw all into His church that they might know the manifested riches of His grace. The vision of Isaiah was doubtless less inclusive to him than is the picture that comes to us in the language used; but if the same evangelizing spirit fills us as filled him, we will cover the world as we know it with the gospel of the One who came to save "whosoever believeth."

There is a denomination that could report to the Ecumenical Missionary Conference of 1900, one foreign missionary in the field for every 58 communicants at home. These Moravian pioneers found their way to Greenland 170 years ago, and recently left the island under the care of an established pastoral church while their missionaries passed to new and needier fields.

On the other side of the continent lies Alaska, with its chain of islands, carrying our flag far out into the Pacific. It is noteworthy how different were the movements of the Christian people of the United States in regard to Alaska as a new possession, and our procedure in the matter of the opportunities recently opened to us in Cuba and the Philippines. For Alaska practically nothing was done for ten years in the way of evangelistic effort, while much has been done, and is yet being done, that must be overcome by mission workers in their efforts to gain the confidence of the natives.

Christian interest has been effectual, however, in the accomplishment of a noble work. The country has been districted by the various denominations, so that, theoretically, at least, the whole of it is covered without conflict or duplication, and about 8,000 converts are claimed as the fruits of their labors. The greed of criminally-minded whites has given us a martyr in our own Church, but the work has not been stayed. A recent report tells us that nearly one-half of the 400 inhabitants of Kake Island desired to unite with our missionary church on the occasion of the dedication of its building there.

Between these extremes, from British Columbia to Labrador, lies a vast territory, not densely populated, but with those who need the Word of Life. There are rigors of climate that perhaps outweigh even the dangers of tropical Africa, with its deadly fevers; but the rewards of faithfulness have there been reaped, and are still to be reaped, for Him who says "to the North, 'Give up,' and to the South, 'Keep not back.'"

A brief but comprehensive review of Friends' Alaskan Missions is given in THE AMERICAN FRIEND for Second month 6th, 1902.

ARCTIC FRIENDS.

Kotzebue, Alaska, Twelfth month 15th, 1902.

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

It may interest some of thy readers to know that we are not idle up here in this northern corner of His vineyard. If we are not heard from often it is not because we are "lost, strayed or stolen" from His blessed service and the "faith" we hold most dear. Only a little more than five years have elapsed since California Yearly Meeting sent Robert and Carrie Lamons and Anna Hunnicutt their first missionaries to the Esquimaux, who landed on this bleak shore with the nearest white neighbor a hundred miles distant, and the great "white silence" of the long Arctic winter fast approaching. They found hundreds of fur-clad Esquimaux, steeped in the superstition of their shamanism; but in God's name and with His help they went to work with a will, and as one result of their labor 148 of those natives are members in good standing of our mission church, organized Ninth month 22d, 1899, and they are more than mere church members—they are Christians, and so far as their lives go would be a credit to any monthly meeting in the United States. Here, where several hundred people used to drink any kind of liquor obtainable, and both sexes were slaves to the tobacco habit, only two or three will drink liquors, and perhaps not more than 5 per cent. use tobacco in any form. We fight the use of the latter, as they do not have money enough to buy the common necessities of life, let alone squandering it upon such an unnecessary and filthy habit.

In summer time, when there are many visiting natives here, our average attendance is about 250, with 150 present at prayer service. At present we hold two prayer meetings each week, and attendance is about the same at each as it is at each of the three services on the Sabbath. On an average 98 per cent. of our resident membership is present at two prayer services each week. Indeed, the "stay-at-homes" are usually only those who are disabled through some illness.

In connection with the devotional and distinctively religious work we also have a valuable auxiliary, a medical department, furnishing free of cost to the native the only medical attention to be had in a coast distance of about 200 miles, and no doctors back of us in the interior. We give only the simplest remedies, and trust the Lord to heal them, and He does help and bless this part of the work. God has performed some wonderful cures, one a poor girl totally blind and somewhat demented three months ago can see without any difficulty and is in a normal state mentally, goes to school each day. We attribute her recovery to God's answering our prayers in her behalf. Although the Esquimau is supposed to be a dying race, and I am afraid is dying out at many points, here at Kotzebue, the death rate is lower than the average as reported in 1900 census for the United States.

The school is also a most helpful factor in civilizing and Christianizing these people. About thirty attend on an average, bright-faced, fur-clad little Esquimaux, very bright of eye and mind, and oh, so anxious to learn about the "white man's ways and the white man's God." One of the six hours taught each day is taken up in songs, prayers and reading and study of the Bible. Martha Hadley, of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, has served as teacher for three past years, but at present she is matron of the Mission Home, and Otha Thomas, of California Yearly Meeting, is the present teacher. A "mothers' meeting" is also held each Sixth-day. Its motto is "Cleanliness"—clean bodies and clean hearts.

For the first time Thanksgiving day was observed this season. We explained to them the day's significance, and at the morning service every native in the village was present. Most of them quoted texts expressive of praise and thanksgiving. Many told of things for which they were grateful—some for material blessings, fish, furs, seal, reindeer, etc.; some were thankful the "Lord had kept them"; and one poor woman, who some time ago lost two of her children through lack of food, was thankful for the "little baby" she had left. At the meeting's end we surprised them by giving to each a portion of food—pork and beans, coffee, biscuit and fruit. You can easily understand that it was appreciated when we tell thee that for some time they have had practically nothing to eat but seal and fish. That night we were interrupted at our evening meal by an Esquimau entering and requesting that we have a "prayer meeting." We were glad to grant his request, and when we entered the hall were gratified to find an even hundred natives present at this unannounced prayer meeting. The Lord blessed and the Holy Ghost led and directed. At meeting's close fourteen expressed a desire for "noutak umitah," the new heart and church membership. Thus ended the most glorious Thanksgiving day we have ever been blessed by.

There is also a "reindeer station" here, the superintendent of this mission having charge of same. At present the mission herd consists of about 285 reindeer, half of them belonging to mission. A Laplander and three Esquimau lads watch and care for them. At present they are at the nearest timber, about 18 miles distant. They are kept there during the coldest weather, as it is better for them to have what shelter the trees afford. In summer season they are driven out in the Tundra, their principal food at all seasons being a species of moss or lichen indigenous to the Arctic zone. In winter they will dig down through several feet of snow to reach their favorite food.

Reindeer and dog teams afford us our only means of travel for the greater part of the year, and this letter will be carried perhaps 2,000 miles by dogs and reindeer via Nome City and Dawson City ere it reaches steamer transportation. The ice left somewhat earlier last summer, and first mail steamer reached us Seventh month 17th, the last Tenth month 8th, so that we had about three months of open sea.

We are probably the most northern Friends' meeting in the world—about 30 miles north of Arctic Circle. Snow has lain on the ground since early in Tenth month, and since Eleventh month 11th it has been zero weather, about all the time reaching as low as —27. In latter part of 11th mo., and as I write this, it registered —34. Last winter the coldest point reached was —52; but with warm house, plenty of fuel, and proper clothing, we are kept warm, and these fur coats up here cover as happy and contented hearts as you can well find in Christendom.

The pioneer band have all left us. Anna Hunnicutt-Foster is conducting independent mission work at Deering, Alaska, and Robert and Carrie Samms left last Eighth month on the U. S. Revenue Cutter, the "Bear." We trust to soon hear that they reached their destination (San Francisco) in safety. In thy warm south land homes remember by way of His throne this meeting of thy brothers and sisters in Christ in Arctic land, and if the sun of days does leave us for a time, the blessed Sun of Righteousness shineth into our hearts, bringing light and warmth.

Lovingly Thine and His,

DANA THOMAS.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

We desire to express our thanks for the gift of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, which comes to us each week as a letter from the Church at large. We have been much edified in the reading of it, and interested in "Things of Interest Among Ourselves."

Barclay and Anna Johnson, Southland College, Southland, Arkansas.

The old brick meeting house at West Elkton, Ohio, has been very nicely remodeled, and it is a most satisfactory meeting place for the Friends of this community.

West Elkton Meeting, Ohio, although organized almost a century ago, is still large and prosperous. Wm. West, a minister, is doing efficient work in the meeting.

J. L. Beane, who has been in Oklahoma during the winter for his health, has returned to his home in Le Grand, Iowa. He expects to move to Oklahoma this fall.

Samuel Withers has been chosen president of the Y. M. C. A. at Haverford College for the coming year. Daniel Binford will serve in the same capacity at Friends' University.

Eli G. Parker and his wife, Mary M. Parker, both ministers of Lynnville, Iowa, have recently been suffering from the prevalent gripe, but are now again in active service.

At Bridgeport Monthly Meeting, Ind., held on the 2d inst., nineteen new members were received with Friends. Eighteen by request, and one by letter from the Methodist Church.

Lola Hobson, of Richland, Ia., the Christian Endeavor organizer of Iowa Yearly Meeting, has spent the winter in visiting the different quarterly meetings, and has organized several new societies. She has lately undergone a surgical operation, but is rapidly recovering.

Asa Talbert, a lifetime Friend and faithful worker in West Elkton, Ohio, is kept at home now on account of ill health. He is in his eightieth year. Another veteran member is Louis Taylor, in his seventy-ninth year. He served as clerk in some one of the business meetings for fifty-five years.

John Kittrell, of Ogden, O., held a series of meetings at Samantha, O., Third month 1st to 10th. Two professed conversion and a number received special help. The meetings were much better attended than for years past, and the people were never so alive to their duties and privileges in Christ.

The Christian Endeavor Society and meeting at Richland, Ia., held a union service on the evening of the 29th ult. E. Howard Brown preached a sermon on "The Salvation of Africa," and also read a personal letter from Willis R. Hotchkiss. A large audience, great interest and good collection was the result.

Plans are being perfected for the conduct of the Student Summer Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations of Canada and the East, to be held at East Northfield, Mass., Sixth month 26th to Seventh month 5th. This Conference was started through the invitation of D. L. Moody in 1886, and since then has been held annually with increasing attendance. Last year there were over 700 representatives from 132 institutions at the Northfield Conference.

The monthly meeting in San Diego, Cal., is not large, and is composed mostly of those with limited means. The membership is a faithful band of earnest workers, however, and it seems essential for them to have their own place of worship. Although the undertaking requires large faith, yet they are persuaded that it is the "Father's will" to be represented in that beautiful city, where so many pleasure-seekers come and go, by a good, live Friends' meeting, and, as the gold and silver are His, they are praying that He will open the hearts of those whom He has blessed to contribute to their need. The trustees of the meeting are S. L. Ward, 858 Front Street, treasurer; C. C. Winslow, L. C. Wright and Charles Judd, and they desire to purchase property within the next three or four months. J. W. Wilmere is resident minister.

F. B. Milner, of Leesburg, O., held a series of meetings at Loudonary, Ross County, O., in Second month, continuing about two weeks, and also a ten days' meeting at Oak Grove, near Leesburg, O. God owned and blessed the work in the salvation of souls. Both meetings are in the limits of Fairfield Quarterly Meeting.

Charles E. Hiatt preached a thoroughly practical sermon at Friends' Meeting, Muncie, Ind., the 5th inst., on "Fellow-helpers to the Truth," after which a very impressive welcome was extended to the new members who have been received since the first of the year. Some were unable to be present. Eleven have been received by request, five by letter and nine by certificate, making twenty-five in all.

The tools ordered for the Boys' Training Home at Ramallah have gone forward by the Dominion Line to Jaffa. The other goods for the mission, which have been collecting in Thomas Wood's care, were shipped with them. Many valuable gifts were included. It seemed as if the friends thought of nearly everything needful at the mission, even to shoe-strings, and good judgment was shown in sending only new and useful things.

James H. Coutant, a lifelong member of the Valley Meeting, in Ulster County, N. Y., passed away on the 3d inst., and was laid to rest on the 8th. He was a man of remarkable gentleness and sweetness of nature, and a person whose daily life showed forth the goodness which is the fruit of faith in Jesus Christ. He was respected by everybody who knew him, and he will be a great loss to his meeting and to the entire neighborhood where he had always lived.

A new impetus was given to the educational work in behalf of the colored race of Philadelphia by a meeting held in that city in the interest of the Institute for Colored Youth on the evening of the 25th ult. The speakers for the evening were Booker T. Washington, Charles Emory Smith and Hugh M. Brown. This institute was started by Friends in 1837, through a fund bequeathed for that purpose by Richard Humphreys. The work has grown so that it has been deemed wise to move the institute to a farm of 116 acres near Cheyney, Chester County, Pa.

Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, Wilmington Yearly Meeting, will be held at Samantha, O. (old Clear Creek), Fourth month 24th, 25th and 26th. Those coming by railroad will stop at Highland, B. & O., S. W. R. R., and will be met with conveyances if they have previously notified the quarterly meeting correspondent, Elizabeth Larkin, Samantha, Ohio. Edgar Stranahan, who was sent to Cuba by the Wilmington Yearly Meeting's Committee on Foreign Mission, to select a location for mission work, will give a lecture, with stereopticon views of Cuba, on Sixth-day, 7.30 p.m. The proceeds will be used for the mission work.

Central Academy, at Plainfield, Ind., has entered upon the last term of the present school year. After some severe trials and many adverse circumstances, the Academy is now in a condition to do excellent work. It is still financially embarrassed, and the burden falls heavily upon a few faithful Friends. Under the careful and efficient management of Prof. Otis G. Stanton, the school has regained a first-class standing, and all are highly pleased. Prof. Stanton, however, has received an appointment in the State Department at Washington, D. C., and the Academy trustees will have to select a new principal the coming year. Commencement will occur Sixth month 4th.

Iowa Monthly Meeting, Agra, Okla., has been favored with the following religious services during the past six months. Early last fall J. W. Elder and B. S. Morris and wife labored nearly a month in the meeting, and thirty were led to take definite steps in their Christian life. Later Mary A. and Stephen Cox held seven meetings, resulting in seven conversions. Oliver Beeson and C. E. Fear were in the monthly meeting a few weeks, and had services at three different meeting points, with excellent results. Elisha Janeway was also in the meeting during the winter months, and held services at several places. Asaph Baker visited the meetings with messages of love. All these visits were helpful to Friends, but the meeting is in need of a good resident minister.

Edward Stranahan expects to visit all the meetings of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, lecturing with stereopticon views for the purpose of raising funds to establish a mission work in Cuba.

BORN.

ADELL.—Born, at Whittier, Cal., to L. T. and Ada Adell, First month 19th, 1903, a daughter, Florence Adell.

TEAS.—At Joplin, Mo., Second month 10th, 1903, to Edward and Augusta Teas, a daughter, Josephine.

DIED.

CHASE.—At her home in Whittier, Cal., Third month 28th, 1903, Lydia C., widow of George S. Chase, in her 86th year. She was a woman of sterling worth and religious activity, full of faith and good works. An esteemed member of Whittier Monthly Meeting of Friends.

COUTANT.—James H. Coutant, at his home, in Ardonia, N. Y., Fourth month 3d, 1903, in his 76th year. He was an elder in his meeting and a faithful Christian in all the callings of life.

CONVER.—At her home, near Sully, Ia., Second month 22d, 1903, Louise, wife of Thomas J. Conner and daughter of Caleb and Miriam Johnson, aged 43 years. The deceased gave her heart to Jesus when 14 years old, and remained faithful until death.

DRAPER.—At his home in Richland, Ia., Third month 26th, 1903, Elwood Draper, aged 80 years. He was reared and always remained a Friend.

GOULD.—At his home, in Usquepang, R. I., Fourth month 2d, 1903, Anna A. Gould, widow of George S. Gould, aged 81 years, 6 months and 26 days. A birthright and very useful member, and elder of South Kingston Monthly Meeting of Friends. She was clerk of the women's meeting for something over thirty years.

HENLEY.—At San Antonio, Tex., Third month 15th, 1903, Mary N., wife of J. Arthur Henley and daughter of Thomas and Alice Newby. The deceased was buried at Lawrence, Kan.

Alice C. Fletcher has given her consent to address our gathering. Her work for the North American Indians should commend any views which she may express to our careful attention.

BOOK REVIEWS.

"Modern Secret Societies." By Chas. A. Blanchard. National Christian Association, Chicago, Ill. Price, 75 cents.

This small volume discusses the leading secret societies, together with a number of minor orders, placing especial emphasis upon their objectionable features. It is a forcible presentation of the subject, and is marked for its decided opposition to secretism. A distinction, however, is made between privacy, which is a necessary element in home and business life, and oath-bound secrecy or its equivalent.

"Constructive and Preventive Philanthropy." By Joseph Lee. The Macmillan Co. For sale by John Wanamaker. Price, $1.00, net.

This concise work, dealing with many phases of philanthropy, should be welcomed by all good citizens, and especially by students of practical ethics. The new conditions brought about in American society by the introduction of labor and time-saving machines, emigration and trade regulations and kindred forces are making a new social order, in which many public institutions calculated to make for the general welfare are springing up. The average reader knows only too little about these, not because he does not believe in them, but because the material at hand usually emphasizes local needs and does not give a comprehensive view of the subject. The present work in a brief and systematic way attempts to fill this need. Among the subjects treated are public libraries, savings banks, and building and loan associations for the purpose of teaching thrift, and bringing wholesome entertainment to the

WISE HUSBAND

Suggested a Food Cure.

All of the medical skill in the world is powerless to cure certain diseases unless the patient is put upon pure, scientific food. Then the disease seems to cure itself in many cases, proving that nature was demanding proper food to build a healthy body from.

In this simple way the use of Grape-Nuts in place of bad food has worked many cures when medical skill has been exhausted. A lady of Plainfield, N. J., who had been an invalid for over ten years, says: "I have been treated by eminent physicians of New York, Brooklyn and Newark, besides taking innumerable proprietary remedies of a cathartic nature to regulate the bowels.

"My last physician advised a sanitarium, but my husband who had been reading one of your articles said, 'Not until we have tried the boasted virtues of Grape-Nuts.' So we got some, and I have now used Grape-Nuts for eight months. When I began its use I weighed 85 pounds, now I weigh 105½; my stomach has grown strong and normal, my bowels are so regular that I have thrown cathartic physic to the dogs, the vertigo has left me, and my whole system has gained vigor and tone. I can now take a 25-mile ride on my bicycle and enjoy it.

"I am convinced that the chief cause of my ill health was improper food that neither digested nor nourished. Since I have been fed right I feel right." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

poorer classes, health laws, tenement regulations and other sanitary devices for the prevention of disease; and public parks, baths, and gymnasiums for individual development. Brief sketches of the history and work of many social and factory settlements are given, together with a short discussion on industrial training, pleasure resorts and kindred subjects.

Many debaters weaken their style by "a fatal faculty in the use of strong expressions." At a recent conference this fault was very apparent. The words "extraordinary," "wonderful," "glorious," "terrible," and others lost their force by being applied to commonplace things. When will speakers learn that the strength of an expression is in the noun, and that many a speech is spoiled by the excessive use of adjectives, particularly superlatives? Where everything is emphasized nothing is emphasized. Exaggeration soon palls upon intelligent hearers, and bombast is always offensive to an audience of cultivated taste.—"Canadian Epworth Era."

Events and Comments.

King Christian of Denmark celebrated his 85th birthday on the 8th instant. He was in the best of health, and was the recipient of very many congratulations and gifts.

Returns from all the towns in Kansas which held elections last week disclose the fact that the vote in favor of enforcing the Prohibition law is the most overwhelming in the history of the State.

The distance of 206 miles from Burlington to Chicago was covered by a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy special fast mail in 210 minutes, actual running time, recently, breaking the record for that distance.

Yung Lu, the Controller of Finances and First Grand Secretary of China, is dead. He was said to be the real author of the anti-foreign outbreak in Peking and Tien Tsin, and he commanded the best-disciplined troops which opposed the allies.

It will be observed that strikes are not confined to America this spring. Rome is in the agonies of a labor trouble, affecting particularly street transportation, while Holland seems entangled in a mesh of strikes which have hindered travel and defied government orders.

State's Attorney-General Webb has rendered an official opinion declaring the use of the Bible in the public schools of California as unconstitutional. Not only may teachers not use Scriptures as a text-book, but even reading from them, as is the custom frequently at the opening exercises, is barred.

A contest among the typewriters in the Patent Office at Washington has revealed some remarkable records for speed. The first place is held by a Philadelphia girl, who sustains an output of 20,600 words a day, doing first-class work on jobs where great care and accuracy is required.

Excavations in the Catacombs of St. Cecilia at Rome have revealed a large under basilica that was used by the early Christians. Traces of an altar and episcopal chair were found. There was also found a number of ancient paintings, including a Greek portrait of Christ. One of the tombs discovered is declared by local archaeologists to be that of the Apostle Mark.

Many emigrants are rushing into Harvard, Tex., on account of the new oil field recently discovered there. Land which sold for $10 two weeks ago is now worth $400.

The cable steamers Anglia and Colonia sailed from London last week to lay the remaining sections of the Commercial Pacific cable from San Francisco to Manila. It is expected that the cable from Honolulu to Manila, by way of Midway (Brook) Island and the Island of Guam will be completed Seventh month 4th.

President Palma's message to the Cuban Congress sounds another note of encouragement concerning the republic. The finances must be regarded as in a sound condition, with a surplus of $2,638,000 in the treasury. Railroad building is going on rapidly, and the people display no sign of their old revolutionary tendency.

Congress appropriated $12,500,000 for the rural delivery service during the next fiscal year, and the department will establish 15,000 new routes with the money. Thus it is expected by the end of the next fiscal year, which will be Sixth month 30th, 1904, to have 30,000 rural carriers in motion and 15,000,000 people living outside of towns and cities will have their letters and newspapers delivered daily at their doors.

Work on the Union Pacific Railroad's cut-off across the upper end of Great Salt Lake has met with an unexpected obstacle. At one point in the lake the builders do not seem to be able to strike bottom. They have sunk a vast amount of material into what appears to be a fathomless depth, including a construction locomotive that went down in a general cave-in, and now scientists and eminent engineers are being called in consultation.

European travel from the United States is beginning with a rush, and promises to exceed in volume even that of last year. All the principal transatlantic lines report a very strong demand for accommodations, and, although the season has hardly begun as yet, the outgoing passenger ships are sailing with nearly full cabins. "General prosperity and the increased luxury of ocean travel" is the explanation given by the steamship agents.

Two Boston society men are starting on an automobile tour of Europe. A big French automobile has been engaged in Paris and an expert chauffeur secured to look after the machine and the tour. The tourists expect to start from Paris and make the journey into Southern France and from there through Spain, Italy, Greece, and Turkey. Thence they will return via Austria and Germany to make a tour north through the Netherlands and into Russia.

The immigration records of North Dakota and the Canadian Northwest are being broken every day, and a large number of settlers are moving to new homes. The railroads leading west from Minneapolis are obliged to put extra cars on their trains to accommodate the homeseekers, many of whom are moving from Iowa and Illinois in search of more money and room. A large percentage of these people are probably attracted by the great wheat belt of the Northwest, and seek riches in the wheat fields.

QUIT AND EAT.

Some Coffee Tales.

Show a woman an easy, comfortable and healthful way to improve her complexion, and she is naturally interested.

Coffee is the one greatest enemy of fair women, for in the most of cases it directly affects the stomach, producing slight, and sometimes great congestion of the liver, and therefore causing the bile to be absorbed into the system instead of going its natural way. The result is a sallow, muddy skin and a train of diseases of the different organs of the body, which, in all too many cases, develop into chronic diseases.

A lady speaking of how coffee affected her says: "I was very fond of coffee, but while drinking it was under the care of the doctor most of the time for liver trouble, and was compelled to take blue mass a great deal of the time. My complexion was bad, and I had a pain in my side steadily, probably in the liver.

"When I concluded to quit coffee and take Postum Food Coffee I had it made carefully, and from the very first cup we liked the taste of it better than any of the old coffee.

"In a short time the pain left my side and my friends began to comment on the change in my complexion and general looks. I have never seen anything equal to the good I got from making this change.

"A young lawyer in Philadelphia named —, whose life was almost a burden from indigestion and its train of evils, quit coffee some months ago, and began on Postum Food Coffee. He quickly recovered, and is now well, strong and cheerful and naturally loud in his praises of Postum.

"Another friend, an old gentleman of seventy, named —, who for years suffered all one could suffer and live, from dyspepsia, and who sometimes for weeks could eat no bread or solid food, only a little weak gruel or milk, quit coffee upon my recommendation, and took up Postum. He began to get better at once. Now he can eat rich pastry or whatever he likes and is perfectly well."

THE BREAKFAST FOOD FAMILY.

Jack Spratt will eat no fat,
Nor will he touch the lean;
He scorns to eat of any meat,
He lives upon Foodine.

But Mrs. Spratt will none of that;
Foodine she cannot eat,
Her special wish is for a dish
Of Expurgated Wheat.

To William Spratt that food is flat
On which his mater dotes;
His favorite feed—his special need—
Is Eata Heapa Oats.

But Sister Lil can't see how Will
Can touch such tasteless food:
As breakfast fare it can't compare,
She says, with Shredded Wood.

Now, none of these Leander please;
He feeds upon Bath Mitts,
While Sister Jane improves her brain
With Cero-Grapo-Grits.

A FRENCH TRIBUTE TO AMERICAN PATRIOTISM.

There is an article in the "Revue Bleue," of Paris, which should warm the cockles of every American heart. It is by M. Delfron de Vissec, a traveler who has studied men and things in many lands. The following extracts are from a translation in the current number of the "Literary Digest":

"It is wonderful to note how a people so little military are gifted with a patriotism so intense. What a contrast between the towns of Germany, where at every step we come across troops on the march, where the very populace seems divided into regiments, and those immense cities beyond the sea, in which the sight of a military uniform, the sound of a trumpet, are practically unknown! Individuals [in the United States] are all the more citizens inasmuch as they are not soldiers. It is from the profound civism with which they are imbued, from their devotion to the city and the State, that they derive their patriotism. . . .

"In spite of this ardent patriotism, capable of making the Americans, if necessary, intrepid soldiers, did future peace, to which the world aspires, depend upon them, it would have solid guarantees. The Monroe Doctrine binds them to an exclusively defensive policy. It is easy for them, therefore, to make peaceful professions. A menace of war will never proceed from them."

Religion is not a little fenced-off enclosure, within which all is sacred, and outside of which all is secular and profane. Religion is life, character, conduct; it reaches up to God and down into the smallest details of daily duty;
it covers everything.—Anon.

COOKING CONTEST

Right in the Family Kitchens.

The ladies have a champion interested in the betterment of family cooks.

$7,500.00 in cash has been donated by
C. W. Post, chairman of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., to be distributed between now and July next in 735 cash prizes to stimulate family cooks to better service.

Less burned and greasy meat, and potatoes; less soggy biscuits, cake, etc., and better coffee, Postum and tea is the motto.

The girls are to compete in the preparation of good, everyday dishes and in general cookery. Probably Grape-Nuts and Postum Coffee will come in for some attention incidentally, but the tests will be conducted under the daily direction of the housewife and 735 cooks will win varying cash prizes from $200.00 down to $5.00. No one is required to pay anything whatever to enter this contest, and each winner will receive a large certificate or diploma with the big Postum seal in gilt, a badge of distinction much to be sought after. Particulars can be had by addressing Cookery Department, No.
412, of Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

WHY?

If the wren can cling
To a spray a-swing
In the mad May wind, and sing and sing
As if she'd burst for joy,

Why cannot I
Contented lie
In His quiet arms, beneath His sky,
Unmoved by Life's annoy?
—Robert Haven Schaufler.

The great vitalizing element that gives power to both faith and duty is the living God with His personality and character, and the possibility of holding actual communion with Him. The glory of religion lies in the reality of the good God.—William Newton Clarke,

The law of the Sabbath rest is written on the nature of man and beast. The Decalogue did not create this law any more than it created the law of truth or honesty or purity. If there were no Ten Commandments, it would not be right to steal. The Decalogue was God's statement of the moral principles imbedded in the constitution of man. No nation destroys or ignores one of these principles without suffering for it. One day out of seven is to be different from other days. There is little difference of opinion on this question. Some laborers want to work seven days a week, and some employers want to make money seven days by compelling men to work, but the vast majority believe in the principle of one day in seven unlike other days.—Robert E. Speer.

The junior curate in an English Church was preaching on reasons for coming to worship. Some people, he remarked, come to church for no better reason than to show off their fine clothes. Pausing and glancing thoughtfully over his audience, he added, "I am thankful to see, dear friends, that none of you have come here for that reason."—Exchange.

CONSUMERS should bear in mind that there are many brands of White Lead (so called) which are claimed to be "just as good" or better than Pure White Lead, which contain little, if any, White Lead, but are simply mixtures of Zinc, Whiting and Barytes, or other cheap, inferior materials.

Make sure that the brand is right. Those named in list are genuine.

"IT COMETH TO ALL."

The night brought on the close of day,
The sound of the grinding was low.
The miller turned the stream aside,
It dashed along in all its pride,
Along its moonlit way.
The mill was silent and dark and chill.
The grain was ground and the wheel was still.

A soul hath labored until the night,
When the sound of the grinding was low.

A master's hand had turned the tide,
And stress and burden of life aside
Into the channel's flow.
The soul was resting while life flowed on
In endless sorrow and endless song.

PINHOLE PHOTOGRAPHY.

Photography without a lens would seem at first glance to be impossible. It is so generally understood that for good work a good lens is necessary that it is scarcely credible that some of the finest photographic work is obtained without the use of a lens at all, merely by the aid of a minute hole in the side of a light-tight box, which is arranged to contain a sensitive plate. But the practicability of this method of photography is amply proved by the fine specimens that accompany an article on the subject by Juan C. Abel, in the May "Delineator."
One of the distinct advantages of pin-hole photography is the slight expense incurred in apparatus; any kind of a light-tight box will suffice, provided it can be opened to insert the plate. Explicit directions for procedure are given in the article.

No. 17.

HAS CHRISTIANITY BEEN TRIED?

THE remark is sometimes made that Christianity has failed. On the contrary, it has not yet been fairly tried. Wherever it has really been tried it has proved to be a transforming force of the highest order. "Give me five hundred men," cried Phillips Brooks; "nay, give me one hundred men of the spirit that I know to-day in three men, and I will answer for it that the city shall be saved." Yes, so would we all answer for it, if we could get the hundred men. But Christianity means, or ought to mean, new men of this sort, the Spirit of Christ reproduced in men's lives. That is just what apostolic Christianity was, and does anybody think that was a failure? Why is it, then, that we look in vain for our hundred men who shall save the city? Because so few of us realize at all that we are expected to re-live and reproduce Christ's life in the world. Paul knew it, and John knew it, and they did it; and wherever they went there were dynamic results.

But little by little Christianity became something else, something quite different. The religion of personal spiritual life, lived in the power of the resurrected Christ, was changed into an Institution, with elaborate machinery for dispensing everything essential to man's salvation. Conformity to the Institution took the place of obedience to the living Lord. The simple, living faith in a personal Christ was changed into a system of thought, a body of intellectual views, to be "held" as a creed. Priestly meditation took the place of the free intercourse of the soul with the loving, forgiving Father whom Christ had revealed at such infinite cost. This seemed a much easier religion than the original apostolic type because it was not difficult to stand fairly well and yet be only a "nominal" Christian, i. e., a Christian in name. The bad habit grew, and alas, came right over into Protestantism. For lo, these hundreds of years Christians have been trying to settle a lot of questions which have no more bearing on real, essential Christianity than the question whether Mars is inhabited has. These questions have steadily kept Christianity run off on side tracks, and, worst of all, have continually produced dissension and bad blood.

Meantime, the world is losing all interest in these quarrels and discussion. They help nobody, they comfort nobody, they save nobody. "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed." That sort of thing has failed. It does no good work in the world. Its knell is struck. But that does not mean that Christianity has failed. We are learning that the real question is, "Am I manifesting Christ"? We are coming back to the early basis of Christianity, which was faith in Christ, and obedience to Him. As soon as a man appears who has the spirit of Christ, and whose life reflects the divine goodness and love, he does what the apostolic men did—he moves and influences and transforms men. Those who live in the power of God shake the world as of old. The thing most needed now is just a genuine trial of real Christianity, which means HUMAN LIVES TRANSFORMED BY CHRIST AND FILLED WITH GOD. Our cities, our rural districts, aye, our nation itself can still be saved if we could get a living nucleus of such lives. Thou, dear Friend, who readest this, may be one of the hundred in thy community.

IN MEMORY OF HARRIET GREEN.

THE portrait of Harriet Green, which appears on our cover this week, is from a photograph taken in Indianapolis at the time of her first visit in 1898. The hearts of American Friends have been deeply touched by her death, and the influence of her consecrated life will long be felt among us. We hope soon to have a sketch of her life by Esther Tuttle Pritchard, giving an account of her work in the slums of London. We have used the word "consecrated" in reference to her, and no word fits her life more truly. She had learned the beautiful secret of dying to self and living to Christ. It is one thing to use the phrase, and it is quite another thing to practice it. She practiced it. She had the genuine apostolic love for human souls which made her forget herself. Nothing was too hard if she could only kindle love for Christ in one more heart. It was just because she had this spirit in such high degree that she could "do the work of an evangelist" so effectively. What a difference it makes whether Christ speaks through us, or self! One person who has died to self and been raised with Him is worth an army of men who are self-centered and who have never cut the shore lines which keep them always in shallow water. Whether she lived or died it was unto the Lord. May we all learn the lesson, which is after all the "open secret" of the Gospel. It has been suggested by several that some testimonial of our appreciation should be raised to her memory. It would be most fitting. But those who know Harriet Green know full well that she would want no "pomp of marble." She would want nobody's money to go to build a tomb for her. Whatever is done must be done to carry on her work, to continue what she had begun. She laid down her life in North Carolina and her grave is at Guilford College. What more fitting memorial could there be than a memorial fund for Biblical work at Guilford College, to be called the "Harriet Green Endowment"? This work was deeply on her heart, and such a movement would prolong her noble life-work. If all who loved her and were helped by her would give something, a large sum could be raised. If it is to be done, it must be done gladly and spontaneously, without forcing or pushing, and we shall quietly wait to see what is the mind of Friends in the matter.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

ROBERT BARCLAY gives an interesting account of the origin of the name "Quaker," and he seems disposed to accept the name as suitable. These are his words: "Sometimes the power of God will break forth into a whole meeting, and there will be such an inward travail, while each is seeking to overcome the evil in themselves, that by the strong contrary workings of these opposite powers, like the going of two contrary tides, every individual will be strongly exercised as in a day of battle, and thereby trembling and a motion of body will be upon most, if not upon all, which, as the power of truth prevails, will from pangs and groans end with a sweet sound of thanksgiving and praise. [That sounds like an effective meeting.] And from this the name of Quakers, i. e., Tremblers, was first reproachfully cast upon us, which, though it be none of our choosing, yet in this respect we are not ashamed of it, but have rather reason to rejoice therefor."

For better or for worse we were born into this generation. It is the only generation we shall ever have anything to do with in this world. We have reason to believe that, on the whole, it is better than any generation that went before it. Certainly, one life will not be long enough to find out all the good things put at our disposal here and now.—Exchange.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

FITNESS TO ENTER IN.

BY DELIA REES.

In the parable of the Ten Virgins, Jesus says that when the bridegroom came and went into the marriage feast, "they that were ready went in with him." Not those that were willing to go in, nor even those that positively desired to go in, but those that were ready, or fully prepared, for the occasion went in. And Jesus said that the parable illustrated the conditions of the kingdom of heaven. Now, whether we understand this as the kingdom of heaven within us or the kingdom of heaven above us, where Christ and God are, the lesson is one and the same. It is fitness, or preparedness, or character readiness, that opens the door for a man, and not expectation, nor willingness, nor strong desire, nor believing certain things about the King and the kingdom in a superficial kind of way. And I do not see how we can honestly get away from the clear teaching, whether it is to enter into life and service with God in heaven or life and service with Him on earth, that they are fitted to enter in.

We greatly need to recognize this principle in our preaching to the unsaved and to the Church as well. According to the parable, men shall certainly not enter the final abode of the blest by using the name of Jesus as a kind of shibboleth at heaven's gates. The meaning of heaven must be found far more in the spirit and nature of things than in place. In the true sense to be in heaven is to be with God, and in this sense Jesus uses the word when He speaks of Himself as "he that came down from heaven, even the son of man which is in heaven" (St. John 3: 13).

He was not the less in heaven that he was on earth, for He was always doing the things that pleased the Father; He was always one with God, and that meant heaven.

So does it now, and so will it ever, require a spiritual and mental fitness which means a character fitness to enter and live in His presence. And no kind of "outside declaration of faith will take its place. Repentance and humility and love and faith must be formed in the character of a man before he can enjoy God and know the meaning of heaven. On this same simple, sensible plane does the Christian figure in the real work of Christ for the world. Something more than a willingness (valuable as that is) is required to do effective service for humanity in bringing it to God. Yes, something more than a divine call is needed. A suitable preparation must accompany or follow the call. In the work of preaching the gospel we Friends have made a grave mistake in that we have largely taken it for granted that if a man or woman had a gift in the ministry, or felt called to preach, they were therefore ready to preach. And little, if any, other preparation was needed.

But Paul certainly had no such understanding of a fitness for ministering the gospel. When he declared himself "ready" to preach the gospel in Rome he was not boasting of a willingness to undertake the task. He believed he was fitted by all the experience and discipline of the years past to carry this message to Rome also. Life's great school had thrown him into such varied and sympathetic touch with men as had developed an efficiency in presenting the truth to all minds. And no small part of the reward of those hard and trying years was this sure sense of ability to do in Christ's strength that which the world needed. In this confidence and ability, which is the fruit of years of faithfulness and service, he went to Rome and won converts even in Caesar's household. He pressed this necessity for continued preparation for the ministry on the young men who would follow him, Timothy and Titus among them. They must know not only the author of this gospel; they must acquaint themselves with men as well. They must know the gospel message experimentally, but they must also study to adapt themselves to their time and generation. With what urgency he tells Timothy that it is not enough that he has a gift to preach; he must "stir up" that gift. He must awake to its possibilities and learn how to use it. He must give himself "with all diligence" to reading and exhortation, that is, to study and practice, that he may be a wise and helpful preacher of the word to men. And a gift in the ministry without this preparation which the apostle so earnestly insists upon is as unfruitful as an untilled field or an uncared-for vineyard. Nothing seems clearer than that Paul felt always that a minister of Jesus Christ was also a minister to men, and knowledge must grow and develop both ways—God-ward and man-ward—in an efficient ministry. We need to learn this. Jesus, the boy, preaches, and the young man grew both ways, in favor with God and men. As His conceptions of God the Father and His own relations to Him grew and developed to a perfect understanding, He also studied life and men. He applied Himself to an understanding of the Father's will and to an understanding of the people to whom He must express that will. He studied the times and fitted in to His day. He was the perfect preacher, the pattern minister, but He has left us no rule of method, and not even one of his sermons complete. For we have access to the same Father, and the promise of the same Spirit, and we are come to other times and other men. Our generation waits for the ministry of men and women who live in the presence of unfolding and eternal truths, and who see the fitness of unfolding truth to human need and growth. Such fitness for preaching cannot be gotten wholly from books, I well know; neither can it be gotten wholly without books. And many of us have been so afraid of merely human methods and preparation that we have failed to co-operate with the divine call and gift. And it is little wonder that we develop no great and strong men in the work of the ministry. If we fail to study and live in touch with the larger life of the world about us we shall naturally fail of what Paul calls "writing epistles" on the hearts of living men. For the world opens its heart only to those skilled in such writing.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE EARLY MANUMISSION SOCIETIES OF TENNESSEE AND NORTH CAROLINA.

BY CHARLES W. OSBORN.

There is an ignorance even among Friends in regard to the origin of the early Manumission Societies of Tennessee and North Carolina, and they are frequently attributed to Benjamin Lundy. In the book entitled "The Life and Travels of Addison Coffin," in speaking of his father, he says: "When Benjamin Lundy visited North Carolina in 1816 he was among the first to join the Manumission Society organized by that celebrated man." The first society was organized by Charles Osborn, before Lundy had begun his public anti-slavery work. Lundy dates his public anti-slavery career as following his acquaintance with Charles Osborn in 1816 and 1817 at Mount Pleasant, O., where Osborn then lived, and was publishing a paper called "The Philanthropist," largely devoted to the discussion of slavery. Lundy's visit to North Carolina was in 1824, previous to the removal of his paper from Greenville, Tenn., to Baltimore, Md. On this tour he organized twelve or more Manumission Societies and delivered several lectures on slavery, speaking wherever he could get an audience; once at the close of a Friends' meeting; another time at a house raising. The first Manumission Society of the South was organized at the Lost Creek Friends' Meeting House in Jefferson County, Tenn., on Second mo. 25th, 1815. There were eight charter members, all perhaps members of the Society of Friends, as follows: Charles Osborn, John Canaday, John Swain, John Underhill, Jesse Willis, David Maulsby, Elihu Swain and Thomas Morgan.

The preamble and constitution of the organization were as follows:

"PREAMBLE."

"We whose names are hereunto subscribed, having met for the purpose of taking into consideration the case of the people of color held in bondage in our highly-favored country, are of opinion that their case calls aloud for the attention and sympathy of Columbia's free-born sons, and for their exertions in endeavoring by means calculated to promote and preserve the good of our government to procure for that oppressed part of the community that inestimable jewel, freedom, the distinguished glory of our country, without which all other enjoyments of life are or must become insignificant. And, while we highly esteem the incomparable constitution of our country for maintaining this great truth, 'that freedom is the natural right of all men,' we desire that the feelings of our countrymen may be awakened, and they stimulated to use every lawful exertion in their power to advance that glorious day wherein all may enjoy their natural birthright. As we conceive this to be the way to ensure to our country the blessings of heaven, we think it expedient to form into a society to be known by the name of the Tennessee Society for Promoting the Manumission of Slaves, and adopt the following:

" CONSTITUTION.

" Article I. Each member to have an advertisement in the most conspicuous part of his house in the following words, viz. : (Printed in capitals) ' Freedom is the natural right of all men; I therefore acknowledge myself a member of the Tennessee Society for Promoting the Manumission of Slaves.'

" Art. II. That no member vote for governor, or any legislator, unless we believe him to be in favor of emancipation.

" Art. III. That we convene twelve times a year at Lost Creek Meeting House; the first on the 11th of the Third month next, which meeting shall proceed to appoint a president, clerk and treasurer, who shall continue in office twelve months.

" Art. IV. The requisite qualifications of our members are true republican principle, patriotic and in favor of emancipation, and that no immoral character be admitted into society as a member."

Charles Osborn was a minister of the Society of Friends, who from 1809 to 1840 traveled extensively, visiting most, if not all, the Friends' meetings on both sides of the Atlantic, and many of them several times. In the spring of 1816 he says in his journal: " During my stay at home I visited all the meetings belonging to our quarter, and had much service therein, as well as some disagreeable impressions respecting the state of society here, which I apprehended to be rather on the decline. I had also many cares respecting my family resting upon me at the same time, and these not all, for the Manumission Society of Tennessee, which I had been the chief instrument in organizing about a year before, and for the welfare of which I felt deeply interested, in the meanwhile claimed a considerable part of my attention."

Leaving home on the 22d of Fourth month, 1816, for an extensive religious visit, coming to Deep River Settlement, Guilford County, N. C., he says: " Here I was at their monthly meeting, and also had a meeting with a number of them on the Manumission business. From here I went to Springfield, and there had a large public meeting; thence to Center the next day and had another at the usual hour; and, finding here a society of Manumissionists, who had organized in consequences of some papers they had received from us in Tennessee, I had a meeting with them in the afternoon. All these meetings were to satisfaction."

Before the close of 1815 similar societies had been formed in six or more counties of Tennessee, each forming a constitution to suit their own views. But later on delegates from these individual associations met November 21st, 1815, at Lick Creek Friends' Meeting House, in Greene County, and adopted a constitution governing the whole. It will be seen from the above that Friends were leaders in this early Southern anti-slavery work. Slaveholders were soon admitted to membership and colonization urged as a condition of manumission, and the association became known as " Manumission and Colonization Societies," with colonization soon to the front as the means of strengthening slavery by removing the free colored people from the slave States. These Southern abolitionists, finding themselves unequally yoked with slavery, removed with their families in large numbers to the North and West, where their principles grew and multiplied till they ruled the country and slavery became a thing of the past. Six of the eight charter members of the Lost Creek Manumission Society removed to Wayne County, Ind., and were personally known by the writer in his boyhood days.

LIGHT AT EVENING TIME.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

I once ascended Mount Washington with a party of friends on horseback, and we were overtaken by a violent storm, followed by a thick, blinding mist. After our rough scramble over slippery rocks it was a woful disappointment to find, on our arrival at the " Tip-top House," that we could not see any object two rods from the door. But late in the afternoon the clouds began to roll away, and one mountain after another revealed itself to our view. At length the sun burst forth and over-arched the valley of the Saco with a gorgeous rainbow; we came out and gazed upon the magnificent panorama with wondering delight, and as the rays of the setting sun kindled every mountain peak with gold, we all exclaimed " at evening time it shall be light! "

My experience on that mountain top is a striking illustration of the experience of God's people in all ages. Faith has had its steep Hills of Difficulty to climb, and often through blinding mists and hustling storms Unbelief says " halt," and Despair cries " go back! " But hope keeps up its steady, cheery song, " It will be better further on." The poor old patriarch Jacob wails out that all things are against him, and that he will go down to his grave mourning. Wait a little. Yonder comes the caravan from Egypt laden with sacks of corn and bringing the good tidings that Joseph is the prime minister of Pharaoh's government! To the astonished old man at evening time it is light!

The office of faith is to cling to the fact that behind all clouds, however thick, and all storms, however fierce, God is on the throne. It is the office of hope to look for the clearing of the clouds in God's good time. If we had no storms we should never appreciate the blue skies; the trials of the tempest are the preparation for the afterglow of the sunshine. We ought never to think it strange that difficulties confront us, or trials assail us; for this is but a part of our discipline, and in the end all things work for good to them whom God loveth and who trust him. It is according to God's established economy that we should be exposed to temptations, and often to trials which threaten to drive us to despair. All this is to teach us our dependence upon him. No climb of duty is so high, so steep, or so hard, but God is standing at the top! No honest work for him is ever entirely in vain. I will go farther and affirm that no honest prayer was ever yet uttered in the right spirit, and failed to get some answer; if not the thing asked for, yet some other good thing has been granted. And oh, how often God surprises us after a long day of struggles and discouragements by a glorious outburst of light at evening time!

This beautiful passage of the bright eventide is finely descriptive of a Christian old age. Some people have a pitiful dread of growing old, and count it a disgrace. They possibly think that if the line in their family Bible that records the day of their birth were subjected to the fashionable process of the "Higher Criticism," it might prove to be erroneous! But if life is spent in God's service its later years may be well described in the quaint Scotch version of the ninety-second Psalm:

And in old age when others fade,
They fruit still forth shall bring;
They shall be fat, and full of sap,
And aye be flourishing.

Some Views on Present Topics.

"MORE EARNEST WORK."

BY H. LAVINIA BAILY.

Edwin D. Mead, at Lake Mohonk, last year, in a plea for "More Earnest Work for the World's Peace," said some things so pointedly clear and true that upon a recent reading it has seemed to me appropriate they should be brought renewedly to our notice.

Having looked the subject over, both in our own country and in Europe, he says: "I am convinced that there is no movement on earth, of anything like equal importance, which is so poorly provided for, so inefficiently administered, or kept so inadequately before the eyes of the people." Then, after referring with deserved encomium to the excellent work of the American Peace Society, he regrets that "the money available for its work is ridiculously small," and adds: "It accuses every one of us that it is so small. . . . It accuses every one of us if the organ of the Peace Society is not in his family; it accuses us that the machinery of this work in America is not made adequate, and is not properly and generously supported."

It has seemed to the present writer that these words might apply with at least equal force to the relation of Friends to their organization—The Peace Association in America.

A cursory estimate of the statistics of twelve yearly meetings shows an adult membership of 41,578. Now if one-half of this adult membership would contribute annually ten cents to the Association it would give an excess of $900 over the expenditures of last year, which sum would enable the Association to greatly extend its usefulness in the dissemination of lectures and literature. And which of these 20,000 adult members could be the poorer for having made this contribution of ten cents for the promotion of a righteous cause?

Again, if one-fifth of this adult membership would send in subscriptions to the paper published by their Association, it would increase the circulation more than three-fold, render "The Messenger of Peace" self-supporting, and send it with fresh bits of thought and information into many a household hitherto indifferent and uninformed upon this most important theme.

I quote further from this excellent address of E. B. Mead: "The literature of the peace movement is large and is magnificent, but almost all of it is unavailable in cheap and attractive form. . . . Much must be done to bring this literature into the hands of the clergymen of this country, into the newspaper offices, into the public libraries, and into every center where public opinion is formed. You and I can co-operate here; and it is a commanding duty."

He calls attention to the fact that "not half enough is done to bring this matter of international peace and order to the attention of the young men and women of our colleges." The Peace Association of Friends in America has sent some of its choicest literature to most of the colleges in three States, and if funds are supplied hopes to greatly extend this line of distribution.

We cannot help feeling, when Dr. Mead says further, "We peace people have been very shabby; we have been very parsimonious in supporting and pushing our cause," that Friends ought to prove themselves a noticeable exception to such a rule as this.

"Why," he asks, "why are we spending our thousands and millions upon our arsenals and forts and gunboats and great engines of destruction? It is because we have not spent our hundreds and thousands with a decent generosity upon the spread among the people of such ideas as would make the wars which we lament impossible. . . . It is melancholy—the failure of the Christian Church to do its part to promote the brotherhood and order of the world!" And I italicize his added words: "Now is the time to change all this."

It is with the hope that these very practical points may be prayerfully considered and generously acted upon that they are here presented anew. Our yearly and quarterly meeting peace committees are probably planning and working more wisely and more widely than they have done in years before, but their best efforts will be emphasized and accelerated in proportion as the Central Association is supported and patronized.

Dear Friends in all our favored land—North, South, East, West—a tithe of what you could contribute without any sense of loss would give fresh impetus to our part in the peace movement and place it upon a basis of increased usefulness and respect.

"There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet and it tendeth to poverty."

PAUL ARRESTED.

Acts 21: 30-39.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed.
1 Pet. 4: 16.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Fourth mo. 27.—In the temple. Acts 21: 17-29.
 Third-day, Fourth mo. 28.—Paul arrested. Acts 21: 30-39.
 Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 29.—The first persecution. Acts 4: 1-22.
 Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 30.—The second persecution. Acts 5: 25-42.
 Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 1.—Stephen arrested. Acts 6: 1-35.
 Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 2.—Paul's sufferings. 2 Cor. 11: 23-33.
 First-day, Fifth mo. 3.—More than conquerors. Rom. 8: 31-39.

In the last lesson we left Paul and his companions at Cæsarea. The verses following (Acts 21: 15-29) describe the rest of the journey to Jerusalem, and the incidents of the first few days of his stay there.

It is likely that Paul did not reach the city until the day before the feast of Pentecost, which has been reckoned to be in the year of Paul's visit (A. D. 58) the Sabbath, Fifth month 28th. The mob described must have been some time the following week, about Sixth month 1st. This reckoning is based on Paul's statement made to Felix. (See Acts 24: 11). It must have been about twenty years since Paul had left Jerusalem on his journey to Damascus, and seventeen since he had been actively at work spreading the Gospel. There had doubtless been great changes in the membership of the church at Jerusalem, and we hear nothing of the Apostles except James.

The incident of Paul's vow must be passed over, though very many interesting questions are raised by it. The direct charge brought against Paul was, that he taught that which attacked the Jews, the Law and the temple. Moreover, that he had brought uncircumcised Gentiles within the enclosure where none but Jews were allowed to go. Verses 28, 29. The temple, as is known, consisted of several courts—court of the priests, court of Israel, court of the women and court of the Gentiles. No Gentile was permitted to pass farther than this latter court under pain of death. It is interesting that a stone bearing an inscription embodying this prohibition was discovered, not many years ago. Paul was accused of taking Trophimus into the forbidden enclosure, or as the account says: "Whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple." Immediately the gates of the temple were closed. Whether this was done to protect the temple or to prevent Paul from taking refuge at the altar is not stated, but though both views are held, it was probably for the former reason. Here the lesson begins.

30. "Moved." Excited. "Took." "Laid hold on." Revised Version. "Drew." Literally, "dragged." "Out of the temple." Paul had probably been in the court of the women.

31. "The chief captain of the band." Literally, "the chiliarch," the commander of a thousand men. This band answered to the modern regiment, and, like it, often fell below the theoretical number. Here it was the Roman garrison of Jerusalem.

32. A graphic account.

33. "Laid hold on." Revised Version. In the original the same word as in verse 30, and indicates that the chiliarch's action was very rough. "With two chains." This was only done in the case of violent prisoners, or those charged with some great crime; it was a great indignity. A chain was fastened to each arm and then to a soldier on each side of him, so he could walk with comparative ease. See Acts 12: 6, and 21: 11.

34. "The castle." This was a fortress near the temple enclosure, with which it was connected by flights of stairs. It was built by Herod, and was used by the Romans as their headquarters in Jerusalem.

35. "The stairs." The steps leading from the temple enclosure to the citadel. The mob became so violent that the soldiers carried Paul bodily.

36. "Away with him!" The same cry which some twenty-five years before had been raised against his Master. John 19: 15. Compare Acts 22: 22. It was a cry for his death.

37. Paul was always ready to speak to his countrymen. "Dost thou know Greek?" Revised Version. This question shows that Paul addresses the Roman officer in Greek. The Roman was evidently greatly taken aback. He had expected to find an ignorant Hebrew brigand, and he was addressed in excellent Greek.

38. "Art thou not then the Egyptian, which before these days stirred up to sedition and led out into the wilderness the four thousand men of the Assassins?" Revised Version. The captain appears to have referred to one of the numerous insurrections among the Jews which had recently occurred, led by an Egyptian who was an impostor. The affair is mentioned by Josephus. The movement was put down by Felix (Acts 23: 24), but the leader and many of his followers escaped.

39. "I am a Jew of Tarsus in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city." Paul had an honest pride in his lineage and his citizenship. Tarsus was an important place, a free city, and its schools of Rhetoric and Philosophy had a high reputation.

40. It seems rather strange that Paul should have gained permission to speak, but the captain was doubtless taken by surprise. "In the Hebrew tongue." Called Hebrew, but really the Aramaic, which was the usual language of the Jews in Palestine.

Pruning a crab apple tree will increase the crop of sour apples, but if you want sweet fruit you must graft in the old stock a saccharine variety. You cannot substitute morality for religion. A new principle produces the fruits of righteousness. Morality prunes; religion engrafts.—"Ram's Horn."

There is a current idea that the best way to start a revival is to preach to the Christians in a church. I do not accept that idea. If you want to raise up a lazy crew on board ship set them to hauling in that man who has fallen overboard.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

TOPIC FOR FIFTH MONTH THIRD.

WHAT DOES THE PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL SON TEACH US ?

Luke 15: 11-32.

Second-day, Fourth mo. 27.—The far country. Rom. 1: 21-25.

Third-day, Fourth mo. 28.—A sensible decision. Lam. 3: 39-41.

Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 29.—A penitent prayer. Luke 18: 13, 14.

Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 30.—Our Father's remembrance. Isa. 49: 14-16.

Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 1.—His promise to receive. Jas. 4: 7-10.

Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 2.—Rejoicing over the found. Luke 15: 4-7.

This setting forth of the course of sin and of the pursuing love of God that draws the wanderer to return, and welcomes him while yet on his way, is called the crown of parables. The first view is of a son whose whole life and sustenance have been drawn from the bounty of one from whom he asks henceforth to be free. Not at once is the outward departure made, but when God is no longer looked to for daily supply and daily guidance, we may expect the agreement of the outward life with even the form of godliness to come to a speedy end. So not many days pass before the complete separation: the fountain of living waters is forsaken, and the wanderer goes to hew for himself cisterns which prove indeed to be broken cisterns that will hold no water.

His substance is soon spent and he begins to be in want. The independence that allured is found to be but a snare, and the "portion" that promised such abundance melts away before the wastefulness of unrestrained desire. Companions in riotous living are woefully deficient as helpers in a time of need, and the prodigal is constrained to put himself under a taskmaster. Father, home and sonship are exchanged for servitude; poverty supplants abundance, and degradation takes the place of honor.

What a discipline there is in the simple necessities of our natures! The prodigal begins to speak of his hunger; but it is not uncaused hunger, and he soon comes up squarely against its cause—"I have sinned." A prompt, humble return and a prompt, joyous welcome follow. The rehearsed speech is never made; the fatherhood is so tender and the forgiveness so freely given that talk of a servant's position seems out of place. And so he who thought his own will and his own way the best, tried them to his heart's sorrow, and comes again to say, "Father," and the father rejoices over the son as one received from the dead.

When we go, we risk our own eternal welfare and grieve the Holy Spirit of God; when we return, we are coming "to ourselves"—to our better selves—and to the Father's house, our rightful abiding place. And besides his own loss, every spendthrift of God's grace charges himself with a fearful responsibility. The effects of his evil example on some one whom he may have influenced may last long after his repentance and resist all efforts toward reparation.

God lets men choose their course; otherwise they would be mere puppets, and only willing sonship is to His glory. While He uses the constraints of love and of wise discipline, He lets those who will, take their journey into the far country, following them with such longings for their return as we know only when we remember the great gift of a Father's love to bring salvation to the lost.

A CUBAN PRAYER MEETING.

I want to invite you to attend an early morning prayer meeting, in which all the members of the church are present except those out of town or sick. We will go in a little early and sit down a little to the side, and I will tell you the history of each one as they may claim your attention. The first, of course, must be Ruberta Noris. She is that portly negro woman seated near the front, black as coal with bandana on her head, but with a dignified, self-respecting bearing that indicates her intelligence and strength of character. She was the first convert in Gibara. Full of faith, energetic in the work of the church, zealous for the salvation of the souls of her countrymen, she has proved to be a fit pillar in the little church which is being built up here. With her beloved Bible as a daily companion, and the Holy Spirit as her Guide and Comforter, she has continually grown in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, laying aside, one after another, old habits and beliefs, as she has come to recognize them as sinful, such as the worship of saints, and the use of tobacco and beer. But the meeting is going to begin now. I will tell you more later. Ah! Ruperta has called for "Onward, Christian Soldiers!" one of her favorite hymns. It has indeed taken true Christian courage to carry her victoriously through all the sneers and taunts and persecutions she has endured.

There comes our "deacon." He always comes in and sits down as staid and grave and devout as if he had been born a Friend. His smooth-shaven face, the palsied tremble in his chin, add to the illusion. Often he sits down away back among the noisy boys, erect, silent, attentive, as if by the very power of his example to rebuke all disorder. He and Ruperta and that young colored woman sitting just behind her are all the colored people who have joined Friends. The latter has a sad history. Betrayed and deserted by a handsome American when only fourteen years of age, her little boy, now five years old, and her invalid mother, largely dependent upon her earnings, though she herself has very poor health, her life is a continuous struggle, not only for a mere physical existence, but also to overcome the multitude of temptations toward her former life of sin, which enabled them to live in comfort. Young, attractive, yet with the freshness of youth snatched away from her, and many weaknesses yet to overcome, her favorite passages of Scripture are, "Create in me a clean heart," and "Let not your heart be troubled." "Whiter than Snow," and "Only Waiting," are the songs she most loves.

That young man over there is one who lately joined the candidates' class. Formerly a teacher, he seems like a very earnest, thoughtful young man. In his testimony in a prayer meeting, last week, he said: "All that I can desire is that I may always be as happy as I am now, that I may always have this same joy and peace in my Saviour that I have now. I have perfect faith in Christ as my Saviour." "I Have Found a Friend in Jesus" is his favorite song.

That attractive, neat-looking woman with the little girls by her side comes from Pueblo Nuevo, the reconcentrado village near by. Ignorant, unlettered, yet with the simple childlike faith and receptive attitude toward the truth which the Lord promises to bless, she has surely made great strides toward better things, even learning to read for the sole purpose of being able to study the Bible. Taunted, laughed at, accused of being paid by the "Protestantes" when new chairs, table, etc., appeared in her home as the result of new thrift and a desire to offer better accommodations to those who attend the meetings held in her home, her simple, humble, kindly life has been a shining light in the midst of the darkness about her, a crystal fountain gushing forth pure and clear from a bed of filth.

I must not forget Don Manuel, an old blind man over ninety years old, his exact age being unknown. Although entirely blind, every day we see him pass briskly by alone, touching the stones or the fence here and there with his cane, going from the house of one daughter to that of another. Although so old and so blind, he seems to have truly been born again, and to be rejoicing in the light of the gospel. Just the other day he was telling how he is now at peace with all men. "Christ has pardoned me all my sins, and I have pardoned all men," he said. "I am a changed man, and want, if I can sell my land (he is now dependent on relatives) to help support the work of the Lord with my means."

I would fain take you to the home of one member who has never been privileged to meet with us in the house of the Lord, Flores, a bedridden invalid for over three years from inflammatory rheumatism. After seeing his freshly-whitewashed room, full of sunshine, and, best of all, his happy face and cheery smile, you could hardly imagine the sorry plight in which we found him on our first visit, about a year and a half ago, shut up in a tiny room without a ray of sunshine, filthy in body, without a bath for months, according to Cuban custom, melancholy almost to desperation from his acute sufferings of body and mind, a sad specimen of humanity. Just as an indication of the change wrought in him by the power of Christ, as made known to him by our visits, and the reading of the Bible and religious books, here are translations of parts of testimonies sent by him to be read in the prayer meeting:

"My brother, I cannot tell you how great is the joy I feel in my soul since I came to know our dear Saviour, who has taken away my every sorrow, and has made me understand that my sickness is only to prove my faith."

"Although day by day my physical forces have decreased, I have grown stronger in spirit each day, thanks to the felt arm of our Saviour, who has sown in my heart an imperishable peace."

These testimonies make me think of the testimony given last week by that young woman there to your left. She said: "You all know how I used to think of nothing but balls and dances and such things. I don't know what is the reason, but I don't care for them at all now. I have dedicated my thoughts and strength to God, and find my joy in His service." A fairly good solution of the amusement question!

But listen, the meeting is closing, and I have kept up such a whispering in your ear that I am afraid you have heard very little of what has been said. Well, come again in two weeks, and I will let you get the good of the meeting.

Herbert P. Cash, Berkeley, California.

John Wilhelm Rowntree arrived in New York on the 19th, and is spending some time at Haverford.

Francis G. Peabody, of Harvard University, is to give three lectures at Haverford College the 30th instant, and the 1st and the 2d of next month, on "The Religion of a College Man."

The article, "The Book of God in the Hand of Man," which appeared in our issue of Fourth month 2d, was translated into Spanish and published in "El Catolico Convertido" in its issue of Third month 15th.

Arrangements are being made to hold the Annual Biblical Institute of Kansas Yearly Meeting at Lawrence, Kan., early in Seventh month. The exact date and program will be announced in the near future.

F. W. Thomas, of Dunreith, Ind., who has been confined to his room for some time, is convalescing, and is able again to attend meeting. He recently held services at Fountain City, Ind., and preached an edifying sermon.

Our friend, Edward Grubb, of London, secretary of the Howard Association, is helping on the cause of prison reform. His recent contribution on "Prison Industries" is a very thoughtful study of an important problem in prison life.

Sophia M. Fry sailed for England on the Atlantic transport steamer Minnehaha last Seventh-day, after visiting Friends in Philadelphia and spending a few days of rest at Mount Kisco, N. Y. She expects to go directly to Harriet Green's home.

At the call of the yearly meeting's committee, a special meeting for worship was held at Twelfth Street Meeting House, Philadelphia, on the 8th instant. A large number attended, and some able and edifying addresses were given. A light meal was served from 6 to 7.30 o'clock for attenders of Twelfth Street Meeting and their friends, and a pleasant social hour was enjoyed by a number just before the religious services began.

Buffalo Monthly Meeting, Kansas, at its last meeting received into membership a prominent minister of the Baptist Church, who has become convinced of Friends' principles and doctrine. Friends at Buffalo are spiritually healthy, and there is a fine interest in the prayer meeting.

The Friends at Bois   City, Idaho, recently lost their church property, but will unite with Friends at Star, a place some twenty miles from Bois   City, and continue their monthly meeting organization and meetings for worship. They are in need of some one with a gift for organization and aggressive evangelistic work.

Fred T. Coppock is now at Stanwood, Kan., holding a series of meetings. Oscar T. Myres is with him to aid in singing. Success attends their labor. Fred T. Coppock goes from Stanwood to other places in Kansas, and then to Oklahoma, to continue the work through the year. He may be reached by letter at any time at East Des Moines, Ia., general delivery.

New York Yearly Meeting's Boarding School, the Oakwood Seminary, at Union Springs, N. Y., will lose Francis N. Maxfield as its principal next year. He will teach in Friends' School, Germantown. Samuel H. Hodgins, superintendent of graded schools in Oxford, N. C., will take his place. He is a graduate of Guilford College, Haverford and Harvard, and has been for some years governor and teacher of English at Guilford College.

Obadiah Chace, a minister for many years of Swansea Meeting, Mass., after a few appropriate remarks at meeting on Easter Sabbath, announced that he was that day 85 years of age. The large audience was perceptibly moved by the announcement, and at the close of the meeting the people thronged the front of the meeting-house to extend their congratulations and love to the aged Friend and to his faithful and good wife, who stood by his side.

Knightstown Meeting, Indiana, was never in a more prosperous condition than at the present time. Ten new adult members were welcomed into church fellowship on a recent Sabbath morning. The attendance is large and the services command the respect and support of the entire community. The resident minister, Morton C. Pearson, has recently divided the entire membership into departments for Christian work, as follows: Foreign Mission, Home Mission, visiting, social, prayer meeting, temperance, Bible School and Christian Endeavor Departments; each of these are well organized, and are expected to produce a written report of work done at each regular monthly business meeting. The plan is working well, and is developing a working church. There is an ever-enlarging field for those who labor, and the church should occupy it in the name of the Lord.

"The attention of Endeavorers of Indiana Yearly Meeting is called to the fact that the annual convention of the Christian Endeavor Union of the yearly meeting will be held this year on Seventh month 28th and 29th, at Earlham College, Richmond. The convention will convene on Third-day morning at 10 a.m., and continue until the Fourth-day evening session, which will be made the opening service of the Biblical Institute of Indiana, Wilmington and Western Yearly Meetings, as well as the closing service of the Christian Endeavor Convention. Splendid accommodations, reduced rates on all railroads and an excellent program will be provided for all who may come. Please arrange to be present.

"MORTON C. PEARSON, President of Union."

In a personal letter George A. Barton gives an interesting account of a ten days' trip through the country east of the Jordan: "We were delayed two days on our way by rains, but on the whole were much favored. We went down through the Jordan Valley, camping one night by the river up by Ain Musa (the Spring of Moses), to Mount Nebo and on to Pisgah, and got a view of the promised land. Then we went on to Medebah, on the plains of Moab, and got a view of Baal Meon and the wonderfully rich country about there; next northward to Heshbon, the capital of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and from there on to Ammon (the Rabbah Ammon of the Old Testament). The country in this part is more mountainous and not so fertile as about Medebah. Then we went on northward across the Jabbok to Jerash, the Geresa of the New Testament. It was a Greek city, one of the towns of the Decapolis, and had many fine buildings. The ruins are the finest which I have seen, except those at Athens. In this part, north of the Jabbok, the hills are covered with oak forests; they are the first tree-clad hills we have seen in Palestine. It was in one of these forests that Absalom got hung up by the hair. If my hair had been long enough, and I had not worn a cork helmet, I might have had a like experience. We visited the Mizpeh of Genesis 31: 47-49; from there went up to an old crusading castle near Ajlun, where we could look over into the Hauran, the East Jordanic land of the tribe of Manasseh, after which we turned southward, crossing the Jabbok on the line of Jacob's march, and passing over Penuel, the highest point east of the Jordan, 3,595 feet above the Mediterranean, from which a view equal, if not superior, to the view from Pisgah, was obtained. Then, via Es-Salt and Jericho, home. It was a great trip. I wish I had time to write thee of it in detail. It makes a great many things clearer. One understands now why the East Jordanic tribes played so small a part in the religion of Israel. Their land had no natural frontier. Arabic or Moabite tribes were always upon them; they experienced no sense of salvation. Then, their country was as fertile almost as the Philistine plain, and if ever they got a little respite from war they gave themselves up to flesh pots. As compared with Judea, it stands like Pennsylvania to New England. We had a quite severe earthquake about 1 o'clock this morning (Third month 30th). Some jars which were on bookcases were thrown to the floor. Further than cracking the plastering, no damage was done in the hotel. I learn, though, that other houses were injured."

BORN.

HOBSON.—At Amboy, Ind., Fourth month 8th, 1903, to Herman S. and Emma C. Hobson, a son, Merle Lowell.

DIED.

HAWKINS.—At Onaway, Mich., Fourth month 7th, 1903, Emma Chaney, wife of John R. Hawkins, in her 41st year. She, with her husband, united with Friends by letter from the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1893. She remained faithful to her Christian vows until death.

HOBSON.—At the home of her daughter, Rhoda A. Goodman, Third month 28th, 1903, Amy P. Hobson, a member and elder of Friends' Meeting of Gilead, Ohio, and widow of Joseph Hobson, aged nearly 88 years. She was a birthright member of Friends, who gave her heart to God at the early age of 7 years, and ever after lived a faithful Christian life.

OSBORN.—At the residence of his daughter, Cora Semans, Indianapolis, Ind., on Third month 31st, 1903, Calvin Osborn, aged 72 years. He was a lifelong member of Friends, an active worker in the meeting, always faithful in the duty at hand. He was superintendent of the Orphanage of North Carolina Yearly Meeting for almost four years.

ROGERS.—At the home of her brother-in-law, William Bundy, Carthage, Ind., Fourth month 3d, 1903, Charlotte Elizabeth Rogers. The deceased was the youngest child of the late Levi and Amelia Rogers, of Ontario, Canada, where she was an active member of Canada Yearly Meeting for many years. During the past two years she made her home at Carthage, Ind. The remains were interred in Friends' Cemetery at that place.

SCAFE.—In Council Grove, Kan., Second month 13th, 1903, Almira E. Scafe, daughter of Benjamin and Margaret J. King, in her 49th year. The deceased was a Friend, and her patient Christian spirit was an inspiration to those with whom she lived.

RECIPROCAL APPLAUSE.

During a Congressional campaign in a Western district largely settled by Scandinavians there was a lack of speakers. Richard Golden, of Chicago, was there on a vacation, and accepted the invitation to make a speech.

"While I was speaking," says Mr. Golden, "I noticed one old graybeard down in front who seemed to be greatly impressed by what I said. He laughed at all my jokes, and applauded vehemently whenever I made a point.

"When I had finished, my old friend down in front was introduced. He spoke in the Swedish language, and, although I could not understand a word he said, determined to show my appreciation of the applause he had given me. So, guided by the inflections of his voice, I applauded vigorously every time he seemed to reach a climax. I was making myself conspicuous, and I noticed that some of the people in the hall were looking hard at me and smiling. Finally a man in the row behind leaned over and whispered to me.

"Do you know what he is saying?" he asked.

"No," I said; "I really can't understand a word he says."

"Then I'll tell you for your guidance that he is translating your speech."

"It is no sign of a great heart for a young man to be generous with that which his old father has worked hard to obtain."

BUILT OVER.

Food That Rebuilt a Man's Body and Built It Right.

By food alone, with a knowledge of what food to use, disease can be warded off and health maintained; also many even chronic diseases can be cured. It is manifestly best and safest to depend upon food to cure rather than too much drugging.

A case in point will illustrate. A well-known man of Reading, Pa., treasurer of a certain club there, says: "I have never written a testimonial letter, but I have been using Grape-Nuts about a year and have recovered my health, and feel that I would like to write you about it, for the case is extraordinary.

"For five years I was a sufferer from a dreadful condition of the bowels; the trouble was most obscure." Here follows a detailed description, and the condition certainly was distressing enough (details can be given by mail.)

"Nothing in the way of treatment of drugs benefited me in the least, and an operation was seriously considered. In May, 1901, I commenced using Grape-Nuts as a food, and with no idea that it would in any way help my condition. In two or three weeks' time I noticed an improvement, and there was a steady gain from that time on, until now I am practically well. I don't know how to explain the healing value of the food, but for some reason, although it has taken nearly a year, I have recovered my health, and the change is entirely attributable to Grape-Nuts food, for I long ago quit medicine. I eat only Grape-Nuts for breakfast and luncheon, but at my night dinner I have an assorted meal." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

HOW DID YOU DIE?

Did you tackle that trouble that came your way

With a resolute heart and cheerful,
Or hide your face from the light of day
With a craven soul and fearful?

Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,

Or a trouble is what you make it,
And it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,

But only how did you take it.

You are beaten to earth? Well, well, what's that?

Come up with a smiling face.

It's nothing against you to fall down flat,

But to lie there—that's disgrace.

The harder you're thrown, why, the higher you bounce;

Be proud of your blackened eye!

It isn't the fact that you're beaten that counts;

It's how did you fight—and why?

And though you be done to the death, what then?

If you battled the best you could,

If you played your part in the world of men,

Why, the Critic will call it good.

Death comes with a crawl, or comes with a pounce,

And whether he's slow or spry

It isn't the fact that you're dead that counts,

But only how did you die?

—Edmund Vance Cooke, in "Saturday Evening Post."

"IT TAKES TWO TO MAKE A TEMPTATION."

A lad of seventeen was telling an older friend, recently, of an experience he had that day. As the apprentice of a carpenter, he had been sent to a saloon to take the measures for a new counter. It was very cold weather, and he arrived with his teeth fairly chattering in his head, for his coat was thin. The saloon-keeper immediately mixed a hot drink, and pushed it over the counter to him. "It will cost you nothing," he said. "Drink it down, and you'll soon stop shivering, my boy." "He meant it kindly, too, and didn't think any harm," said the apprentice, as he told the story. "That's what made it harder to push it back—and I didn't want it." "It must have been a big temptation," said his friend. "That saloon-keeper might have started you on the road to ruin." "Well," replied the lad, "it takes two to make a temptation. There is no saloon-keeper and no cold weather can make me drink when I don't want to. The temptation I'm afraid of is the one that I'm ready for before it comes, by hankering after it. I don't take much credit to myself for refusing that drink, and, if I had taken it, why, I wouldn't have put all the blame on the saloon-keeper, as some folks do. It takes two, every time, to make a successful temptation."—"Sunday School Times."

Conflict is the word that defines man's path from darkness into light. No holiness is won by any other means than this, that sin should be slain day by day and hour by hour.—Maclaren.

Events and Comments.

Within a month the telegraph system of Alaska will be complete, and by fall the cable connecting Seattle with Juneau and the far North will be in operation.
At present there is a gap of fifty miles between the eastern and western branches of the Alaska system.

The five Missouri packing companies which were fined $5,000 each on Third month 20th for violation of the Anti-Trust law, through their attorney, Frank Hagerman, of Kansas City, have mailed to the State Supreme Court a draft for $27,136 in payment of fines and costs incident to the action against them.

The Czar and Czarina of Russia spent Easter day at Moscow. Their Majesties had a simple, semi-state reception, which was in great contrast to the receptions in former years. Not a soldier was seen along the whole two miles of the route from the railway station to the Kremlin, and there was no sign of the usual precautions.

The Sabbath School Lesson Committee appointed by the International Sabbath School Convention held in Denver last summer held its initial meeting at the Cochran Hotel, in Washington, D. C., last week. The committee took up the work of revising the Sabbath School lessons for 1905, and of outlining plans for the five years from 1906 to 1911.

The information received from several missionary stations in the inland provinces of China concurs in the view that the country is at present in a condition which does not justify fears of renewed trouble, though the indemnity taxation will possibly cause local disturbances.
The missionaries' relations with the officials and people are unusually cordial.

Portland, Ore., is to have an exposition in her midst in two years to commemorate the Lewis and Clark expedition, and her people have hit upon one of the prettiest advertising schemes that have yet been thought out. Hundreds of thousands of rose bushes are now being sent there from California, and Portland will be transformed into a city of roses.
Each person who owns a front-door yard or a garden is expected to fill it with rose bushes, so that all may be in bloom when the exposition opens and the unusually beautiful city made even more beautiful.

A letter received from Honolulu states that a very considerable emigration of Japanese from Hawaii to the United States has taken place of late, and that the Japanese Government is making earnest efforts to stop the movement.

The United States Fish Commission, at its station at Bryant Point, on the Potomac, has begun the taking of spawn for hatching purposes. Between now and the middle of Fifth month, when the season closes, many millions of young shad will be hatched at the station and will be shipped all over the country to stock streams where the conditions are favorable for the growth of the fish.

Men connected with the Smithsonian Institution have liberated 1,000 night herons, the birds which furnish the long white plumes for milliners. An aluminum tag is attached to each bird, and people have been asked to report to the institute if they kill any of these tagged birds. The herons were youngsters, and from the reports sent in the institute hopes to find out what is the average age of the heron.

A careless workman kicked over a lantern at one of the Caldwell oil wells on the Hogg-Swayne tract on Spindle Top, near Beaumont, Tex., one day last week, and started a fire that resulted in the loss of property valued at $1,000,000 and the bankruptcy of twenty or more of the smaller companies. There were 175 wells on the three blocks of the tract, and only five of the derricks and pump-houses are left standing. Every company that had property in the Hogg-Swayne tract is a loser.

Wheat sown last fall in the United States comes through the winter in the best condition ever reported. The acreage sown was much larger than common, and the combined effect will be a crop breaking all records, provided serious damage does not overtake it before the harvest. This is possible, but experience has shown that for fall-sown wheat the winter is the most dangerous season. If it comes through the winter in good condition, the summer has few terrors for it.

An immense tract of coal has just been discovered in Hanover Township, south of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., in land owned by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western and the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal Company. Eight new veins have been discovered, which were never before found in the upper coal field, while underneath them are the twelve veins now worked in other parts of the upper region. These twenty veins aggregate 150 feet of coal, the lowest one being 2,300 feet. It is estimated that there are 300,000,000 tons of coal in the tract. The discovery is by far the most valuable ever made in the anthracite region since its general development.

Dr. Adolph Lorenz, the eminent Vienna surgeon, who visited the United States in Twelfth month primarily for the purpose of treating Lolita Armour, of Chicago, who was suffering from congenital disease of the hip, is again in this country. He removed the plaster cast from the child's hip last week, and the little one, who had been a cripple from birth, actually ran to her mother.
The operation was pronounced entirely successful, and a fee of $30,000 was paid for the treatment.

A split has occurred in the ranks of the Japanese diet, eighty members of which declare themselves unable to render blind obedience to leaders who pursue the policy of endless waiting, events demanding that all party officials henceforth be elected by general vote, and that all grave questions be similarly decided. This plainly indicates a revolt against the authority of Premier Ito and the Moderates, and may involve an important recasting of parties.

THE WORLD IS TOO MUCH WITH US.

"The World is too much with us." Night and day
No time have we to pause beside the way,
Where roadside flowers in tender beauty bloom,
Or violets veil the dust above the tomb.

"The world is too much with us." Pelf and sin,
The stress of self, and Earth's tumultuous din,
The ceaseless probing into things unknown,
Eat through our lives as acids through a stone.

"The world is too much with us,"—yet, if we Linked earnest effort to high purity,
Then we would cease through sordid care to grope,
And see, at times, the shy, sweet face of Hope.
—William H. Hayne, in "S. S. Times."

NOT HIGHER PROFESSION, BUT HIGHER LIVING.

The call is not for higher profession, but for higher living. High professions of personal attainment only advertise low conception of personal duty, and many a boaster of his own spiritual attainments, if his blindness were dispelled, would cry out like the prophet: "Woe is me!" It is not the pretension of piety, but the actual expression of it, that must give power to the pulpit. Nor are we an advocate at all for a piety in which the sentimental or emotional type is dominant. Spirituality in a church is not measured by those fervors which are awakened even by appeal to religious sentiments. Many a one has shouted over an imaginary love of the Saviour, just as those Jews who thought themselves the true servants of God while they crucified the Son of God. The proof of spirituality is in right living day by day. The holy fire of the sanctuary burns steadily. It sheds its light in the home, in the social circle, in the office, at the counter, in the shop, and in the field. It is exhibited in faithfulness, philanthropy, official integrity, good citizenship, brotherliness, benevolence. A church which can be commended in these respects gives the best proofs of spirituality that can be given, and a preacher should be a representative and leader in all those things.—Arkansas Methodist.

MEAL TIME DRINKS

Should be Selected to Suit the Health as Well as the Taste.

When the coffee toper, ill from coffee drinking, finally leaves off coffee the battle is only half won. Most people require some hot drink at meal time, and they also need the rebuilding agent to build up what coffee has destroyed, Postum is the rebuilder, the other half of the battle.

Some people stop coffee and drink hot water, but find this a thin, unpalatable diet, with no rebuilding properties. It is much easier to break away from coffee by serving strong, hot, well-boiled Postum in its place. A prominent wholesale grocer of Faribault, Minn., says: "For a long time I was nervous and could not digest my food. I went to a doctor, who prescribed a tonic and told me to leave off coffee and drink hot water."

"I did so for a time and got some relief, but did not get entirely well, so I lost patience and said: 'Oh, well, coffee isn't the cause of my troubles,' and went back to drinking it. I became worse than ever. Then Postum was prescribed. It was not made right at first, and for two mornings I could hardly drink it."

"Then I had it boiled full fifteen minutes and used good cream, and I had a most charming beverage."

"I fairly got fat on the food drink, and my friends asked me what had happened, I was so well. I was set right and cured when Postum was made right."

"I know other men here who use Postum—among others the cashier of the Security Bank and a well-known clergyman."

"My firm sells a lot of Postum, and I am certainly at your service, for Postum cured me of stomach trouble." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

NO UNBELIEF

There is no unbelief!

*Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod,
And waits to see it push away the clod,
He trusts in God.*

*Whoever says, when clouds are in the sky,
“Be patient, heart, light breaketh by and by,”
Trusts the Most High.*

*Whoever sees, 'neath winter's field of snow,
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.*

*Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.*

*Whoever says “to-morrow,” “the unknown,”
“The future”—trusts unto that Power alone
He dares disown.*

*The heart that looks on when the eyelids close,
And dares to live when life has only woes,
God's comfort knows.*

*There is no unbelief:
And still by day and night, unconsciously,
The heart lives by the faith the lips decry,
God knoweth why.*

"IF THE LIGHT IN THEE BE DARKNESS!"

It is a very old remark that we see what we are looking for, that we find what we carry with us, that we must always illuminate that which is without by a light from within. Two persons stand looking at the western sky; one sees a revelation of glory and beauty which makes his whole being thrill with lofty emotion; the other sees only an indication of what the weather will be next day. Two travelers are climbing a hill. Each step of the ascent makes one of them rejoice at the wider view out upon a world full of marvellous color and the richness of far-away tints. The other thinks only of the sweat and weariness of the hard climb. Two reformers are trying to set the crooked world right. One of them catches constant glimpses of the better society which is slowly being won, and enjoys the privilege of sharing the travail and pain which means at last the unveiling of the sons of God; the other sees only the repellant forms of evil and the dark shadows of vice, and he labors away in a sad and stolid pessimism. What makes the difference? Each person in each of the groups has the same world to look upon that the other has. The difference comes from within. The man finds what he is looking for. There is beauty and harmony and joy and peace only for those who have some kindred quality within themselves. As soon as a person ceases to have a loving heart he looks in vain in the world for love. He has become blind to it and does not recognize it when he sees it. You waste your music on the person who lacks a musical ear and a musical soul. The fine harmony is nothing but noise for such.

Do you ask what all this has to do with religion? Very much, indeed. No man's religion begins in real earnest until he gets some spiritual vision, i. e., until he gets some genuine light in his own soul. Christ walked everywhere in Galilee, and crowds looked upon Him "after the flesh," but only a little group of men who had light within them really saw that He was the Son of God. He that had ears to hear was the one who heard "words of life." We hear today all sorts of opinions about the Bible. Some almost worship it; others do not care about it at all. The worth of the Bible must always depend upon the seeing eye. Those of us who have fed our souls on its marvelous pages and found within it the message which has made God as real to us as the friends about our hearth—we go to it with a spiritual light within us by which we read it and which makes us see a divine lesson in every part of it. We find in our religious services, too, very much what we carry to them. Some persons wonder how we can sit so long in a meeting which seems to them dull and devoid of nourishment, when to us perhaps it seems as though the ancient Bethel ladder rises from the place where we are sitting.

All this has an important bearing on the religious issues of our time. It is already plain that the stronghold of religion cannot be in something external to the inner spiritual life itself. The facts of ancient record are being put to the severest tests which science knows. The customs and traditions which have accumulated through the ages are being examined in the blazing light of twentieth century scrutiny. Will every one of our precious heirlooms survive the test? We must wait for time to tell, though for ourselves we rest as calmly as the child on its mother's breast.

But in any case, whatever the outcome, the heart's experience will stand. The soul which is lighted up from within will always find God real and near. Christ will always be, for such souls, the Son of God; the Bible will always reveal the will of God; the Holy Spirit will always be a near-felt Presence, and religion will be as abiding as the sky over us. The eating storm may slowly wear away the iron base of Mount Katahdin, but no course of years will weaken the force of the heart's testimony when it has found God and knows its own life in Him. But if the light in thee be darkness, if religion is for thee only outward and foreign to the soul itself, how shall it go with thee then in the swelling of the Jordan!

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

ONE of the most important events in the history of this continent was the landing of a band of Quakers on the shores of the Delaware River in the year 1682. For the first time the lofty conceptions of life, which the Leicestershire shoemaker had proclaimed with freshness and power in the towns and cities of the English Commonwealth, had a chance to show to the world their practical worth. The time had come at last when the experiment of a holy commonwealth could actually be made. A man could now live his free religious life without fear of stocks or cell. He could at the same time take his part in making the State, in controlling the course of social development, and in determining the character of the laws and government under which he was to live. These men believed this freedom to be possible and safe, because they had learned to believe in the reality of a divine light in the hearts of men. They had discovered this light for themselves, and they trusted that a great commonwealth could be builded of those who were ready to obey this spiritual guidance. Their little commonwealth became swallowed up in a greater national life in which much of this genuine freedom has been preserved and safeguarded, though the great religious principle which lay back of it in the mind of the Quaker has not yet leavened the commonwealth of America.

In the heart of the city which these men founded—a city now containing more citizens than were to be found in the entire country when Penn landed, the descendants of these Quakers still meet to transact their annual business and to examine their inward state and condition. The fervor and hope and enthusiasm of those first years have been sadly tested. The belief that they should be able to carry their spiritual principle into practical operation in the commercial, the political and the social world has long ago died out, and the serious question now is whether “the remnant,” “the seed” itself, can preserve its existence in the midst of changing conditions. Each year the outlook, from a merely human point of view, grows more discouraging. Numbers slowly decrease, meetings are laid down, death thins the ranks of those in the ministry. Once this body held the key to the destinies of the new world. Once the Friends had the chance of leading the spiritual progress of our country and of opening a new era in the religious life of the world. Now we anxiously ask whether this body, whose annual meeting has just closed, can survive. Two-thirds of the meetings are now held without vocal ministry and without vocal prayer.* Can men and women, however saintly their lives, continue to exist apart from the great currents of religious and social life around them? Can the “peculiar people” idea maintain itself? We do not know. In any case the wise man will do well to withhold his predictions. Philadelphia Yearly Meeting still has tremendous possibilities. It is, spite of facts which seem to indicate decline, a remarkably vigorous body.

* Taken from the report of the Yearly Meeting's Committee.

Those who judge only from the outside do not know what forces are within. Its members have profound convictions and they have character and life to match their conviction, and that is a combination which is not easily defeated. No onlooker can foresee just how the hidden forces are to work themselves out. Will the need of the Quaker message for our times make itself felt in the hearts of the younger members so powerfully that they will obey the call and rise to the great tasks of modern life? Will this evident potentiality become actual? If these questions can be answered in the affirmative, then there is light ahead. Once let a real passion to share the task of spiritualizing humanity sweep over these meetings and a strength would appear which would astonish those who now see only defeat and discouragement ahead. But will it come? The next decade will answer that question.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A SHORT, but very interesting, epistle from the general meeting in Australia was sent to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. An exception was made to the almost universal custom which has prevailed for years in this yearly meeting, and the epistle was read. Samuel Morris and Jonathan Rhoads had, in their religious visit to Australia a few years ago, won a warm place in the hearts of Friends there, and the epistle was a loving tribute to their appreciation of that visit.

JAMES WOOD delivered a valuable address at the temperance meeting during Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, in which he gave the history of the call for the conference of all the American churches on the subject of the Liquor Traffic. It is much to be hoped that Philadelphia Friends may join in this great undertaking, and it was a matter of importance that the conception of the conference should be clearly presented to them at this time. The company which listened to the address was a large one, and the interest manifested was very encouraging.

OUR friends Joshua and Isabella Rowntree, of Scarborough, who were sent out by London Yearly Meeting to attend the opening of the Australian General Meeting, have performed their service in Australia and have come to America for a short visit before their return home. They reached Philadelphia on the 21st, having come directly across the continent from San Francisco. They have been attending Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, and they now look forward to a stay of two weeks in New York and New England. They will then sail for home in time for the last week of London Yearly Meeting. Joshua Rowntree gave a brief address at the interesting foreign mission meeting held at Twelfth Street Meeting House during yearly meeting week.

THE meetings held at Twelfth Street Meeting House during yearly meeting week were very interesting this year, and they were well attended. The outreaching work which is carried on by the membership was reported at these meetings and stirring addresses were delivered. The Peace meeting was one of the best in recent years. The work for Negro Education is really progressing. The Bible School reports were in the main encouraging. The average attendance for the year in schools taught by Friends has been 735. The Foreign Mission work is in Japan and Syria, and it has taken deep hold upon the hearts of many Friends. The work of the Indian Association is mainly at Skiatook.

THE most important business of the sessions of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting this year was the report of the committee which has been laboring for a year with marked results in the subordinate meetings. It has been a work full of hope and encouragement, and seemed likely, if continued, to help solve the problem of the small country meetings. Notwithstanding the strong feeling on the part of the majority of the committee itself, that this work should go on, some of the members of the committee felt that their work was done and that the committee should be released. This request was therefore made in the report. The discussion which followed on this proposition was very general, and took deep hold of the meeting. It soon became evident that the feeling in the minister's gallery was against continuing the work of the committee, though for a time it seemed that the general sentiment was almost unanimous for it. In the face of the conflicting sentiment it was not possible for the work to go on, and therefore the committee was released. It was a sore disappointment to many, and one can only hope that in some way what has been so well begun during the past year may have a future fulfillment.

Friendship is the holiest of gifts;
God can bestow nothing more sacred upon us.
It enhances every joy, mitigates every pain.
Every one can have a friend,
Who himself knows how to be a friend.

THE THREE PERIODS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF FRIENDS.

BY EDWARD GARDNER.

THE PERIOD OF CONSERVATIVE QUAKERISM.

The beginning of the eighteenth century found the Quakers in a prosperous condition. Their Society was no longer an experiment. Its early zeal and enthusiasm had carried it safely through persecution and trial into a period of quiet. A great future seemed to be before it. The opportunity of becoming a leading church in the evangelization of the world seemed to be within its grasp. It did many good and great things during the century and a half that followed, but at the end of that time its gain in membership had been very slight. It is evident that it was not very active in gaining converts during this time, and that its early zeal was abated. An attempt will be made to trace the leading events of this period and to offer some opinions as to the causes and results of what took place.

The eighteenth century was a materialistic age. The reaction from the religious faith of former times became very powerful. Religion became subordinate to the State, and affairs of government, both in America and England, became the center of thought and action. Infidelity and atheism, which more or less pervaded these countries, were still more marked in France, culminating with the French Revolution at the close of the century. No doubt the Quakers, in common with other churches, were greatly influenced by the spirit of the age.

The great counter-movement of religious activity came in the first half of the eighteenth century under Wesley and Whitefield. The Quakers in the seventeenth century had carried the banner of religious progress and evangelization. In the next century it passed into other hands.

That a reaction in Quakerism took place in the eighteenth century is conceded by all who have written concerning the Society. However the historians of that period speak of it in such a general way that no satisfactory account of the middle age of Quakerism has yet been written. As early as 1675 an attempt was made by some members to weaken the powers of the London Yearly Meeting and to forego that custom of open worship in the face of danger by which Friends so greatly advanced the cause of religious freedom. The attempt failed, but it is believed that some concessions were made that furnished the seed for the Quietism of the eighteenth century.

During the first half century of their existence the Quakers had become stronger because of persecution; when this ceased, they reformed their ranks, leaving fewer vacant places for new converts. The aggressiveness of early days was largely gone, and in its stead was a growing tendency toward crystallization which is apparent in the Discipline. Nearly all the ministers who visited England during the first half of this period speak of the decay in the spiritual life of the Quakers. In some places the Society, once vigorous and strong in numbers, had become very weak numerically. In other places, where it prospered in numbers, it was discovered that the form more than the spirit of early Quakerism animated the membership.

These conditions did not prevail so much in America till the latter part of this period. The country was new; the people were vigorous and were descended from the best English stock. However the journals of Friends, the records of the meetings, and the fact that the Society failed to make any material growth in numbers for over a century all show that the state of affairs prevailing in England also existed in America.

In its early days the Society had been held together largely by the spiritual zeal of its members. Later, confusion and disorder had crept into the Society so that it was necessary to adopt a Book of Discipline. This was done by the London Yearly Meeting in 1738, and in America about 1759. For many years after this the Discipline occupied a place of first importance among The Friends. It is greatly to their credit that they have always had a high reputation for righteousness, honesty, and careful living. They now realize, however, that too much stress was laid upon strict observance of forms, customs and rules.

This view did not prevail for about a century after 1750, for the Discipline was rigidly enforced. The error was not in having a Discipline and enforcing it, but it came from failing to distinguish between what was vital and what was harmless and unimportant. Plain language and plain dress were insisted upon. A ban was placed upon members marrying non-members or upon marriage contrary to a prescribed form. Music, painting, fiction and many innocent forms of diversion were practically forbidden.

A great many were disowned for infractions of the Discipline. Many of these had been valuable members. Some of them remained outside the church and became embittered against Christianity, but most of them, perhaps, became efficient members of other churches. That a church could lose members as constantly as the Friends did during the middle period and yet retain its organization and influence shows the strength and vitality of the principles for which it stood. And yet, if the Friends had been a little milder in what now seem to have been the minor points of discipline and doctrine, and had devoted their energies to missionary work, they would have been much stronger and more influential.

Another element of weakness in the Society was birth-right membership, which was adopted in England in 1737. The minute of the yearly meeting was in part as follows: "The wife and children to be deemed members of the monthly meeting of which the husband or father is a member, not only during his life but after his decease." This rule was adopted in America a little prior to the adoption of the Book of Discipline. This step "changed the Society of Friends from a church of believers, at least in theory, to a corporation or association of persons some of whom would always be unconverted."

After this action was taken the standing of a birth-right member was determined not by the fact of his conversion and real spiritual life, but rather by the measure of obedience he gave to the Discipline. This added greatly to the value put upon it, and we find all the ministers of that period exhorting Friends to be faithful to the "testimonies" and to be diligent in upholding the Discipline.

This right of membership by birth, while it has been regarded with favor by many, probably lessened the desire of the Friends to gain members from the outside world. According to the Uniform Discipline adopted by most of the yearly meetings of America within the last two years children of members are enrolled as associate members, and become "active members of the church when they shall have made a credible profession of faith in Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Lord, and shall have accepted the doctrines of the gospel as held by the Friends." This action shows the present trend of thought on the question, and future developments will determine how wise the change has been.

The history of the middle period indicates that, although many ministers traveled both in America and England, their labor was largely with the members in encouraging and strengthening them. A relatively small part of the preaching was for those outside of the Society, and the efforts to gain proselytes were neither systematic nor aggressive. In fact, the caution exercised in receiving new members, the great amount of silent worship then practised, and the strict enforcement of the peculiar outward observances required from members, no doubt discouraged many from joining the Society, whom the real spirit and essential doctrines of Quakerism would have drawn to it.

Too much power for forcing all men into the same mold was given to the elders, overseers and committees. This is shown by the action of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting as early as 1718, when it placed on record a minute recommending to monthly and quarterly meetings, among other things, that members be dealt with who "write, print or publish any books or writings . . . that have not first had the perusal and approbation of the Friends appointed by the yearly meeting for that purpose." Practically the same requirement was insisted upon by Indiana Yearly Meeting in 1841. During all that period Friends in official capacity were exercising a power not only inconsistent with the early practice of Friends, but also inconsistent with the principles of civil liberty for which they had contended.

During this period the belief, on the part of some, had become prevalent that inward guidance alone was essential. This caused a lighter estimate to be placed upon the Scriptures. Some Friends objected to having a definite time for Bible reading as being a lifeless form. Bible Schools were unknown, and the instruction of the children in the Bible was very much neglected. Preaching was not rightly estimated as is shown by the decrease in the number of ministers and the fact that many meetings were held in absolute silence. This combination of undue power in the hands of the officials of the Church, of conformity to a strict discipline, of a body of members, many of whom were unconverted, of ignorance of the Bible on the part of some, and of lack of enthusiasm on the part of many paved the way for the Separation of 1828, the most serious event in the history of the Society.

This separation came as a result of the preaching of Elias Hicks. He had been a very active and influential minister of Long Island, N. Y. For some years his preaching had been considered unsound, and the trouble culminated in the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of 1827; the separation was accomplished by the close of 1828.

The essential point in dispute was the teaching of Elias Hicks in regard to Jesus Christ. While Hicks believed that Christ was free from sin, yet he denied that the Father had sent the Son into the world to suffer, or that the death of Christ is of any value to us beyond the example of it. This schism caused a division in Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore, Ohio and Indiana Yearly Meetings; in the first three yearly meetings named, the Hicksites had a strong majority. In the whole Society they were considerably in the minority, for the yearly meetings of London, Dublin, New England, Virginia and North Carolina declared in favor of the Orthodox body. In 1830 the Hicksites probably numbered 37,000, while in 1890 they had a membership of about 22,000, with seven yearly meetings.

DOUKHOBOR WHIMS.

[This article is reprinted from "Whims," Vol. 5, No. 1.]

So the Doukhobors have gone crazy! Refusing to serve in the Russian army and to kill their fellow-men, they journeyed two or three years ago to Northwestern Canada in search of a country where their consciences might create their own environment (and that is the main business of consciences). They were at that time moderate vegetarians. But now they have come to the conclusion that it is wrong to make their animals work for them and they have turned them loose and propose to draw their own ploughs, and then in a spasm of enthusiasm they started out in procession to find Christ, and all our good re-actionary friends of the press cry out in glee, "We told you so, we told you so! It is the reductio ad absurdum of trying to improve the world. Let's try to make it worse. Let's have more wars and more abattoirs and keep sane!"

They talk as if man could be perfectly sane, forgetting the elementary proposition that man is the insane animal par excellence. The new-born child has his choice of lunacies, but I have yet to meet the man or woman who rejected them all. He usually chooses the popular hallucinations of the majority,—the money-making craze for example, which consists in the insane belief that it is good for a man to have more than he can use, and the more the better. It is a delusion which fills our insane asylums and causes murders and suicides without end. Its principal votaries gather in the temple of Jupiter-Mammon on Broad Street, known as the Stock Exchange, and jump and shout like wild beasts, but as we all are infected by the same madness more or less, we pay no attention to it. Then there is the military madness, militaritis, as the doctors call it, with its aggravated forms of militaritis clericalis and acute strenuitis. Those who are afflicted with these sad diseases go out into the open country decked in gold-lace and spangles, beating bass drums, and there they proceed to blow each other up with dynamite. No rational explanation has ever been offered of this mystic rite, but it is popularly believed to have some connection with the Christian religion, whose professors surpass all other sects in the effective performance of it. Another form of this strange malady shows itself in the torture and killing of the lower animals, and the patient suffers from the delusion that it is manly to take pleasure in another's pain.

Now the mistake of the Doukhobors was the belief that they could be completely sane and the magnificent effort to attain this unattainable ideal. They saw the self-evident lunacy of the money-worshippers, filling the world with factory slaves, with congested slums, with alms-houses and asylums and hospitals and jails, and they determined to escape the contagion. They saw the mad antics of the blood-spillers, doing less damage indeed, but doing it more conspicuously, and they succeeded in resisting its insidious germ. But in unloading all this precious lumber on one side of their minds they have lost their balance a little on the other, and the world stands aghast, like the prize lunatic that it is!

If the Doukhobors had remained in Russia and obeyed the Tsar and adopted the habits of their fellow-Christians there and elsewhere, they would by this time have been massacring and massacred in China, and they would have been busily engaged in getting their neighbors' property away from them. Some of them would have become rich and would have become expert in grinding the faces of the poor and pushing them to the wall, and the rest would have been duly ground and pushed. All this they have escaped, and the hundreds who would have died in consequence are to-day alive,—and because these new life-saving ideas of theirs may cause the death of a few of them from exposure, the dear old lunatic world stands aghast! For the violent kind of lunatic hates the mild kind, and the madman who thinks he is a locomotive will ruthlessly run over the madman who thinks he is a lamb.

And what kindly lunatics they are, these Doukhobors! There is a saving grace in their gentleness. The Canadian Government—which is proving itself the noblest specimen of a bad breed—sends them home again, and they go. Do you think the madmen of Wall Street or those of West Point and Annapolis and Washington could be disposed of so easily? Not much!

There is a fair chance for a difference of opinion in the choice of lunacies. I admit the advantages of preferring the prevailing diseases. It is reassuring to be able to say, as you look into the troubled eyes of a friend, "Why, old man, so you've got it, too!" In their search for the deeper fellowship, the Doukhobors have had to give up this species of following-feeling. A new kind of insanity is likely to cause friction in your environment, and I do not wonder at the fact that most people stick to the old brand. Nevertheless I choose to side with the Doukhobors, and I propose to do my very best not to be carried away by the crowd. May the bacilli of insanity in my heart (and as a human being I must confess that they are there)—may they be the rare germs of excessive humanity, too great self-forgetfulness, and overmuch love, rather than the common ones of greed, violence and hate.

And my heart warms to some of the good people in Canada who have felt the truth of all this, S. G. Bland, for instance, who defended these crazy Doukhobors in a Methodist pulpit at Ottawa, "When a Canadian dreams a dream," said he, "or sees a vision he does not start next day for the goal he has dreamed about, but is willing to wait until a railroad has been built and he can go there in a parlor car. The Doukhobor does not stop and ask is this or that thing practicable; his eyes are fixed on God, and he stumbles on, blind to all obstacles. We cannot expect that they will at once conform to the customs of the prudent, practical and worldly-wise Canadian."

And the "Montreal Star" and the "Kingston Whig" are equally generous. Listen to the former: "It is very possible that a strain of that enthusiastic blood may lift the future of Canada above the slough of materialism, breed us many a seer, many a poet, many a man with courage to stand in the gap when colder spirits fail."

May the Doukhobors prove to be an effective leaven for the whole continent. Leaven is not intended to be lumped together. Let their influence become altogether sane by spreading.—"The Whim."

THE MOTE AND THE BEAM.

BY ALIX.

"The idea of Tom Harris claiming to be a Christian. Why, he was as mad as mad could be this morning when the boys shouted 'Saint Red Head' after him. We are going to fix him to-morrow though. It's Valentine Day, you know, and we have the ugliest valentine we are going to send him. He will be perfectly furious, for it is the very image of him. We will see where his Christianity will be then."

Fred's little brothers, to whom he was talking, laughed merrily, as if they thought this would be a very good joke indeed; but his father looked up gravely from his writing.

"Boys," he said, "what was the text you learned last Sabbath?"

"Let us not, therefore, judge one another; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block, or an occasion to fall in his brother's way," responded the little voices. When they stopped speaking, the room was quite still for a moment, for their father quietly went on with his writing.

"Now, father," said Fred, flushing, "I know you meant that for me, but I must say I do hate fellows that think themselves better than anybody else. Now I get mad often enough myself, but then I don't make any profession."

"Stop a moment, my son, what do you mean by not making a profession. Do you not consider God to be your heavenly Father?"

"Why, of course He is."

"Then, if He is, are you not bound to obey His laws as much as Tom is?"

"I must say, father, you put it in a very odd way."

"Not at all. It seems you are both quick-tempered boys, children of the same heavenly Father. One of you has said that he is going to be an obedient child; the other does not care whether he is obedient or not, but means to make it as hard as he can for the one who is trying to do right."

"But I think that when a boy claims to be a Christian, more is expected of him."

"Suppose you heard a man say, 'I have not spoken to my father for the past ten years, or attended to a single request or command he has laid upon me. I don't profess to be a good son, and neither he nor anybody else expects anything of me, so I am free from all responsibility,' would he be free from his responsibilities as a son?"

"Why, certainly not."

"And if you heard him continue to say, 'Now, there is my next door neighbor; he does pretend to love his father, to be devoted to him, in fact, yet I heard him speaking quite disrespectfully in his presence the other day, and I think he ought to be ashamed of himself,' what would you think of him then?"

"I should think he was either a hypocrite or a self-deceiver. I see what you mean, father, and I guess I will persuade the boys not to send that valentine to Tom. It is a little queer, though, when I have so often called him a hypocrite, to find it fitted on to my own shoulders so nicely."

"Your mistake is one that is often made by wiser people than yourself, my son. Always remember that a Christian is only a weak human being, after all, who is fighting against the temptations that you perhaps yield to without a struggle. 'Judge not therefore that ye be not judged,' and be very, very careful how you place 'a stumbling block, or an occasion to fall in a brother's way.'—From "Olive Leaf."

Self-love is an excellent critic, but only of others, not of one's self.

A PLEA FOR MORE TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION AMONG COLORED PEOPLE.*

BY HANNAH M. POPE.

The great need of temperance work among the colored people of this city, numbering many thousands, has induced me to come before you again, to ask for workers in this field which is so ready for harvesting. You all know how near this department is to my heart, and that I am unable to keep up the active work I once did, and because I believe we are not content to be priests and Levites, passing on the other side of this great question, but rather, good Samaritans, wise enough to stop awhile in the rush and hurry of the present day, to consider whether we are doing our duty to this race so suddenly thrust into freedom. I pray some one may come forward and enter into this service. A high dignitary of the Episcopal Church. says, "Coming generations will hold us in judgment for the manner in which we have dealt with these people." Without preparation, no education, except to sail under the Master's guidance, with neither churches, homes, friends or money of their own, knowing the way to nothing, but hoping everything, the negro found himself the victim of misplaced confidence, and the emissaries of Satan were swift to catch him in their toils, while thou who should have aided him stood aloof. Was it wonderful the press of the country teemed with records of unheard-of crimes? To those of us who lived through these years, it is scarcely worth while to enter into details, but the piercing question comes home to each one of us, "Is it nothing to you, all ye who pass by?" I will state on the other hand some facts which may cause an arrest of thought. Wherever the white churches have had definite, regular Christian work, steady and strong, their debasement has been stayed to a marvelous degree. In 1865 probably not one in ten thousand of the negroes in the South could read. In 1895 more than twenty-five thousand were professors and teachers in colleges and schools. Some may say what kind of education had they, and are getting? And I answer, the kind the white people are giving. Only two of the hundreds who passed through the normal school at Hampton, during twenty-two years were arrested for crimes. Time is too limited to quote further from statistics, but enough is given to encourage any one to go into this work. Let us not be compelled to say, "While thy servant was busy here and there the man was gone," for we all know the fate of the keeper, whose life was forfeited for neglecting his trust. As I have so often pleaded, let the white unions take this work into their care, and if it is not feasible to form Women's Christian Temperance Unions, they can gather the children into Loyal Temperance Legions, for it is said that "he who helps a child helps humanity with a distinctness, with an immediateness, which no other help given in any other stage of their human life can possibly give," and we must recognize that in the race so long despised and rejected of men, are young people, hungering and thirsting for light and knowledge. In them are powers and attributes that if developed will do good in the world. Let us then be earnest in sowing the good seed, which, when rooted, will, in God's providence, bear fruit somewhere, sometime, and out of this unpromising material bring forth self-respecting and self-reliant men and women. Responsibilities are opportunities, and opportunities are responsibilities, and formation is better than reformation.

The International Lesson.

SECOND QUARTER.

LESSON VI.

FIFTH MONTH 10, 1903.

THE PLOT AGAINST PAUL.

Acts 23: 12-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer.—Acts 23: 11.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Fifth mo. 4.—Paul's address. Acts 21: 40 to 22: 21.

Third-day, Fifth mo. 5.—Result of the address. Acts 22: 22-30.

Fourth-day, Fifth mo. 6.—Before the council. Acts 23: 1-11.

Fifth-day, Fifth mo. 7.—The plot against Paul. Acts 23: 12-22.

Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 8.—Sent to Caesarea. Acts 23: 25-35.

Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 9.—Safety in God. Psalm 121.

First-day, Fifth mo. 10.—The Godly delivered. Psalm 124.

The passage intervening between the last lesson and the present should be carefully read to gain the connection. The incidents which occurred are truly Oriental in their character, and the words and actions of the people are wholly in accord with the accounts which we find elsewhere in the New Testament. The strict and narrow-minded Jews could not bear to hear of the Gentiles being deemed worthy of missionary effort or being made partakers of the Jewish privileges. Compare Luke 4: 28. Another interesting incident is Paul's declaration of his Roman citizenship. He was at all times ready to make use of any lawful means in his power when it seemed right. Compare Acts 16: 38. It was this fact which he had ascertained that made the Roman officer anxious to bring Paul before the Sanhedrin in order to find out more about him. He himself had run a great risk in binding a Roman citizen uncondemned, and he wished to clear himself. The action of the high priest in commanding Paul to be struck was quite in accord with his character as depicted by Josephus. He is not the Ananias of Acts 4: 6 and John 18: 13.

12. "And it was day." The day after the trial (Acts 23: 1-11). "The Jews." Possibly some of the "Assassins" mentioned in Acts 21: 38, R. V.

13. "More than forty." This number shows how bitter was the feeling against Paul.

14. This verse shows how strong was the hatred to Paul among the priests in that they would lend themselves to such a plot, and yet they looked upon a Jew who forsook the religion of his fathers as an outlaw, for whom no treatment was too bad. Such a one, in their view, had no rights which they were bound to respect. The statements of Philo and Josephus, contemporary Jewish writers, confirm this fact. Now Paul was just such a renegade in their estimation.

* A paper read before the W. C. T. U. in Baltimore, Md.

15. Their idea was to fall on Paul as he was taken to the Sanhedrin and assassinate him.

16. "Paul's sister's son." Or better, "the son of Paul's sister." Paul's "kinsmen" are mentioned in Romans (16: 7, 11), but what was the relationship is not even hinted at. This is the only exact mention of any of Paul's relatives. Numerous conjectures have been made concerning him. Possibly he was a student, just as Paul had been one under Gamaliel. It is not known whether he was a Christian. Some think not, as he would be more likely to hear of the plot if he were not. In any case, he was not a bigoted Jew. "Entered into the castle." It is clear that Paul's friends had easy access to him. Compare Acts 24: 23; 28: 30.

17. Paul again makes use of human means for his protection, though he had received assurance that he would be preserved (Acts 23: 11). "God helps those that help themselves" is a proverb which has much truth in it. "This young man." The narrative implies that he was quite young—perhaps a youth.

18, 19. "Took him by the hand." Probably to reassure him, for the young fellow doubtless was flustered by being brought into the presence of the Roman officer.

20, 21. Compare this account of the young man with verses 14, 15. "As though." Literally "intending to." Note that, while the Authorized Version says "as though they would," the Revised says "as though thou wouldest." In the one case it is the pretext offered by the conspirators; the other is more in accord with the deference of the youth. "Looking for the promise." Awaiting the expected promise from the captain. They took it for granted that he would comply with their request.

22. The "chief captain" evidently was glad of an excuse to send Paul away. As between the turbulent Jews and the intelligent, quiet prisoner there could have been little hesitation in his mind. Again, it gave him an opportunity of explaining from his own point of view how he happened to have a Roman citizen in custody. It offered also an easy way of extricating himself from what might prove a very unpleasant position.

23. "Tell no man that thou hast signified these things to me." It was very important that the utmost secrecy should be observed, or the captain could not carry out his plans. It was also needful for the young man, for he would surely have been assassinated himself had his part become known. Read the rest of the chapter describing Paul's journey to Cæsarea.

As a general rule, those truths which we highly relish, and which shed a degree of practical light upon the things which we are required to give up for God, are leadings of divine grace, which we should follow without hesitation.—Fenelon.

TOPIC FOR FIFTH MONTH TENTH.

WHAT DOES THE STORY OF ZACCHEUS TEACH US?

Luke 19: 1-10.

Second-day, Fifth mo. 4.—Seeking Christ earnestly. Matt. 20: 29-34.

Third-day, Fifth mo. 5.—Graciously received. Ps. 63: 3-9.

Fourth-day, Fifth mo. 6.—Joy in obeying. Ps. 100: 1, 2, 4, 5.

Fifth-day, Fifth mo. 7.—The chief of sinners. 1 Tim. 1: 15-17.

Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 8.—Sons of Abraham. John 8: 33-59.

Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 9.—Physician to the sick. Mark 2: 13-17.

The story of Zaccheus, given only in bold outline, yet abounds in lessons as to the seeking love of God and the power of that love working in those who accept Him.

As to the first, we see Jesus on the way to Jerusalem, with the cross so visibly overshadowing Him that the disciples looked upon Him with awe and followed Him in fear (Mark 10: 32). Yet He was Saviour not alone in His death, but in His life as well, and in such an hour He had time and thought for even a despised publican.

What a contrast between the seeker, Zaccheus, and Nicodemus, who came to our Lord by night! Hearing of Jesus had kindled in him a strong desire; little of stature, he needed and willingly made use of means to see over the surrounding crowds. Though a chief publican and rich, his need pressed him beyond dignity and bounds set by self-regard, and by this he secured his reward. Most of us like to proportion our efforts and keep them within set limits; we have done enough when we come to some conventional line which marks the boundary between the proper and the extreme. If Zaccheus had done this, his name would doubtless never have come down to us in the gospel story; what more he might have missed we cannot know, but what he won by earnest seeking is clear. We need sometimes to do more than "our best."

The joy Zaccheus felt in the proffered companionship found its expression in prompt obedience, and his sincerity was demonstrated by the gift of half his riches to the poor. We cannot know when this resolve was formed. It certainly did not buy the blessing, but it no less certainly increased it. Being ready to give, he was likewise ready to receive. Perhaps as a sort of Roman official, he felt less concern as to the restoration of the temporal power to Israel, and so had clearer vision for the spiritual nature of Christ's work. From the quick and worthy fruitage, the soil would seem to have been prepared before the word of grace came to his ear from the lips of his Lord.

We need not try to settle the question as to wrongful exactions. It is not unlikely there had been some; certainly there would be charges by those who felt the yoke of Rome a bitter reproach as well as a burden. But Zaccheus's gifts were not to be drawn from the plunder of a robber, for a fourfold restitution would encroach upon the legal profits of his calling. It has been charged that some latter-day munificence would better go as restitution money than as beneficence. We may not know how to judge another, but there is here apparent the working of the true spirit of righteousness, and we may be sure that if we owe any such debts it will never be well with us until they are discharged.

The opposition that comes from third parties is ineffectual to keep Christ out of the heart; it is only our own resistance that can do that. Those who are willing to receive Him may have Him as guest, despite the criticism of Pharisee or Scribe.

To be lost and to refuse to know it is to be beyond the saving power of even the Son of God.

Friends' Mission, Kotzebue, Alaska,
First month 15th, 1903.

Editor AMERICAN FRIEND:

At this date the sun of day is creeping back to us here in this northern outpost of Friends' missionary work, and the glorious Son of righteousness is shining brighter and clearer, bringing light and warmth into many hearts, though sometimes the Prince of Darkness seems to prevail and snatch from us our weaker lambs. Only a few days since we learned that some old followers of Shamanism (medicine men) had prevailed upon some of our younger members living at a distance to take part in their annual dance of superstition. So, accompanied by a native convert, I set out with dog sled over the ice on a thirty-mile journey. When several miles out from land a severe blizzard arose, and the air became so filled with snow, so that we could only see a few feet; but the dear Master directed our "goings," and we reached in safety our desired haven. We found fifty-three Esquimaux in their log dance-house, which had no windows, only one entrance, and that practically under ground. It was heated and lighted by native seal oil lamps, made out of stone. The medicine men gave us permission to hold a service, and we did so at once, earnest attention being given to the speaker. The greater part of the audience were probably in sympathy with the Shamans, who were most soundly denounced as frauds, etc. Only seven of our converts had taken part in dance and feast; four of these stopped at once when I told them it was sinful, and the three who continued were disowned. Their "wolf dance" followed our meeting. Three men, being dressed as wolves, with their "howls," the beating of the native drums and the native sing-song chant, sleep became impossible in my "bed room," so, about 2 a.m., I took my "sleeping bag," and, going out, found a native "igloo," or house, and, without knocking at the door or awakening the sleeping inmates, I crawled in and occupied the only vacant place on the floor, which happened to be at the feet of the other sleepers, and, as I soon found out, was the space usually allotted to the dogs, for many a canine growl reached my ears as belated dogs arrived and found their bed occupied by a stranger. Between these "growls," the voices of two or three babies, with voices sadly out of tune, and the kicks of Esquimaux, who doubtless in their sleep thought that they were kicking a dog, didn't get much sleep. So about 7 a.m., long before daylight in this latitude, I crawled out of the house, where fifteen people were still asleep in a 12x12 room, and, going into the deserted "dance house," cooked breakfast on the little tin stove, and was soon on our way to the mission.

The weather is much warmer now, only about 20 degrees below—coldest registered on our thermometer this season, 54 degrees, which means 86 degrees below freezing point.

I might add by way of explanation for our going into a house without knocking or awakening the people that neither thing was necessary here. No matter how crowded an Esquimaux house, there is always room for one more, and I have never heard of any man being refused hospitality for this reason. It is very hard for us to explain to Esquimaux why our Saviour was born in a manger, because there was no room in the inn.

Pray for the work up here in this great white field—this northland corner of His vineyard.

Faithfully His and thine,

DANA THOMAS.

WHAT LACK OF FUNDS MEANS.

Yesterday a deputation of sheiks from Bzibdeen, the third deputation within the last few months, came to see us. They had come four hours' walk to receive the final answer to their petition, which had been sent to our committee in London two months ago. I rose to my desk and read the minute to them: "We regret that in the present condition of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association finances we cannot see our way to sanction the opening of a school at Bzibdeen." Their faces fell. After some minutes of silence one man, falling back on his fatalistic faith, said, "Alas! this is our lot. What can we do?" Another grasped the word "present," and asked what it meant. I said, "For this year, at least." A long silence. "Will you not write again and plead for us?" he said. I replied, "No; Friends mean what they say; it cannot be done. I am sure it was as painful to our committee as it is to me to give this answer, but it is the only answer possible now." "Well," replied the spokesman, "we will come in Eleventh month and renew our appeal." They drank a cup of coffee, and with sad faces they slowly rose. "Do not cut us off from thy remembrance. Think of us; and may the outpouring of thy love reach our children in Bzibdeen!" they said. A warm grasp of the hand—we followed them to the door—they waved a parting salute, with that beautiful dignity and grace peculiar to the Arab, and sadly said, "We will come again."—Daniel Oliver, in "Our Missions."

Correspondence.

AMERICAN FRIEND:

It has been on our hearts for some time to write you a few lines. When we sailed from Boston, on the 10th of Third month last, we were expecting a severe voyage over the Atlantic, but were agreeably surprised. After a pleasant voyage of eight days, we landed in Queenstown on a very bright and pleasant morning. On the next day morning we attended meeting in the Cork Meeting House, which stands on the spot where William Penn was sitting when arrested and imprisoned for having a public meeting. At this time we can sit in reverent silence, with no expectation of being interfered with. How different all things are here from what we are accustomed to in America. No one seems to be especially in a hurry, and yet everything is done just on time.

Engagements are kept strictly to the letter and time. Such warm hearts and open souls met us! After a few days we began to make our way toward Dublin, where we attended Leinster Quarterly Meeting, held in Dublin at this time on Fourth-day of the week. It had not been so formerly, but for a trial it was so arranged, and proved very satisfactory, so they tell us. We had a very good meeting, and were much refreshed after the long voyage. We then visited many meetings in this province, where we had acceptable service in His name, returning to Cork the 4th of Fourth month to attend Munster Quarterly Meeting. The membership of this quarterly meeting is slowly decreasing, being at this time 301. Our hearts ached as we visited many meetings where a few years ago there was a large gathering of Friends. And now they show us a large room once filled at each meeting, and then turn us to a small cosy room, somewhere in the building, where the dozen members which still remain meet from time to time for worship and service of the Master. As we sat with some Friends in their meeting a sense of desolation crept over us, for, as we thought of the hundreds who met there a few short years ago, and now, so soon, only a few—in two cases a dozen would tell the meeting. We felt as though we sat by a friend who was slowly, but just as surely, passing away, and it would be only a question of time until he would be gone. And, after looking over the situation, we really saw no remedy. We are now in Ulster Quarterly Meeting, where Protestantism predominates, and here we find Friends growing in spirit and gaining in power. We have been in some of their meetings, where evangelistic services are being held regularly. These are precious meetings, where many hungry souls receive food for their daily needs. We shall remain in the north of Ireland until Dublin Yearly Meeting, the 29th of this month, after which we purpose going to London, where we can be addressed at Devonshire House, 12 Bishopsgate, Without, London, E. C., in the care of Isaac Sharp.

Thy Friends,

CHARLES AND MAY REPLOGLE.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

Dear Editor: THE AMERICAN FRIEND grows better from week to week. The Lord bless thee and give thee strength and wisdom for thy difficult task. A recent editorial gave me a new impetus in my work.

A. Edward Kelsey,
Winthrop Center, Me.

John Wilhelm Rowntree was greatly favored in the ministry at Twelfth Street Meeting, Philadelphia, on Fifth-day of yearly meeting week.

William P. Haworth, local minister in Kansas City Meeting, has removed from 502 West Fifteenth Street to 306 Indiana Avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

Allen Jay preached a very beneficial sermon to Poplar Run Friends, Ind., on the 16th inst. He also solicited funds to apply on the Earlham College debt, to which a hearty response was given.

The postoffice address of William P. Angell for the summer will be New Castle, Ind., where he is engaged in religious work.

The annual oratorical contest of Friends' University will take place on the evening of Fifth month 2d. Several have entered for the contest.

Francis Thomas, of Dunreith, Ind., is more than 80 years of age, and is still active in religious service. He has a remarkable memory for the Scriptures.

The reports from the quarterly meetings show that there are in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting 681 children of school age, i. e., between 6 and 20 years. This is one less than last year.

La Fayette Monthly Meeting, Stevens County, Kan., was held the 7th instant. William J. Thornberry, of Amboy, Ind., was present. His gospel labor was effective. He remained until Fifth-day, holding ten services to the building up of the church. A number took definite steps in their religious life.

Emma F. Coffin held a series of meetings of two weeks' duration at Marshalltown, Ia., beginning Third month 29th. A typhoid fever epidemic in the city had some effect upon the meetings, but they were well attended. A number were brought to Christ, and the work proved helpful to Christians.

Haviland Quarterly Meeting was held at Haviland, Kan., the 13th, 14th and 15th ult. The yearly meeting superintendent of evangelistic and pastoral work, Josiah Butler, was present and gave some very helpful advice. William J. Thornberry, from Indiana Yearly Meeting, was also in attendance. His service in preaching was very instructive and edifying. He visited and held some meetings in nearly all the monthly meetings in the quarterly meeting, and many were definitely blessed.

Woods County, Okla., is to have a grand gold medal contest in Fifth month. Arrangements are also being made to hold a diamond medal contest during the Territorial W. C. T. U. Convention, to be held at Alva Ninth month 30th and Tenth month 1st. The Territorial superintendent of the contest medal work, Melissa S. Fellow, who is a graduate of Friends University, '01, and county and city president of the W. C. T. U., is an active worker in the new Friends' Meeting at Alva, Okla.

President Edmund Stanley, of Friends' University, attended the regular meeting of the Board of the Friends' Academy Development Company in Cherokee, Okla., on the 14th instant. Arrangements are being made to move Stella Academy to Cherokee. The frame buildings already erected are to be used as dormitories, and a new brick building is to be erected for class and lecture rooms and laboratories. Everything is expected to be completed and ready for school work by the 1st of Ninth month.

Friends at Alamitos, Orange County, Cal., have enjoyed a gracious visitation from the Lord. John Riley began meetings at that place on the 26th of last month, assisted by the local minister, Caroline N. Hunnicutt. From the very beginning evidences of a real revival were manifest, and more than a score of souls were definitely blessed. The church members were much strengthened and encouraged to renewed activity. Some names were given for membership. J. H. Douglas, the evangelistic superintendent for that division of California Yearly Meeting, attended one of the meetings.

One year ago the prospecting missionary party went to British East Africa to find a healthful and otherwise suitable location for a permanent mission station in Kavirondo. The Lord went before, preparing the way, and a site was found combining more desirable features than were expected. This spring another party goes to this field, consisting of Edgar T. Hole's wife and little daughter, Leona May, and Dr. Blackburn and wife. They will sail from New York Fifth month 6th on the steamship New York, stopping a few days in London on their way to Africa. Let the prayers of the home Church follow these missionaries, and be unceasing for the advancement of God's kingdom in Kavirondo.

On First-day morning the 19th instant, Morton C. Pearson of Knightstown, Ind., preached at Carthage Meeting and Alpheus Trueblood preached at Knightstown. Good-sized and attentive audiences were in attendance at both places.

Some special meetings were held for two weeks recently under the auspices of Carmel Monthly Meeting at Carmel, Ind., which were attended by Harry R. Keates, of New York. The result of this labor was helpful and instructive. Harry R. Keates's able teaching on Paul's epistle to the Ephesians and his clear and definite application of it to the needs of the church was appreciated by all who were present.

The Friends' Africa Industrial Mission pamphlet is now ready. It contains a concise account of the work from the beginning, pictures of all the missionaries, scenes from the field, and a map showing the location of the mission station; also the route of the prospecting party. In the requests already received a number of persons have made inquiry regarding the price. To all such we would say no price is asked, but postage will be adding that much to the mission fund. We will gladly furnish the pamphlet to any one wishing to advance the cause of missions. Please address Emma B. Malone, secretary, 702 East Prospect Street, Cleveland, O.

Samuel R. Buffinton's death at his hospitable home in Fall River, Mass., on the 11th instant, removed one of New England Yearly Meeting's earnest workers. For many years he had been its treasurer, and at the last appointment he was continued on the Providence School Committee, having been a member of it twenty-eight years. His clerkship of Rhode Island Quarterly Meeting had been a service of twenty years, and of Swansea Monthly Meeting more than twenty. His usefulness in the affairs of his own city and the high esteem of his fellow-citizens are things of pleasant memory to his children and grandchildren. He was one of the founders of the Children's Friend Society (since incorporated), and served that institution as its treasurer for a period of years. His approach to the final change and entrance into "the Valley and Shadow of Death" evidenced the ripening of soul which is represented by the "shock of corn fully ripe." His beloved wife was gathered to her rest a few years ago, and soon after the event of their golden wedding anniversary.

Arbor Day was observed by Friends' University, Wichita, Kan., Fourth month 17th. A year ago James M. Davis had his landscape gardener in New York prepare a plan for decorating the campus. It calls for two rows of trees around the entire campus, with rows to either side of the four drives and walks leading to the university building. The main drive from the east will have six rows of trees. There are to be clumps of trees in other sections of the campus and in front of the main steps is to be a large flower bed. It will take a number of years to complete the design. Through the untiring efforts of Vice-President John G. Kirby, a large number of trees were secured. All of the college classes, several Sabbath School classes and a large number of individuals put out one or more trees, besides those purchased by general subscription. The elm and maple were favorites, although several other varieties were planted. After the planting was finished the Ladies' University Society, assisted by the students, served a bountiful supper in the college building.

The following extracts are taken from the minutes of New York Monthly Meeting, held at New York the 1st instant: "Third month, 1903, will be a sadly memorable one in the annals of our church, for in this month four of our members passed away—Robert I. Murray, 5th of Third month; Elizabeth C. Woodward, 12th of Third month; Benjamin Barrington, 20th of Third month; J. Howard Yarnall, 20th of Third month. Robert I. Murray was a birthright member and was prominently identified with this meeting as its treasurer for over seventeen years, and with a number of its important committees. Elizabeth C. Woodward, a birthright member and life-long member of this meeting, was in the 87th year of her age when called to her heavenly home. Older members will remember her regular attendance at meeting in days gone by. . . . Benjamin Barrington united with the Society in Fifth month, 1874. He was an example of conscientiousness and honesty of thought and purpose. J. Howard Yarnall, a birthright member of the Society, became a member of this meeting through a certificate of removal from Chester Monthly Meeting, Pa., Ninth month, 1881. He served this meeting faithfully for many years as elder and overseer."

A very enjoyable occasion was the seventh annual dinner of the New York Alumni Association of the Providence Friends' School, which was given Fourth month 4th, at the rooms of the Aldine Association in New York. Among the speakers were J. Russell Marble, of Worcester, Mass., of class of 1870; wife of Philip Carpenter, president of the Society of New England Women in New York; Edward Hagaman Hall, secretary Scenic Preservation Society, New York, and James A. Robinson, class of 1857, and ex-president of the association. It was an occasion of great cordiality and interchange of affectionate reminiscences between the sons and daughters of that venerable institution, and will long remain as a delightful memory to the alumni present.

BORN.

DOAN.—At Thorntown, Ind., to John and Rachel Doan, Fourth month 16th, 1903, a daughter, Bernice.

MARRIED.

BREWER—STRATTON.—At the home of the bride, at Beloit, O., Fourth month 9th, 1903, Esther T. Stratton, widow of the late Joseph H. Stratton, and Jason W. Brewer, of Muncie, Ind. They are making their home at Beloit.

MURRAY—BARRETT.—At the home of the bride's parents, near Leesburg, O., Third month 4th, 1903, Russell J. Murray and Ruth Barrett.

DIED.

BUFFINTON.—At his home, in Fall River, Mass., Fourth month 17th, 1903, Samuel R. Buffinton, aged 80 years. He was a member and elder of Swansea Monthly Meeting, an elder of Fall River Meeting, and for many years a prominent coal merchant in the city.

HEDLEY.—At her home, in Medina, N. Y., Third month 14th, 1903, Eliza Park Hedley, in the 85th year of her age. The deceased was a native of Scarborough, England, who removed with her husband, William Hedley, to America in 1845. Soon after they settled within the limits of Farmington Quarterly Meeting, New York, where she has lived for more than half a century. She was a lifelong Friend and earnest Christian.

HOLDER.—At Austin, Ill., Fourth month 4th, 1903, Mary E. Holder, daughter of Sarah A. and the late Richard H. Holder, nearly 46 years old. The deceased was educated at the Friends' School at Providence, R. I. She then took a course in the Boston School of Oratory, and afterwards taught reading and elocution at the Providence School and in the public schools of Freeport, Ill. Later she fitted herself as teacher of the deaf and made that her life work, teaching in some of the prominent schools of the country.

HUNT.—Near Cleo, Oklahoma Territory, Third month 23d, 1903, Hannah, daughter of Laban and Rachael Hammer and wife of James D. Hunt, in her 64th year. She was a life member of Friends and a Christian for over forty years.

JOHNSON.—At 1022 High Avenue, East Oskaloosa, Ia., Fourth month 4th, 1903, William Alfred Johnson, son of William P. and Eliza P. Johnson, in his 19th year. He was a loving Christian, trustful and patient.

PEARSON.—At Colorado Springs, Col., First month 22d, Mary Fogg Pearson, daughter of Edwin and Eliza Fogg and wife of John Pearson, in the 49th year of her age. The home of the deceased was at Springdale, O., where she lived and labored a faithful Friend for many years.

WASHBURN.—At Whitewater, Wis., First month 12th, 1903, Isabel A. Washburn, daughter of Leander H. and the late Sarah H. Aldrich. She was a Christian and manifested much patience and resignation in her last illness.

Events and Comments.

President Roosevelt summed up the results of his observations in the Yellowstone Park, dwelling upon the question of forest preservation as one of prime importance to the welfare of the country.

The seal fishery at St. Johns, N. F., this year will result in a total catch of at least 315,000 seals, as against 274,000 seals caught last year. The price this year is higher. The total value of the sealing product year amounted to $833,000; it will probably reach $1,000,000 this year. If it does it will have been the most successful seal hunt in the history of the colony.

A bachelor's degree for two years' work is to be granted by the University of Chicago. It is to be called the degree of bachelor of education, and is to be given for two years of strictly professional work in the line of pedagogical preparation. Students are to be admitted to this special course for teachers, either from the junior colleges at the university or from certain approved high schools.

The International Anti-Alcohol Congress that meets biennially on the continent of Europe, closed its session at Bremen, Germany, last week. In matter of attendance and well-known persons present it has been the most remarkable of any session of the Congress. This body of 1,400 delegates notable in science and in the service of humanity is made up of representatives from fifteen different nations. By common consent the Congress passed no resolutions, but the applause for the testimony of science and experience on behalf of total abstinence proved that the moderates were in a minority.

The immigrants now pouring into the country are poor in point of cash possessions, and it is said of most of them that if they could not get work at once they would become a public charge. As the present inrush is passing all previous records, it thus becomes highly important for additional reasons that prosperity be maintained; for a slump in industrial activity would leave thousands of these newcomers stranded on public charity. The average amount of money possessed by immigrants at present is about $16 per person, varying from $62 in the case of English arrivals and $58 for Japanese, to about $10 for Italians and $8.50 for Lithuanians.

The corporation bureau of the new Department of Commerce and Labor is already at work compiling data by gathering all State laws, and the reports of all investigations within thirty years relating to this subject. As a repository of free-to-all information, hitherto widely scattered, the bureau promises to be a great success, whatever its luck may be in getting inside views of present corporation business.

A great storm of wind and snow visited Central Europe last week, varying in depth from two inches in Central Germany to three feet in the Hartz Highlands and on the Polish plains. The damage wrought by the gale on the grounds of the Palace at Potsdam, Germany, was very great. Many splendid trees dating from the time of Frederick the Great, one of them the largest of all the fir trees, were uprooted. The imperial wild park was also seriously damaged.

The governments of Prussia and of the Grand Duchy of Mecklenburg have decided to expel the Mormon missionaries, of whom there are 145 in Germany and 90 in Prussia, on the ground that they are propagating a form of religious belief incompatible with the laws of the State and public morals, and because polygamy is not excluded from their doctrines. The missionaries, who are all Americans, and who come from Utah, will be allowed sufficient time to settle up their personal affairs.

Russia has presented seven new demands and conditions for carrying out the convention for the evacuation of Niuchwang and the two southern provinces of Manchuria. This action on the part of Russia is a breach of faith, being contrary to the "open-door" policy agreed upon among the powers. The United States, Great Britain and Japan are taking steps to compel Russia to carry out her agreement, which, if fulfilled, means the complete evacuation of Manchuria in Ninth month.

The report of the commission of British workingmen, who were brought to the United States at the end of last year by Alfred Moseley, a wealthy Englishman, to study conditions of labor here, was issued at London last week. It presents the views of twenty-three delegates, who separately synopsized their deductions resulting from the American trip. The reports agree in that British employers are not as far advanced as the Americans in their treatment of their employees. Alfred Moseley says that the American workman has a far better education, "is infinitely better paid, housed, fed and clothed, and moreover much more sober."

A salute of 100 guns will announce to the world at noon Fourth month 30th, the close of the first century of an inland empire that Napoleon sold for a song. Seldom in the official life of a great democratic nation will the pomp and pageantry of monarchy have been so overshadowed as at the dedication of the international exposition to commemorate that event. For the first time in the history of the government the entire diplomatic corps leaves the capital on a special train to travel into the heart of the nation. The presence of the President of the United States, his Cabinet, Congress and the Supreme Court at the head of the armed column is intended to symbolize a government by the people and its achievements.

THE AUTHOR'S CREDIT.

An English novelist tells of a literary friend of his that went into the country to secure a house. The business went on smoothly on both sides.

Presently he asked, "Would you like some references?"

"No, no," said the farmer, genially. "You are a gentleman; I can see straightforwardness written across your face. Don't bother about the references. I expect you want to get back to your business in the city."

The friend mentioned that he had no business in the city.

"Oh, then," said the farmer, "I suppose you have business outside the city."

"No," he replied "I am an author."

"What!" cried the farmer, "not an author that writes books?"

Yes, he admitted that he had written books.

A look of doubt crept over the honest farmer's face. "Well, well," he said, "to turn back to the business we were talking about. I think, after all, mister, I'll have to trouble you for a couple of them references."—Exchange.

There is no service like his that serves because he loves.—Sir Philip Sydney.

The firmest possible persuasion that every word in the Bible about God and Christ is true is not faith. These truths and doctrines reveal God in Christ only so far as they point to God in Christ, and teach the soul how to find him by an act of trust in his person. When we firmly trust in his person and commit our souls to him in an unwavering act of confidence in him for all that he is affirmed to be to us in the Bible, this is faith.—Charles G. Finney.

I shall rest no more in the fading dreams of time,
I must have what their joys can ne'er bestow;
Let me press my pilgrim way, the Mount of Vision let me climb,
There is glory gleaming yonder—let me go!
I can see the Holy City whose foundations sure remain.
The homes where the saints forever dwell;
I can hear familiar voices, I shall find my friends again;
Fare thee well, delusive world, a long farewell!

TULIPS.

*Out of the clod they come,
Scarlet, and straight, and dumb,
The lanterns of the dust,
That blaze awhile, and then go down the gust.*

*If all so sure is bloom,
Why keep I in the gloom?
Must tulips by the wall
Break into flame, and I burn not at all?*

*If clod, and bulb, and spring,
Can make this quick, red thing,
Can I not strike a spark,
From these pale days, and fire the wintry dark?*

*These lanterns of the dust
Shall soon go down the gust;
Let mine be such an one Shall light me to the grave, when all is done!*

Sally Wister's Journal

A CHARMING HISTORICAL ROMANCE—A TRUE ONE

SALLY WISTER, 16 years old, daughter of Daniel Wister, merchant, of Philadelphia, kept a journal of her experiences during the winter of 1777-1778, while exiled from Philadelphia during its occupation by the British. The family lived with relatives in an old farm house on the Wissahickon, which was occupied at times by various prominent officers of the Continental army, and was in the immediate vicinity of several important military operations. Sally saw much of the officers and heard much of the fighting, and comments on both freely and quaintly. Gen. Smallwood is "tall, portly, well-made: a truly martial air, the behavior and manners of a gentleman"; Capt. Furnival, "the handsomest face I ever saw, a very fine person"; Captain Finley is "wretched ugly"; Maj. Stoddert, "very reserved" but has "an engaging countenance and address," etc. Later the Major grows much less reserved. Another officer who throws off his reserve is Capt. Alexander Spotswood Dandridge, of Virginia, a relative of Martha Washington. Sally describes him in the Journal as "the handsomest man I ever beheld." He asks her if she is a Quaker, and on her saying "Yes," says, "Then you are a Tory," but this she vigorously denies. Gallantry, flirtation, sociability, war and humdrum country life jostle each other in the pages of this unpretentious journal, the whole making a picture of unequalled value for the historian—and of charm for the novel-reader as well.

It has been carefully edited from the original manuscript by ALBERT COOK MYERS, M. L., who has collected a great mass of material elucidating the text, and also many portraits, relics, documents, signatures and pictures relating to characters appearing in the Journal. It is beautifully printed on deckle-edge paper, profusely illustrated, and bound in antique style with a cover design by Walter Whitehead. Circular on application. Cloth, postpaid, $2.00

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION AMONG ENGLISH FRIENDS.

THROUGHOUT their entire history, Friends have looked upon theological seminaries with considerable disfavor, for two reasons: (1) They have been intended only for a distinct class of individuals, who go into the ministry as a profession, and (2) because the theological training has usually been in large degree devoted to speculative and metaphysical matters, which lie too much beyond the realm of inward and personal experience. But while Friends have been bearing a "testimony" against places, which seemed to them to produce "man-made" ministers, the power and efficiency of our own ministry have been manifestly lacking. We have affirmed with all our might that our ministers were divinely called and divinely guided. But the question has often forced itself upon us, "Then why is not this 'divinely-called' ministry more convincing? Why is it that those who are anointed by the Lord so often fail to reach the life and feed the souls of those who hear them? If God is speaking through this person, why does so little come of it?" We have seldom faced the question squarely, because it has never been one which we have enjoyed asking. But there can be no doubt at all of the fact that God can use a person only up to the limits of his capacity. If he is ignorant, or unaware of the great facts of life, his ministry will by a sad necessity reveal this poverty. He may be a divine instrument, but he can be only such an instrument as he actually is. We have learned through long experience that God does not work miracles through us. He calls us rather to co-operate, or co-work, with Him, and to do this we must bring something for Him to use.

This all means that it is the solemn duty of each individual to be at his best, and it is the weighty responsibility of a Christian Church to make it as easy as possible for its members to get ready for lives of service. If we are to avoid a professional class, and the distinction of clergy and laity, then the opportunity must be given for all Friends to be equipped for the kind of life-work which the times demand.

Our English Friends are now facing just this fact, and they have taken a decided step toward a solution of the difficulties. George and Elsie Cadbury have given their former home, with its beautiful grounds, near Birmingham, for a permanent center of religious education for Friends. The work will be so planned that "Woodbrooke," for that is to be the name of the institution, will furnish a very broad preparation for religious activity in many lines. It will not be a theological seminary, but it will be a place for furthering the spiritual life, and for gaining an insight into the historical development of religious thought and for studying the great social movements of our age. The result should be no loss, certainly, of the divine element which is essential to all efficient labor, but really a great gain of power through the increase of capacity in the active membership. We shall watch from our side of the water with deep interest the unfolding of this large plan, and we shall hope that year by year our colleges will become ever more awake to their responsibilities in this same direction for the development of our membership.

THE KIND OF "PECULIARITY" WHICH IS NEEDED.

THE newspaper reporters who write up Quakerism almost invariably hit upon the queer and odd features. They profess the most solemn respect for the followers of Fox and Penn, but through the lines one can see that they regard Quakerism as a sort of museum of curiosities and antiques. But is not this misconception in some measure our own fault? Have not we ourselves raised "peculiarities" to a place of importance which warrants the outsider in supposing that we are most fitly characterized by such things? The true religious import of Quakerism is almost never grasped. The idea for which our fathers died is well-nigh forgotten. But this is mainly the result, we insist, of our own feeble emphasis of the great seed truths, while we have kept public attention fastened on the odd aspects which were, even at their best, of very minor importance. We began our history with the vigorous proclamation of a religion of personal revelation. The startling "peculiarity" of the original Quaker was not that he wore leather breeches or a brim hat. It was that he knew that the Divine life—the living God—had come into his own soul. It was, of course, a very ancient truth, that true religion means the life of God in the souls of men, but the churches had forgotten it. They had settled down to the view that God dwells afar. He once sent His Son to this world to make provision for human salvation, and to found a church which could mediate between Himself and the lost race of mortals. Then He withdrew to His distant throne and left the Church to represent Him. The pitiful results of this conception of a remote God, reaching humanity only through the sacred machinery of the Church, are only too evident in the world even to-day.

The first and stoutest word of Quaker protest was against this view, which had become entrenched through centuries of darkness, which even the Reformation had not dispelled. "God is not far off. He is no absentee Ruler. He has not left the world orphaned and helpless. We need no elaborate machinery to perform our religion for us. We know this because we ourselves have found a new and living way to God. His life comes directly into our lives, and we have the joy of God upon us and within us all the time."

That was the peculiarity of the first Quakers. They raised life to a new level. They abolished the division between sacred and secular, between divine service and daily work. They undertook to carry religion into every affair of life, to make the most common task reveal the will of God and to do everything as though it were as holy as the sacramental cup was to the devout believer. It was a difficult mission. It called for unparalleled devotion and fidelity. It meant that poor, frail, fallible men were called upon to live in this present world as though they were actually children of God and aware of their divine connection. It is no wonder that little by little this lofty "peculiarity" was shifted over to an easier "peculiarity"! Everything tends to slide down from the hard to the easy. But just as fast as this shifting went on the power of Quakerism declined. As the emphasis went from the necessity of inward experience and personal revelation to the importance of garb and speech and sacred customs, the world began to treat it as a curiosity and forgot the effect which it produced in the days of its white heat, when it proclaimed the reality of the life of God in the soul of man.

To-day there is a remarkable drift back again to the sanctity of tradition. In every denomination there is a high church party, which seeks to restore the medieval basis of religion. Some sacred custom is exalted to the place which belongs to God. In the face of these facts where do our duty and our mission lie? Plainly not in encouraging an observance of form and external peculiarity. We ought to sweep away with a fresh breath of the Spirit all these dead issues and make once again the proclamation of the life of God in the life of man rise clearly above everything. There would be a new note about us in the newspapers if this age could hear some fresh revelation of the divine life expressed through human activities.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

JOHN WILHELM ROWNTREE purposes making a careful and thorough study of all movements and changes which have taken place in the Society of Friends in America during the nineteenth century. He has taken up this study in order to get a comprehensive view of the great forces which have been at work both within and beyond our denomination during this eventful century. He has no thought of stirring up past controversies or present differences, as his sole purpose is light for dealing effectively with the problems already before the Christian world. He will need for this study all the material which is available, and in another column he has specified some of his needs. The plan which he is pursuing is one which will commend itself to every thoughtful Friend, and we trust he may secure every scrap of information which could possibly throw any light on the subject.

THE THREE PERIODS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF FRIENDS.

BY EDWARD GARDNER.

THE PERIOD OF CONSERVATIVE QUAKERISM.

While some of the tendencies of the Friends during this period have been presented, it must not be conceived that their whole energy was devoted to internal organization and development. Many great movements were conceived by Friends, to which the Church gave its active support, and which have been of very great importance to the world. They have been first or among the first in the organized efforts put forth for making the world better.

Before 1791 the insane had been treated in an unintelligent and brutal manner, very much as if they were prisoners for crime. William Tuke, a leading Friend, simultaneously with Pinel in France, inaugurated the plan of giving them intelligent care, and treating them with kindness and sympathy. In 1792 an asylum for the insane of the Society of Friends was established by William Tuke at York, England, and, in the course of time, it was supported by the aid of all the Friends. The good results obtained here in caring for the insane attracted such attention that the civilized countries of the world have all adopted the methods first used by Pinel and William Tuke.

Another Friend, Elizabeth Fry, early in the Nineteenth century, like Howard, found her great mission in work in the English prisons. She accomplished a great work in elevating the moral standard of prisoners and in obtaining more humane treatment of them on the part of the authorities. The spirit of her methods is now being followed in all prisons where reformation instead of punishment is the main purpose kept in view.

In considering the history of the Friends, we must not forget that their honesty in business has been of no small importance in giving character and influence to the Society. They have been so conscientious and prudent in business that not only have the Quakers gained a high reputation for honesty, but as a result of their strict integrity they have been successful, both in England and America, in many lines of business enterprise.

The progress of the Friends in their opposition to the use of spirituous liquors as a beverage has been gradual. In their early history many Friends were engaged in the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages. As early as 1685 they saw how harmful rum was to the Indians, and in that year, the third after the landing of William Penn, the yearly meetings of Pennsylvania and New Jersey urged their members not to sell rum to the Indians. In 1687 Friends of each monthly meeting were asked to subscribe their names to this advice. In 1726 members were asked not to give rum to people at public sales. From this time on the subject has been kept alive in all the yearly meetings. At first Friends were cautioned against immoderate use of spirituous liquors. Late in the eighteenth century the use of alcoholic beverages at harvest time was condemned. As the evil effects of intemperance were more fully perceived Friends became more active in their crusade against it. Under the Uniform Discipline Friends are forbidden to use, sell or manufacture intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and the Western Yearly Meetings are working for the absolute prohibition of the traffic.

From the very first the Friends have been opposed to war. In the beginning they stood almost alone among the religious denominations of the world in their crusade against war, whether offensive or defensive. In all the wars fought by England or the United States the Friends as an organization have remained true to their early testimony, though always with a loss of membership. Their motives have been assailed and their property subject to confiscation.

In England, when the threatened invasion of Napoleon I. caused great excitement, The Friends lost many of their wealthy and influential members who were of a warlike spirit. During the American Revolution the Friends in the Colonies were accused of hostility to the American cause. Imprisonment and fines were rigorously imposed upon those refusing to bear arms or to act as collectors of taxes which were for maintaining the war. The fines imposed for these reasons upon five of the eight quarterly meetings of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting amounted to about $50,000 in 1779.

The well-known views of the Friends upon war prevented them, as they thought, from recognizing the warlike acts of either the Americans or the British as legitimate, but their sympathies were with the Colonies; with the return of peace they gladly gave their allegiance to the government of the United States, taking their place among its most loyal and law-abiding citizens.

In the War of the Rebellion Friends in the North were not forced to bear arms, for, since the war was being fought on account of slavery, against which the Friends had been so active, it was felt that they were not lacking in patriotism. In the South Friends proved even firmer in the maintenance of peace principles than in the North, where many of their young men were enrolled in the army.

The world to-day realizes the awfulness of war and has counted its cost in lives, money and morals. The peace movement is rapidly gaining ground, and arbitration, which Friends have always practised in settling individual disputes, has received the sanction of the civilized world as a means of settling international quarrels.

The continued interest of the Friends in the peace movement is shown by the Peace Convention held in Philadelphia, in December, 1901. This convention was composed of delegates from every branch of the Society of Friends, who, for the first time since their divisions, united for a common purpose. This was an important convention, not only because of its bearing upon the great question of peace, but also because it is an evidence of the kindlier spirit that is pervading the Christian world.

It was inevitable that a Society which was opposed to war should finally array itself in opposition to the system of slavery which is founded upon force. Early Friends were slave holders, and some in England were concerned in the slave trade. Very early in their history we find the agitation on behalf of the slave to have begun, and slowly, but steadily the Friends took advanced ground, till at last they demanded his freedom throughout the world. For a long time they were entirely alone in the struggle, till at length the conscience of mankind was aroused and slavery destroyed.

George Fox first witnessed slavery in Barbadoes in 1671, and urged the owners to treat their slaves with kindness and to set them free after a certain number of years.

Friends from the Upper Rhine, in Germany, settled at Germantown, Pa., in 1683, and in 1688 they addressed a strong protest to their monthly meeting against Quakers holding men as property. The monthly meeting was timid and referred the question to the quarterly meeting. The subject was new to that body, and with equal timidity it referred it to the yearly meeting. That meeting considered it, but concluded that it was not proper to pass any specific judgment upon it at that time.

But good seed had been sown, and we find the yearly meeting, in 1696, discouraging the importation of slaves and urging Friends to give religious instruction to those already in their possession. In 1710 the Assembly of Pennsylvania, composed almost entirely of Friends, prohibited the importation of negroes. England wished the importation to increase, and so the law was annulled. Agitation of the question continued, and in 1730 Philadelphia Yearly Meeting warned its members against buying imported negroes, and in 1758 urged them to free their slaves.

Benjamin Lay, Anthony Benezet and Ralph Sandiford were very active in behalf of the slave. The most noted apostle of the slave was John Woolman. He was a minister of the gospel, and traveled extensively. Everywhere he pleaded against slave-keeping and probably did as much to promote the abolition of slavery as any one man.

For the next twenty years the question was agitated constantly, and many Friends freed their slaves. After 1774 sentiment against slavery had become so strong and the action of the yearly meetings had been so vigorous that by 1787 slavery no longer existed among Friends.

They were at last clear of slavery, but their work did not cease. They took a leading part in the Anti-Slavery Crusade, which continued to gain in power from this time on. By agitation, addresses, sermons and official action of yearly meetings, Friends aroused the public conscience. Much attention was given to the education and the proper care of free negroes, and everything possible was done to elevate the race. Not until 1834 were British dominions free to all men, and only thirty-nine years have passed since America freed herself from this great evil.

The Friends were the pioneers in this work. They labored in the face of hostile opinion and prejudice. They left their Southern homes by the thousands in order to be free from the evil influence of slavery. In their new homes they continued their work for the slave till he had been set free. In the part they took on the slavery question Friends carved an enduring monument, not in marble, but in the hearts of men. Their weapons were not guns and swords, but peace, kindness, meekness, earnestness and the spirit of brotherhood.

That soul is on the certain path toward light which, sincerely desiring the light, constantly submits to the claims of the light as they are made known. That soul cannot stay in darkness any more than a flower opening its petals broadly to the sun can stay in shadow.—Wayland Hoyt.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

COMMON SENSE.

BY JOHN ELLWOOD PAIGE.

In the nature of things there must be a place somewhere for the exercise of strong common sense. It is a gift of God, and, like all gifts, it calls for development. The church needs it, and has suffered greatly for the wise application of it. Thus much it is safe to say without diminishing by a feather's weight the importance—the absolute necessity of divine leading. It is not a question of where divine guidance leaves off and good sense begins; the two go hand in hand, and they won't clash provided both are genuine. "Ye are workers together with God."

The sublime truth which we emphasize—of the immediate guidance of the Holy Spirit—cannot be too jealously guarded. And yet, like everything else that is good, it is liable to be counterfeited. You hear a sound in the night and think you know just what produced it, but following up the search with awakened faculties and in the clear light of day, you find that the sound had its origin in something entirely different from what you had supposed. There is hardly a Friends' meeting on the continent but has had its experience with insane people, cranks of every conceivable shade, every one of whom has claimed to be divinely led, and the consensus of opinion of the church or its officials based upon solid sense, clear judgment and spiritual insight, has had to determine whether or not the claim is genuine. A person stoutly maintains that he is called of the Lord to a certain line of work, and we are admonished that it is a fearful thing to put an obstacle in the way of the Lord's leading. Indeed it is; is it not also fearful to accept the voice of the stranger as authoritative?

Zeal is good, and the church needs a deal more of it, but a zeal not according to knowledge becomes dangerous. Steam is a tremendous power, but one would hardly sit quietly in his comfortable car if he knew an insane man had his hand on the throttle. Enthusiasm is good—would we were more enthusiastic—it is a delight to ride behind a mettlesome horse if you know the harness is strong and that he yields to the bit. Optimism is healthy and a necessity to spiritual growth; a ship under full sail headed for port is a beautiful sight, but she must carry ballast if she would ride steadily over the uneven waves. The strongest factor in optimism is a large hopefulness, but one needs to have a care that his earnest hope does not run away with his judgment based upon conditions as he finds them.

The church recognizes the value of good sense—level-headedness. It learns to know its membership as a merchant or manufacturer knows his employees, and places them in positions for which they are fitted. She makes mistakes even as the merchant or manufacturer makes mistakes, mistakes which she finds it more difficult to rectify than they.

The point I want to urge is that we shelve none of God's gifts; that we develop symmetrically; that our doings may bear the scrutiny of a cool, clear, sanctified judgment; that our words shape themselves into "sound speech that cannot be condemned."

Lynn, Mass.

A MINISTER'S NEEDS.*

BY CAROLINE W. PUMPHREY.

The first thing is to know God, and so to know Him that we must make others know Him, too. In Deut. 5 we get the mind of the people and the mind of God on the subject. They say to their great minister, Moses: "Go thou near, and hear all that the Lord our God shall say; and speak thou unto us all that the Lord our God shall speak with thee; and we will hear it and do it." And the Lord says: "As for thee, stand thou here by me, and I will speak unto thee all the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments which thou shalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I give them to possess it." So it ran under the Old Dispensation, and if we turn to the New, we find in Acts 1, that the great essential of apostleship was to have companioned with the Lord Jesus all the time.

The preacher must not only know about God, but, as Dr. Parker says, he must be a man who is "passing the gospel through his own soul." To be widely effective the preacher must know something experimentally of what he preaches. I have repeatedly heard people say one should never preach above one's own experience. I do not quite know what they mean by it. I think one should preach God's truth as nearly as one knows it, which is, I hope, a little ahead of one's experience, else what has one to press on to, but certainly we should so far practice what we preach, that while falling short of our standard, no one can think we do not steadily strive towards it. We must be real, through and through, in all we do or say.

If the first thing be to know the Lord from whom we receive the message, and make as sure as we can that we understand it, the next is as far as possible to know the men to whom we are to give it, so that we may make sure they understand it. The first purpose of a message is to be understood, and therefore we must so know the men to whom we give it that we shall know just what they understand by the words we use. For sometimes people understand widely different things from the same simple words. For instance, the other day, over the short phrase, "Love never faileth," I heard a preacher explain that it only meant that God's love never faileth. Now, while the unfailing love of God is most gloriously true, I had thought the words meant in the chapter where they occur that true love, whether God's or man's, never faileth, but flows on forever, and if it cannot accomplish its purpose in one way, it will ultimately in another. But the preacher is much more than a missionary sent with a message, he is a minister, servant of God and man, and should be ready for service wherever, whenever and however it is needed.

We must not limit our ideas of ministry. We should be all-round and practical, and not restrict ourselves or others in field or scope. "Be of universal spirit." The great object of Christian ministry is, as we have opportunity, to do good unto all men. To save, in its highest sense, is the prerogative of God alone. All men cannot be helped in the same way, and the true minister must keep alert to help individuals after their individual fashion. This will mean incessant watchfulness, self-forgetfulness, and will to learn. It may mean giving time to social duties that one would otherwise rather spend alone with God, or at the mission meeting. It may mean taking pains to keep oneself pleasant externally as well as in conversation. It is a pity when the King's message loses force because the messenger is dowdy in person, slovenly in mind, or careless in manner. Edward VII. would not allow it, and greater, not less, respect is due to the King of Kings and the potentates to whom He sends us. For we stand in the august presence of the souls of men, and the greatest reverence is due from us to each in view of their divine ancestry and boundless possibilities. Let us learn to talk well and to purpose. The man who falls asleep in a meeting-house keeps awake during a tête-à-tête. Be not only sociable, but genial. Look happy. More depends on looks than we think.

In all our social and business duties and enjoyments "the chief end of a minister's work," as Dr. Cuyler says, "must never be lost sight of. It is to awaken the careless, to warn the endangered, to comfort the sorrowing, to help the weak, and to edify believers; in short, it is to make bad people good, and good people better." Do not let us be afraid of people they are mostly nicer than we think. To quote again from the same preacher: "If you are shy and bashful, conquer your diffidence. A man has no business to be a shepherd if he is afraid of the sheep. Go and talk with people about anything and everything until you get in touch with them, and then, if you have any grace or gumption, you will certainly manage to say something to them about the one thing needful. It is not best that a minister should talk exclusively about things spiritual." So do not feel that you must be always dragging in religion somehow. Be natural. And, for their sakes, be really interested in whatever interests the people you are with.

In giving a message we have to think not only of the Giver and the receiver, but of its purport and the manner of its delivery. Therefore, as the King's message deals with the things of His kingdom, the messenger will be wise to know as thoroughly as he can the King's own Book on that wide subject, to "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest." "Let me tell you the secret of Mr. A.'s power," said a clergyman recently; "he loves the Bible, and he knows the Bible, so that whatever subject comes up he can aptly quote the Lord's own words concerning it, and, above all, he lives out the Bible." Strive to know and understand the Bible. Do not grudge money on good explanatory works, by which I mean not commentaries only, but books of far wider range—historical, biographical, scientific, etc. It saves time to mark your books for rapid reference, and it multiplies the good of them to lend them diligently.

But while "men of the Book," don't be men of one book only. Don't limit your reading to certain lines, but make your interests expand as broadly as possible. Keep growing. It has been well said that "there is not a congregation in the land that does not know whether its minister is a learner, and if he is not a learner he cannot be a teacher." If we do not go on learning we cannot go on teaching. Keep fresh. The fire that is always burning must have some fresh fuel. If, as was lately said, "there is the necessity, even for the most fertile and brilliant mind, of constant replenishment," how much more must we need it who are only ordinary people. Therefore ministers must be afraid of hard work in many different ways. For them especially Pascal's words are true that "laziness is a deadly sin." Only do not let us try to do everything at once, but just plod on courageously as far as we can with one thing at a time.

A message is useful only so far as it is understood. Therefore we must take pains to use only such words as our hearers can make no mistake about. Don't let us fall into a denominational patois. While making no pedantic use of unusual words, do not let us cripple our message by keeping on with a poor, stunted, worn vocabulary. Do not let us have pet words, or phrases, or ideas which we bring out on all possible occasions. A harp has many strings, and if we twang continuously on only one we make no melody, and may end in breaking even that one string. Let us be audible, for "the use of speech is to be heard," and remember wherever there are a dozen people there is almost sure to be one, at least, who is more or less hard of hearing. We shall be better heard if we mind that very elementary piece of good manners instilled in our childhood that when we are listening or speaking to people we should look them straight in the face and not at our feet or the ceiling, or shut our eyes.

We may prevent an exhausted voice, and brain, too, by taking good heed to food, air and rest. Many meetings, as well as ministers, have been hurt seriously by lack of care in these respects. It is, I expect, the most potent cause of the fluctuation of feelings that so often hinders service. For manner, and sympathy, and serviceableness it would be well if we all deserved the praise in which a girl unconsciously betrayed the secret of one Friend's great and widespread helpfulness: "You see she's always the same, and we always know where to find her, and that when we've got her, we have got her. Her mind is never away in other things. She's always really glad to see us, always gives us the healthiest views of things, is always hopeful; it's the best of all tonics to go and be with her." We know the reverse of this, and how often we hear such remarks as: "X—— was not up to his usual mark to-day." "How could you expect it when he was traveling all night to keep his appointment, and is nearly knocked up with overwork?" I once heard a wise little girl ask as she heard it: "But God is so very kind; did He really want Mr. X—— to get as tired as all that?"

If we are to "wait on our ministry" (Rom. 12: 7) with the applied common sense that it demands, we must give up a great many things for it. We shall find endless ways in which the grace is given to us to "minister in sacrifice" (Rom. 15: 16, R. V. margin) the gospel of God. And God values and fructifies the little sacrifices, that others know nothing about, and we forget directly they are over, and for which we have more frequent opportunity than for those which men think great.

Someone says, "The minister must give much time to prayer." Life is so full of other duties, I think I would rather put it that the minister should be always in the spirit of prayer, and never so full of his own message or service that he cannot pray for his brother. If we were always to pray before we criticised, we should more often do good, and rarely do harm, with that sometimes discouraging, and therefore dangerous, occupation. As ministers, I think we should find it helpful if we could oftener talk, read, and pray together, and encourage one another in our work for the Lord. A great deal of advice sometimes comes to us on the line of what not to do. It is a help sometimes to be told by others what to do. We may sometimes be puzzled as to whether it is our duty to say a certain thing at a certain time; but whenever anyone asks for help, if it is possible for us to do so, we need never be afraid to answer our brother's call.

I hope nothing I have said will make us look at ourselves unduly. I feel this so strongly that I had nearly begun my paper with, First thing, forget yourself. Let us catch Faber's spirit when he said:

"O God, that I could spend my life for others,
With no thought of my own!
That I could pour myself into my brothers
And live for them alone!"

I should like to have said a little on the minister's joy and pain in service, the joy of working for the Lord, and with the Lord, and therefore with the certainty of ultimate success, but I have been too long already.

I hope I have not said anything that can discourage anybody, because one of the final things I want to say is, Let us never be discouraged by anybody or anything, and never discourage anyone. Let us be patient, persevering, hopeful always. Someone says: "It is hard work to be a minister, because you can never be entirely off duty, you have to be always at it." Yes, and only the love to God and man which His spirit gives, can keep us so. And therefore may I end with two or three sentences from the charge of an African bishop that may apply to our district as well as to his:

"In our work there is much to commend, much for which we fervently thank God; there is a great deal of energy, of devotion, of capacity for organization; but we still need more love, the love of God, the love of Christ, the love which is the gift of the Holy Ghost, the love which begets union, concord, agreement. Let us seek for this, pray for this, labor for this. The Church cannot fulfill her mission without this grace of love. We also need courage—the courage of faith, the courage of conviction, the courage inspired by the assurance in our hearts that Jesus Christ is to-day the living, ascended, and reigning King over all the world, ‘the same yesterday, to-day and forever,’ and that ‘the gospel is the power of God unto salvation unto every one that believeth.’ . . . To live and to preach the gospel of Christ, that is our mission. We do not need brilliant gifts of eloquence or intellect, although we should earnestly seek them, but what we do need and can obtain is that inspiration of the Holy Ghost, which is won by a careful study of God’s Holy Word, by prayer, by communion with God, by sympathy and by love. ‘Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord.’ ”—“The Friend” (London).

Temperance Department.

Issued Monthly, under the care of the

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS, OF PHILADELPHIA
YEARLY MEETING.

All communications should be addressed to

ANNA EASTBURN WILLITS, Editor, 343 E. Main Street, Haddonfield, N. J.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS OF PHILADELPHIA FOR 1902 AND 1903.

The members of the Executive Committee have shown a continued interest in their work during the past year. The average attendance at the monthly meetings has been twelve. Three new members have been added to the Committee since our last annual meeting.

One public meeting was held in the second month, addressed by Prof. Martin G. Brumbaugh and Edwin P. Sellew. Considering the stormy weather, it was very well attended.

The Media and West Chester Auxiliaries have not held any meetings during the past year, but work at the Boys’ Parlor in Media has been continued as heretofore.

Our mailing list has been revised and enlarged and now comprises the names and addresses of about 1,700 Friends, to whom temperance literature may be sent as occasion may arise.

COFFEE STANDS.

Since our last report the coffee stand at Front and Margareta Streets has been enlarged and painted. It will now accommodate fourteen persons. The man in charge had typhoid fever soon after the stand was reopened for the season, but his wife did her part faithfully, and, with an assistant, had a good trade in serving coffee and breakfasts to the truckers. Many of these are men for whom the saloons have a cordial welcome, and at this stand they have frequently been saved from a drunken spree. When the man who rents the stand had recovered, it was found necessary for him to have lighter work, so the stand was closed earlier than usual, but he and his wife would like to resume their work this summer. They are well fitted for the place, and, while they get the early morning customers, it is our desire that the noon customers may be attracted to the stand in order that our influence may be extended. If any Friends can help in this work, the chairman would be glad to hear from them.

POLITICS AND LEGISLATION.

A protest was made by the Committee on Politics and Legislation against the bill recently introduced into the Pennsylvania Legislature relative to granting licenses for the sale of liquor in Fairmount Park. It was sent through the Law and Order Society.

Afterward a remonstrance was sent directly to the Legislature against four bills introduced into that body. These bills provided for radical and dangerous changes in the license law of the State. We understand that they all failed to pass.

It is our belief that all persons who have the cause of temperance at heart would do well to learn the names of their representatives at the State capitals and at Washington, and as way opens for it, make their views known plainly respecting pending legislation on this subject, either by letter or by personal interviews with the representatives.

LITERATURE COMMITTEE.

The Literature Committee reports 29,499 pages of temperance literature distributed at the Reading Terminal, at coffee stands, the Joseph Sturge Mission, Philadelphia; Boys’ Reading Room, Media; also some literature has been sent to North Carolina, Iowa and Nebraska. A large proportion of these tracts have been given out on the small streets of Philadelphia, in the slums, and at the factories during the noon hour, by two of our faithful members, and by Elizabeth T. Colsher, who was engaged for the period of six months by the Executive Committee for this work.

Six endorsed physiologies and some temperance leaflets were sent to the workers in the girls’ school in Japan, belonging to the Friends’ Mission.

We feel that much effective religious and temperance work has been accomplished through the distribution of these tracts and portions of Scripture; and the benefit of the personal effort required in their distribution is not to be underestimated. Five hundred temperance papers have been distributed at Trenton and in colored Sabbath Schools at Snow Hill and Haddonfield, N. J. Cards and leaflets have been left at the House of Mercy, 411 Spruce Street, and the Deaconess’ Home, 611 Spruce Street.

In looking over the book at the Institute, we find a record has been kept of the number of tracts distributed each year since 1881. It is apparent that a much more general interest was taken by Friends of our yearly meeting in the distribution of tracts several years ago than at the present time, and we earnestly ask the members to provide themselves with tracts on every phase of temperance work, and thus help to bind in closer bands all human brotherhood.

The two pages in THE AMERICAN FRIEND devoted to temperance have been edited once a month during the past year (except for the summer months) by Anna Eastburn Willits, with the assistance of Rebecca N. Taylor. The cost at present for this work is $16.50 a month.

The contributors to "The Friend" have kindly granted permission for the Temperance Association to have the use of one page of their journal monthly, free of charge, to be devoted to temperance, with the understanding that the matter sent in shall be subject to the approval of the editor of "The Friend." Plans for taking up this work are under consideration.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE EDUCATION.

Elizabeth Lloyd gave several talks on Scientific Temperance Instruction at Teachers' Institutes in Pennsylvania during the Tenth and Twelfth months.

Your Executive Committee has for a number of years past recognized the principle of "reclaiming society by redemption of the children"; efforts have been made to induce the superintendents and teachers of our public schools to make the teaching of scientific temperance instruction effective rather than half-hearted. While we regret that no member of our Society has volunteered to travel and work in this service, yet we believe that the efforts of Ella B. Greene have been most valuable. During the past few years she has visited nearly if not quite all the counties in Pennsylvania. Circumstances have interfered to prevent her being employed in this service during the past year. She has now, however, resumed this work, for which she feels a special calling, proposing, according to the direction of the Association, to devote half the year to work in New Jersey.

This is a quiet work. It is difficult to point to any visible or tangible results from it, but we believe it to be vitally important. Our aim is not only to see that suitable books are used in the schools, but also to stir up the interest of the teachers in the subject of Temperance Physiology and Hygiene, and to suggest to them methods by which the study of it may be made interesting and beneficial.

On behalf of the Executive Committee,

J. SNOWDON RHOADS, Chairman.
SARAH B. LEEDS, Secretary.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

"The Proposed Conference and the Results We Hope to Accomplish" was the subject of the temperance address by James Wood, of Mount Kisco, N. Y., at the annual meeting of the association. He stated that "A committee of the Five Years Meeting of the Society of Friends in America has invited every religious denomination in America to send delegates to a conference at Washington, D. C., on the second Fourth-day in Third month, 1906, to discuss the liquor evil and attempt to decide upon some method for fighting it."

"The failure of individuals and bodies of men to agree as to methods of attack," said the speaker, "has always been the chief cause for the failure of the temperance advocates to accomplish their purpose."

"We must remember," he continued, "that this evil traffic has held a very respectable position among the people of all countries until recent years."

Much amusement was aroused among his hearers when he said: "In former generations Friends had almost entire control of the traffic in New England rum, and many a large fortune was amassed in the trade." The meeting was of vital interest.

ABSTAINERS PREVAIL IN ANTI-ALCOHOL CONGRESS.

Berlin Fourth month 19th.—Mary H. Hunt, of Boston, representing the Women's Christian Temperance Union at the International Anti-Alcohol Congress at Bremen, issued the following statement to-day:

"The International Anti-Alcohol Congress that meets biennially on the continent closed its session at Bremen to-day. In matter of attendance and well-known persons present it has been the most remarkable of any session of the Congress. This body of 1,400 delegates notable in science and in the service of humanity, as university professors or for their hereditary rank have come here from fifteen different nations.

"The Congress discussed the teachings of science concerning a moderate use of alcohol and the effect of its use on every phase of human progress. Two schools of thought were represented, the moderates, who called themselves 'the temperate school,' and the total abstiners, who are called the 'abstinence school.' By common consent the Congress passed no resolutions, but the applause for the testimony of science and experience on behalf of total abstinence proved that the moderates were in a minority.

"The statement of Dr. August Forel, one of the foremost authorities in the world on brain and nerve diseases, that neither science nor experience furnishes evidence to justify calling alcohol a food called out prolonged acclamations. The papers read by notable members of the Congress during these six days will be printed for wide distribution.

"In a paper on 'Alcohol and Art,' Professor Berens, Director of the German School of Art, at Dusseldorf, said that alcohol, by dulling the spiritual aspirations essential to the greatest work, is an enemy of the highest attainment in art.

"A paper on 'Scientific Temperance Education in the Public Schools in the United States,' by an American representative (Mary H. Hunt) led to a discussion in which twenty speakers took part, and nearly every one of them commended the extension of the American method for the prevention of intemperance."—Exchange.

A HOPEFUL SIDE TO OUR DRINK BILL.

A recent article entitled, "Our Drink Bill," in the columns of the "New York Commercial-Advertiser" says: "Since 1880 the use of alcoholic beverages has nearly doubled, having increased from 10.9 gallons per capita to 19.48 gallons, a gain of over 93 per cent."

I am asked how it happens that with twenty years of study of scientific temperance physiology in the public schools the per capita consumption of alcohol has nearly doubled. Although the question is asked as though it were unanswerable, in point of fact the figures show that the study in question is accomplishing the end for which it was designed, instead of the reverse.

In the first place, we have not had twenty years of universal study of scientific temperance physiology in the public schools. It has taken twenty years to secure the passage of the laws requiring the subject to be taught and to get it on a working basis in the schools. The laws requiring the subject have been separate enactments by each State and by the national Congress. The first law was passed in 1882 in a small eastern State, the last one in 1902 in Georgia. It is thus only about ten or eleven years that the study has been so generally pursued throughout the schools of the country as to justify a conclusion as to its results as shown by census reports.

SOME RECENT RESULTS.

Further statistics quoted in the article published in the "Commercial-Advertiser," from the report of the internal revenue department, show that during the eleven years closing with 1902, in which time temperance instruction has been quite general in the schools of the United States, there has been a total per capita gain in the country in the use of alcoholic liquors of all kinds of only 2.36 gallons. If, therefore, as the "Commercial-Advertiser" says, there has been an increase of 9.39 gallons per capita during the last twenty-two years, it is evident that for the eleven years preceeding the time temperance education became general there was a gain of 7.03 per capita. Thus during the eleven years when temperance instruction has been nearly universal, the per capita gain was less than one-third as great as in the preceding period of the same number of years when comparatively little instruction was given along this line.

Something evidently has reduced this gain, and it is just to estimate temperance education as an important factor in producing this result.

THE ARTS ELIMINATED.

In drawing conclusions from these figures, two other qualifying conditions should be considered. First, the statistics quoted show that there has been a decline in the per capita consumption of spirits of .15 gallons during the last ten years, but they do not show whether the alcohol used in the arts, instead of for beverage purposes, is a part of the sum total of the gallons enumerated as spirits. If it is so included, all spirits used in the arts in the past ten years should be deducted to show what the nation's drink bill in spirits really is. Such deduction might still further reduce the per capita decline already noted in the spirits column.

In response to a letter of inquiry from the writer, the commissioner of internal revenue at Washington said, Tenth month 10th, 1899: "Spirits referred to in this office is ethyl alcohol. . . . This office does not show the quantity of spirits used in the arts."

THE IMMIGRATION SIDE.

Second, any just estimate of the habits of the American, as shown by the increase in the consumption of wine and beer in the United States, as reported by the "Commercial-Advertiser," must take into consideration the fact that the number of users of these beverages is being yearly augmented by an enormous immigration from beer and wine using countries, averaging over 400,000 immigrants annually for the past eleven years. This increase would be very serious if as soon as these people arrive our public schools were not teaching their children, with other laws of health, that alcohol in all forms is a hindrance to that improvement in physical and financial conditions for which they have come to this country—Mary H. Hunt, in "The New Voice."

First-day, Fifth mo. 17.—Confidence in God. Ps. 23: 1-6.

In the verses intervening between the last lesson and the present the account is given of Paul's being taken to Cæsarea, and his detention there by the Roman governor, and also of the charge brought against him by the Jews. As the inhabitants of the provinces were not familiar with Roman Law, it was customary for them to employ lawyers who were acquainted with it. In this case the Jews employed "one Tertullus" (Acts 24: 1, 2). Whether this man was a Jew or not, it is impossible to say; the name is Roman, but many Jews had Roman names—witness Paul himself. Whatever nationality he might have, he was evidently a shrewd man, and careful to dwell only on such points as would be pleasing to the Governor. Note that he makes three distinct charges against Paul. 1. Sedition; 2. Heresy against the Jewish Religion; 3. Sacrilege. This last was an offense not only against Jewish law, but technically against Roman law as well, for Rome protected her subjects in their religion. Tertullus's object was not to get Paul punished by the Romans, but to have him turned over to the Jews to be dealt with as they saw fit.

Felix was not a Roman by birth; he had been a slave and became a favorite of the Roman Emperor. He was a grossly wicked man, and was one of the worst governors the Jews had ever had. Much of Tertullus's speech was pure flattery, and contained misstatements as well. The Revised Version should be consulted, as there are numerous changes made in this passage.

10. "Then Paul." Paul always was courteous and respectful in his address to the Roman authorities. Note the dignity of his words. "Of many years." Felix had been in office for about six or eight years. "I do cheerfully make my defense." Revised Version. Felix was familiar with Jewish affairs and the Jewish point of view.

11. Paul now takes up the charges against him. 1. That of sedition. It was only twelve days since he went to Jerusalem, and his going there was for the purpose of worship according to the practice of his people, a custom with which Felix was perfectly familiar. There was no sedition in this, nor time to carry out plans if they existed.

12. He denies point blank the charge. He was not found even disputing with any one, or stirring up the people in the synagogues or in the streets.

13. "Neither can they prove to thee the things whereof they now accuse me." Revised Version. This was a direct challenge. And there was no attempt to accept it, so far as we know. Thus the only serious charge according to Roman law—sedition—fell to the ground.

14. "But this I confess." Having disposed of the charge of sedition, Paul takes up that of heresy. "That after the Way, which they call a sect, so serve I the God of our fathers." Revised Version. There were sects among the Jews—Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes—Paul acknowledges that he belongs to the so-called sect of the Nazarenes (verse 5). It is only in this passage (verse 5) that Christians are called by this name in the New Testament, though it was the name commonly used by the Jews at this time. It is still employed by Jews and Mohammedans. "Believing all things," etc. Notwithstanding this fact he still claims to be a good Jew; for him Christianity was not a sect, but the carrying out of the Law and the fulfillment of prophecy. Compare Acts 13: 32, 33.

15. "Having hope toward God, which these also themselves look for, that there shall be a resurrection both of the just and unjust." Revised Version. "These themselves" are the Jewish accusers of Paul who were present and whom Paul's words show to have been Pharisees. Compare Acts 23: 8.

16. "Herein." In this confession which he has just made. "Exercise myself." Just as an athlete trains himself for the feats which he expects to perform. Compare 1 Cor. 9: 27; 1 Jno. 3: 3. "Void of offense." To be clear in the sight of God and man and not to be the cause of stumbling in any. "Alway." Emphatic; it was a continual matter. Could there be a higher aim than this?

The answer to the third charge—that of sacrilege—is a simple denial, coupled with a statement of the facts which brought him to Jerusalem, and which the Jews either willfully, or for some other cause, misunderstood. The account given in verses 17-21 should be read. Felix did not release Paul, but kept the matter in suspense. Probably this was a matter of policy. By keeping Paul in custody he pleased the Jews, and at the same time avoided outrageous injustice to Paul and gave him some indulgence. From what we know of Roman customs the word "liberty," verse 23, would mean indulgence in regard to food, lodging, and seeing his friends; it did not mean release from being chained to a soldier.

24. "After certain days." It is not known how long. "Drusilla." Was the daughter of Herod Agrippa I. (Acts 12: 23), and sister of Herod Agrippa II. (Acts 25: 13, 23, etc.), and a Jewess. Why Paul was sent for is not known; probably it was curiosity, and also the thought that he might be paid by Paul to release him (verse 26).

25. Paul did not hesitate to speak the Gospel in its fullness. "Righteousness" of life, and thought, desire. "Temperance." Here, as always in the New Testament, self-control, self-restraint. In both these qualities Felix was wholly wanting. "A more convenient season." It never came.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Now is the accepted time."
2. The "Way," the name for the Christian life and belief in the early Church—"Are you in the 'Way'?" was their question.

TOPIC FOR FIFTH MONTH SEVENTEENTH.

"THE LAD WITH THE LOAVES AND FISHES."

John 6: 9-13.

(A Meeting with the Juniors.)

Second-day, Fifth mo. 11.—Faithful in little. Luke 19: 12-19.

Third-day, Fifth mo. 12.—"Whatsoever He sayeth." John 2: 1-10.

Fourth-day, Fifth mo. 13.—The widow's cruse. 1 Kings 17: 10-16.

Fifth-day, Fifth mo. 14.—Everything possible. Mark 10: 23-27.

Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 15.—Thankful for daily blessings. Ps. 103: 1-5.

Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 16.—Wise economy. Prov. 19: 15, 16, 24.

If we should question in our own minds what a lad can do, the answer would be worth much or little just as we locate it. We can place it away back in Bible times and look with a sort of wonder and awe on the privileges of Samuel and David and this unnamed provisioner of these hungry multitudes; and if our answer gets no nearer to us than that, it is of no very great benefit. If we come down to pioneer days in our own country and read how boys developed remarkable bravery and resourcefulness in the midst of circumstances no longer to be found, and conclude that boys' chances are all at an end, we will be far from a wise conclusion. Even if we admit that there are still things that some boys and girls can do, but hold that they are remote from us, that God has neither equipped nor called us to fill places of marked usefulness, we have not yet reached the right answer.

The point to get at is what each one can do; and if the times have changed and the opportunities are different, we can feel quite sure that we fit into these times and can use these opportunities much better than would be the case if we were carried back or away to unaccustomed surroundings. If we could be, we would doubtless quickly ask, like David, to be allowed to put off this unproved equipment and return to the things with which we were familiar.

As to this lad, we will think first, perhaps, of his being where he could be found. Perhaps we know some of whom that cannot always be said, some who wish to read or play undisturbed, and who therefore get beyond call, or at least out of sight, thus missing their opportunities for being used. And after all the greatest thing to aspire to is to be used, to be helpful. In the apparent dilemma of the anxious disciples, here was the only straw to be grasped at—a mere trifle, they reported, but something; and it solved the problem, though none but Jesus foresaw the manner. A life-time memory of thankfulness was this boy's reward for being on hand.

Another point that appears is that he gave up all that he had for the common need. He may have taken pay; we do not know as to that, but evidently he reserved nothing for himself. We may argue that Christ's blessing is the one essential and that it matters little whether we give him all or keep back a part for self. We know from His testimony as to the widow's mites that the smallness of the gift does not restrict His blessing; but we know also that the littleness of the givers worked death to Ananias and Sapphira; and that principle still operates.

This lad did his best, gave all he had; Peter or John could do no more. No one can expect to make the highest achievement who is content to do less.

JAMAICAN IMPRESSIONS.

[The support of Friends' missionary work in Jamaica falls mainly upon the members of Iowa Yearly Meeting, and the workers are selected and sent out by the Foreign Mission Board of that yearly meeting. Harry D. Lane, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, who is treasurer of the board, has just returned from a visit in the island and contributes a few thoughts for our readers.]

Acting upon the suggestion of the editor of your Missionary Department, I will endeavor to state to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND some of the impressions I received during a seventeen days' visit among the people and mission stations of Friends on the island of Jamaica.

There are two distinct classes of people which we are striving to reach in that beautiful island. The first of these in respect to number and degradation is the native black people, the descendants of the slaves set free in 1838. These people have many of the characteristics of the colored people of our own Southern States. As one rides through the island, noticing their small huts of one or two rooms, with thatched roofs and sides of bamboo, partly covered with plaster, and open to the winds and rains on all sides, one cannot help seeing that there can be but little if any home life among them. When, too, one takes into consideration the enervating heat of the tropics and the fact that their needs are few beyond a little food and clothing, one cannot keep from seeing that the incentives to work and to attain to a higher standard of moral and spiritual things are lacking. Then, again, the years of oppression which they as a people endured in slavery have left a deep impress upon their characteristics as a race, and it will take years of patient toil and teaching to overcome deep-seated ideas of superstition and incapacity for knowledge. I am glad to state that not only Friends, but also other denominations are taking up the work of teaching the children in the public and other schools. They are doing what they can to look after the people in their own homes, and carry to them the glad message of hope inspired by the spirit of our Master, the Lord Jesus Christ.

The second class that calls for sympathy and aid are the coolies, or East Indians, imported from India to work upon the large estates of the island. They are led by deception to enter upon work for a period of five or ten years, under control of the government of the island, and the wages they receive are small. As a people they seem quite intelligent, and are inclined to save their money and to become prosperous as they have the opportunity. They are small and slender in stature, but do good, faithful work as they learn how. I think that they make the best of their circumstances when they find themselves in strange surroundings and in a strange land. Their language being different from our own, makes it harder for our own workers to reach them, but with the help of three workers, who are themselves natives of the East Indies and can speak their native language fluently, we are making favorable progress towards presenting to them the Gospel message. Besides the native workers Mary White has a very interesting school of East Indian children, who are as bright-looking as any white children. She and the native workers do much good by visiting families. When we take into consideration the fact that we have to overcome centuries of adverse religious training and pagan customs, together with the barrier of language, considerable success has attended our efforts among this people.

Another thing that should make them interesting to us is the fact that they belong to the Aryan race, the same from which we are also descended. In addition to the means above alluded to there are a number of the girls of East Indian birth in the Happy Grove Training School conducted by Alsina M. Andrews, and two little boys in the home of Arthur H. and Alma Swift.

Our work in Jamaica is under the supervision of Arthur H. Swift. In the work he is assisted by a number of able workers sent out by Iowa Yearly Meeting, also by several native local preachers. I was very much impressed with the devotion and self-sacrifice of the workers in carrying on the work in its different branches, and I heartily commend them to the consideration of all praying people. While we have a very efficient training school for girls under the care of Alsina M. Andrews, where thirty girls are being trained in habits of industry and efficiency in Christian work, we need a corresponding training school for boys, where they too can be trained up in the same way. The needs of any mission field are great and never ending. I trust that God will crown our efforts to start this boys' school in the near future.

Yours in the work,

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

I do appreciate the American Friend very much. I have often thought I would write and state how much I enjoy reading the editorials and other articles. I get so much good from them, and I heartily approve of its desire that Friends should bring their principles up to the times.

C. ARTHUR BEWLEY,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

John Henry Douglas is convalescing, but is not yet strong enough to attend meeting.

J. J. Mills, formerly president of Earlham College, expects to attend New York Yearly Meeting.

Fred Smith, of Farmland, Ind., is rendering ministerial service each month at Poplar Run, Ind.

James P. Price has closed his work in the meeting at Portland, Ore., and will soon begin service in the meeting at Salem, Ore.

Iowa has sent another missionary to Jamaica—Alice I. Kennedy, of Illinois, who sailed from Philadelphia for Port Antonio on the morning of the 29th ult.

Letters are coming in endorsing and approving the plan to raise a memorial to Harriet Green, but there has not yet been a sufficient response from our large body of Friends.

Levi D. Barr has purchased a home in Los Angeles, and expects to remain in the yearly meeting for some time. His postoffice address is now 1403 Wright Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Friends of Purchase Quarterly Meeting are planning a Bible Conference for the 15th and 16th of the present month, to be held at the Croton Valley Meeting House, at Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

John Wilhelm Rowntree, after a short visit and some valuable service at Haverford, and in Baltimore, has gone to Chicago for four weeks with his doctor, who has been very successful in treating his eyes.

The committee from Richmond, Ind., having charge of the meeting at Providence are faithfully performing their work, and some of them are in attendance at that meeting fourteen miles away nearly every Sabbath.

We have received the Indiana Bulletin of Charities and Correction for the three months ending First month 31st. It is an interesting document. The work which it sets forth is under a board of which Timothy Nicholson is a member.

John Riley has labored in special services in Alamitos, Long Beach and El Modena Meetings, Cal., and more than fifty souls have been converted. He is now at New River, and expects to remain in this field of service until after yearly meeting time.

Joshua and Isabella Rowntree have been very busy since Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, visiting Friends and attending meetings. They were at Haverford Meeting, Pa., on the 26th ult.; at Baltimore on the 30th, and at Germantown, Pa., on the 3d instant.

At Portland, Ind., Monthly Meeting, held 25th ult., three persons were received by certificate from a neighboring monthly meeting. The next monthly meeting will be held with the Pleasant Valley Local Meeting, in Adams County, Ind., on the fourth Seventh-day, at 9.30 a.m., in order to make train connections.

Sarah Healey is doing excellent work in Grant Meeting, near Knightstown, Ind. She was joined in an evangelistic effort in the meeting in First month, in which several took definite steps in their religious experience, and a number united with the meeting. The young people gave a Bible reading recently on "Faith in God," which was much enjoyed by all.

Harry R. Keates, of Glens Falls, N. Y., recently closed a series of meetings at New Providence, Ia., which continued fifteen days, resulting in several conversions and a general revival. One result which was especially gratifying was the establishment of family worship in several homes. After resting a few days, Harry Keates went to Bangor, Ia., where he is now laboring in another series of meetings.

Eli Reece, of High Point, N. C., labored for eight days in a meeting at Mount Airy, N. C. His preaching and singing were appreciated by the people. There were twelve conversions and renewals, and three have applied for membership with Friends. More will follow. Eli Reece was assisted in this effort by James R. Jones and wife, who continued the meetings four days after the evangelist left, with good results.

Stella Monthly Meeting of Friends for Fourth month occurred at Cherokee, Okla. Josiah Dillon, of Liberty, quarterly meeting superintendent, was in attendance and spoke to the edification of all. Much important business was transacted, among which twenty new members were received. In the past few months this monthly meeting has received about sixty new members. The meeting at Cherokee is in a flourishing condition, rapidly growing and well organized in its departments of work.

Pasadena Quarterly Meeting, held at Los Angeles on the 25th ult., was largely attended. Levi Mills, of Whittier, preached on Seventh-day morning on "The Divinity of Jesus Christ." The other ministers present were John and Nettie C. Riley, of Ohio, who are working under the auspices of California Evangelistic Board; Cassie Commons, of Iowa Yearly Meeting, and the ministers from the local meetings of the quarter. Seventh-day evening the Christian Endeavor Union held an interesting session. First-day morning Ida L. Curtis, of Pasadena, preached. Nettie C. Riley closed the last session of the quarterly meeting by a praise service, at which time many gave testimony to new resolves and blessings. One special feature of the quarterly meeting was the marked attendance of many young Friends. Hopeful reports came from every monthly meeting, and the increase in numbers has been greater than in previous years.

On Fourth month 20th, 1903, occurred the sixtieth anniversary of the marriage of Richard and Deborah R. Harkness. He was the son of David and Mary Harkness, and was born in Peru, N. Y., near Lake Champlain, Eighth month 24th, 1820. She was the only daughter of Elijah and Mary Crane, and was born in New York city Fifth month 24th, 1823. About forty of their near relatives and old neighbors and friends met at their home, at Tecumseh, Mich., and had a pleasant time together. A short program was carried out, in which the ministers present and several others participated. They are members of Raisin Valley Meeting, near Adrian, Mich., and lived there till ten years ago. He has been a minister, and she an elder, since 1859, and they are still able to attend meeting and visit their friends. They were the recipients of many tokens of love and regard, both from those who were present and those who could not come.

William J. Reagan, son of Jehu Reagan, of New London, Indiana, and a junior in Earlham College, Indiana, has been elected president of the Y. M. C. A. for next year. He is a young man of enthusiasm and devotion to Christian work, and it is expected that the excellent work among the students which has characterized the current college year will be continued under his leadership.

The Salvation Army have just closed a four weeks' series of meetings on the streets and in the M. E. Church building at Portland, Ind. About 300 conversions are reported, including small children and grandfathers and grandmothers. It is reported that the work has greatly damaged the local saloon business. The Army are now in Winchester, and will go to the resorts in Northern Michigan during the summer months.

Joseph Audi, a Bedouin Arab, and member of Friends' Meeting at Ramallah, Palestine, has been visiting Ellwood O. Ellis the past three weeks, he having served as guide for the latter and S. C. Cowgill when they visited Palestine. He spoke very acceptably at all the Friends' meetings in Richmond and at Earlham College; also at Fairmount, Ind. He also, at earnest request, spoke for other churches in Richmond, and for the Ministerial Association. His visit has been greatly appreciated.

We have received the following communication from Eli Reece, of North Carolina Yearly Meeting:

A CALL FOR WORKERS.

"Within the limits of North Carolina Yearly Meeting there are good openings for five or six young Friends who can teach school and preach. The opportunity is far greater than the salary, although they may expect fair compensation. There are two or three places where a man and his wife could both be employed as teachers and thus live comfortably. This is a country with unbounded possibilities for Friends. If any feel called to this service, I shall be glad to correspond with them and open the way for service."

At Richmond, Ind., South Eighth Street Monthly Meeting, held recently, seven new members were received into membership, six being by request and one by certificate. Twenty members in all have been received at the last three monthly meetings, and these were welcomed at the First-day morning meeting on the 26th ult., three of them being unavoidably absent. At the monthly meeting a report was made by the Open Church Committee, showing that success has attended the keeping the church open daily. The number of visits to the reading room for reading purposes in nineteen weeks have been 1,710, while the number of visits to the church outside of the regular services, Sabbath School and Christian Endeavor, have been 6,000. As a result of this work all of the church services have been increased in attendance and interest.

The fourth annual meeting of the Friends' Educational Association will be held at Haverford College on the afternoon and evening of Seventh-day, Fifth month 9th. Afternoon session at 3.30 p.m. Regular business and reports of standing committees. Reports from schools and colleges represented in the association. Walter W. Haviland will report on the new curriculum now preparing for Friends Select School. Dr. James A. Babbitt, of Haverford College, will read a paper on "The Place of Athletics as a Moral and Intellectual Force in the Curriculum," to be followed by a general discussion, led by Franklin A. Dakin, of the Haverford Grammar School. Evening session 7.30 p.m. Dr. Martin G. Brumbaugh, of the University of Pennsylvania, and President Isaac Sharpless, of Haverford College, will address the conference on the general subject of "The Work of Our Schools and Colleges from the Religious and Denominational Standpoint." Supper will be served (on the Haverford lawn, if weather permits) at 6 o'clock. Those attending the conference will be guests of Haverford College, and persons expecting to take supper will please notify Oscar M. Chase, Haverford College, Pa., not later than Fifth-day, Fifth month 7th. A general invitation is extended to all persons interested.

RUFUS M. JONES:

Dear Brother:—I have made the present condition of the Church, the cause and a remedy a matter of study for some time, and had reached some conclusions in the matter. I felt the attention of Friends ought to be called to these things through THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and I had been trying to find time to write something on this line. Thee can imagine my surprise, on opening my last paper, to find the editorial, "Has Christianity Been Tried?" just covering the ground I had felt concerned about. Thee has expressed my thoughts exactly, and I am glad it has come from thy pen. I expect some who are posing as defenders of the faith will not receive such things very kindly, but nevertheless they are true, and the sooner the Church finds it out the better. I want to say thee still has my unqualified support, and, while I can say truly, as many others do, that I enjoy all thy editorials, I enjoy them chiefly because I believe thee sees into the heart of things, and, instead of being sidetracked by the little things that seem so important to some, thee is guiding the Church toward the great central truths of Christianity.

Somehow I have faith in the future of our Church, and I believe, when we get away from this chaos of isms and schisms we have been in for some time, and again have a message of vital truth to present to the world, the spiritual power which we have in a great measure lost will again be ours.

May the Lord bless and guide thee in the future as I believe He has in the past, is the earnest prayer of Thy sincere Friend,

CHARLES E. CAREY.

THE HISTORY OF THE SEEDLESS ORANGE.

The story of the cultivation of the seedless orange in the United States may properly begin with the time when, over a third of a century ago, Nellie Desmond, of Syracuse, N. Y., returned from a visit to her brother in a rubber camp along the Amazon, near Bahia, Brazil. She brought with her to this country, as curiosities, several little seedless oranges which grew upon a clump of freak orange trees near her brother's camp. The Commissioner of Agriculture of our Government, at that time, Horace Capron, heard of these curios, and after some correspondence, instructed the United States Consul at Bahia to procure some of the small orange trees and send them to the Agricultural Department at Washington. This was done, and the young trees were placed in the experimental garden, where they remained for several years. Finally only three trees remained, and these were sent to Luther C. Tibbetts, a poor farmer in Southern California. He cared for them tenderly, and after some years two of the trees bore two oranges apiece—the first seedless or "navel" oranges ever grown outside of the Amazon swamps. Two of these, after having ripened, were cut open in the presence of a little company of orange growers at Riverside. The next year the harvest of the two trees increased twentyfold, and, from that time, the name and fame of Tibbetts' seedless oranges spread throughout Southern California. By 1886, over 5,000 acres of sheep and cattle range had been turned into navel orange groves. The enormous price paid for the fruit set the growers wild, and by two years later 800,000 trees had been planted, and incredibly large profits were PRETTY CHEEKS.

A Food That Makes Girls Sweet to Look Upon.

The right food for young ladies is of the greatest importance to their looks, to say nothing of the health. Thin, sallow girls don't get the right food, you may be absolutely certain. A Brooklyn girl says: "For a long time, in spite of all I could do, I was thin, skinny and nervous. My cheeks were so sunken my friends used to remark on how bad I looked. I couldn't seem to get strength from my food—meat, potatoes, bread, etc., so I tried various medicines without help.

"I often read about Grape-Nuts, but never tried the food until one day something impressed me that perhaps if I would eat Grape-Nuts for my nerves and brain I could digest and get the good of my food. So I started in. The food, with cream, was fascinating to my taste, and I went in for it regularly twice a day.

"Well, I began to improve, and now, while on my third package, I have changed so my friends congratulate me warmly, ask me what in the world I have taken, etc., etc. My cheeks are plump and rosy, and I feel so strong and well. I sleep sound, and it seems as though I couldn't get enough to eat. Thank you sincerely for making Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason for Grape-Nuts.

made. To-day the railroads are earning almost $5,000,000 annually in freight charges on seedless oranges, and some $57,000,000 has been invested in the industry. Nineteen-twentieths of the entire orange production of both California and Florida are seedless navels.

THE WEALTH OF SCRIPTURES.

A young student was recently studying an old manuscript in the library of Vienna, when suddenly his eyes fell on a passage which startled him considerably. Over and over again he read it, and finally he took out his note-book, and copied it word for word. In this passage the writer of the manuscript, who was, apparently, an old monk, said that a large treasure of gold and silver had been hidden in a convent of Galicia. He described the location of the convent, and told in what part of it the treasure had been concealed. He wrote, indeed, as though he himself had been an eyewitness of the occurrence. Confident that the old monk had not told a fairy tale, but the actual truth, the young student went at once to the Cardinal Archbishop of Lemberg, and asked him if he would be legally entitled to half of the treasure in case he should be so fortunate as to find it. The cardinal replied that he would, and that evening the young man started for Galicia. In due time he arrived at the convent, and after a brief search he found the treasure. It consisted of a large pile of gold and silver, and it is said to be worth at least two millions five hundred francs. The Christian church is in possession of Scriptures containing a greater revelation than that which this student found, for they are they which testify of the Christ, and as this student found the treasure which he sought, so will those who seek, find Him.

THE DEAF HEAR AND THE BLIND SEE.

It is a strange coincidence that early in Third month accounts should be published of two marvelous inventions, similar in principle, yet differing in application, by one of which the blind are made to see, and by the other the deaf are made to hear.

The account of the first comes from Paris, and is contained in an article by a Dr. Caza, published in "Revue des Revues." The invention is that of Prof. Stiens. Dr. Caza explains how Prof. Stiens tested the invention by blindfolding him and taking him into a dark room. The professor put an apparatus around his temples, and instantly he saw a dim light by which he could distinguish surrounding objects. Soon the light became stronger and the doctor could count the fingers on a hand held up before him and count the number of chairs in the room. Just as he was feeling that if the experience were continued he would recover his normal clearness of vision, the professor suddenly removed the apparatus and the doctor was plunged in total darkness. Prof. Stiens goes on the theory that man sees with his brain, not his eye. The latter only serves to receive the image which the optic nerve transmits to the seat of perception. If, then, the image is transmittable to the brain without eyes, the blind can see as well as anybody. His apparatus has the same scientific basis as the telephone, and in it the transmission of light rays plays a part identical with that performed by the telephone in the transmission of sound waves.

The other comes from New York, where on Third month 13th, with wonder written on their faces, three children, deaf, dumb and blind, heard a pianist play Sousa's marches, heard a phonograph repeat the sounds, and, finally, were astounded to hear the sounds of their own voices. Miller R. Hutchinson had invited some friends to his laboratory to witness his new instrument to enable the deaf to hear. Six boys and four girls, all afflicted with deafness, were present. The invention consists, primarily, of a transmitter, an ear piece, and a small electric battery. The penetrating quality of the electric sound wave apparently disregards the mechanism of the outer ear and affects the inner ear direct.—Exchange.

Events and Comments.

The reformers of Canada have won a great moral victory in barring cigarettes from the Dominion. The House of Commons has passed a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture or sale of cigarettes in the country.

In recognition of the services of importance which Minister Bowen has given to Venezuela during the conflict with the allies, the Congress of that country has voted to him the Cross of the Legion of the National Defense.

Forest fires raged in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York last week, and the property losses amount to many millions of dollars. In Pennsylvania, where the damage was the most widespread, several small villages were virtually wiped out, and some loss of life was reported.

The President has selected Wayne MacVeagh, of Pennsylvania, who was a member of President Garfield's Cabinet, to represent the United States at The Hague when that tribunal considers the question of preferential treatment as between allied and non-allied powers having claims against Venezuela.

It is a fact of sociology that strikes do not occur except in times of great prosperity, and this idea seems to be supported by the fact that of the five hundred or more strikes which are now on in the United States, not one was brought on because of a reduction in wages, but because of a demand for higher wages. As a rule employers have shown a disposition to yield in whole or in part to the demands of their employees or refer their differences to arbitrators.

European rulers have been making spring visits. The German Kaiser spent several days with King Christian of Denmark. President Loubet of France has visited Algeria, where he was accorded a grand welcome, as the first head of the French State to visit the French Mediterranean colonies since Napoleon III. King Edward is absent on a long trip, which included a visit to the King of Portugal, at Lisbon, and a royal reception there. He spent some time in the Mediterranean, visited Victor Emmanuel at Rome and Pope Leo in the Vatican; also spent some time in France and visited President Loubet.

The strike of the cotton mill workers at Lowell, Mass., has great interests involved. It is a question whether the mills will ever open again or not. Large numbers of New England mill owners are moving their plants to Alabama, and there is a general feeling among New England mill owners that it is not worth while to try to do business under the conditions of constant uncertainty created by the labor unions.

Professor Alexander Graham Bell's recent address on his experiments with kites and aeroplanes, before the National Academy of Science, indicated that he is making real progress toward the flying age of man. His new tetrahedron kite is a distinct achievement in the science of aerostatics, because of its great superiority in lifting power over kites of other shapes. By combining a large number of tetrahedron kites in one structure, Professor Bell made an airship which was able to lift not only a man, but a dead weight of 200 pounds.

Fort Myer at Washington is to have a large amusement hall to contain a swimming-pool, complete gymnasium, running track, bowling alley, library, lecture room and other literary exercises. The building is to cost $125,000, and the aim is to provide a means of intellectual and moral improvement which will, so far as possible, take the place of the old-time canteen. Congress a year ago appropriated $500,000 to be used at various army posts to build similar buildings, which should in a measure take the place of the canteen and keep the men from desiring to resort to the grogeries that beset the roadway to every army post.

The decision made a year ago that the United States flag or the portrait of the President or any of his family could not be used in a trade-mark recorded at the Patent Office has been followed up with another prohibition which may not be so well received. In a recent trade-mark which it was tried to have registered, the artist had made use of the shield or national emblem common in the coat of arms of the United States. On the shield appears the Stars and Stripes in red, white and blue. The examiner of trade-marks ruled that this use of the national colors came properly under the prohibition applicable to the use of the design of the flag. The Commissioner of Patents has affirmed the ruling.

Four new detention stations for Chinamen will soon be opened on the Canadian border, and a new system which will mark a complete reorganization of the Chinese immigration business will go into operation. A new agreement with Canadian railroads will be put into effect, the Canadian Pacific Railway to deliver direct to immigration officials at these four places all the Chinamen trying to come here through Canada. The result of the change will be to land the Chinese immigrant directly into the custody of United States authorities, and prevent intercourse with scheming agents across the border, who are continually searching for the weak spots through which to pilot the immigrant for the fee he pays.

IN CONVENTION.

Teachers Learn Something Not in the Class Books.

A number of young women attending a teachers' convention at Oklahoma City some time ago learned a valuable lesson in hygiene through a sister teacher, who says: "About a year ago I had my first attack of poor health, and it seemed a terrible thing to me, for I had always been so well and strong. My stomach distressed me terribly; it seemed like it was raw, especially after breakfast, and it would burn and hurt me so I could not rest. I was soon convinced that it was caused by coffee drinking, and at the request of a friend I gave up coffee and began to use Postum Coffee.

"The change in my condition was something marvelous. I had actually given up teaching because doctors were unable to help my stomach trouble, but since I quit coffee and used Postum my troubles have disappeared, and I have gone to teaching again.

"Some time ago I attended a convention at Oklahoma City and determined to have Postum at my boarding house, where there were eight other teachers, four of them suffering from coffee sickness. My landlady did not make the Postum right, but I showed her how, and we all found it delicious. We all drank it the rest of the time we were there, and the young ladies in question felt much better and declared that their heads were much clearer for study and their general health much improved. I have their names if you care for them." Names furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

PAPA'S MISTAKE.

Papa distinctly said the other day
That in the night, when I'm asleep so sound,
The earth keeps turning over all the time,
And every morning it's been half-way round.

I thought how grand to see the big round world
Go turning past this window in the hall;
And here I'm up at four o'clock to watch,
And there is nothing going by at all.

I thought that deserts, palm-trees, and graffes
Might just be passing by the time I came;
And now, instead of all those lovely things,
Here's this old yellow rosebush just the same.

"SUPPOSE I DIE"

We have helped the people to answer that question for half a century or more; to make provision for their survivors. The record book of every Christian's life has some pages in it which were written at the bidding of that severe teacher, Disappointment. Tears may have blotted and blurred the page at the time. But as we turn over to that page now, and read it in the light of experience, we can write beneath it, "Thank God for those losses!—they were my everlasting gain. Thank God for those bereavements!—they have saved my soul from being bereaved of heaven. 'All things work together for good to them that love God; to them who are the called according to his purpose.'"—Theodore L. Cuyler.

LIGHT TO THE BLIND.

*Everything has its wonders, even darkness and silence and I learn whatever state I may be in therein to be content. Sometime, it is true, a sense of isolation infolds me to me like a cold mist as I sit alone and wait at life's shut gate. Beyond there is light and music and sweet companionship; but I may not enter. Fate silent, pitiless, bars the way. Fain would I question his imperious decree, for my heart is still undisciplinod and passionate; but my tongue will not utter the bitter, futile words that rise to my lips and they fall back into my heart like unshed tears.
Silence sits immense upon my soul. Then comes hope with a smile and whispers, “There is joy in self-forgetfulness.” So I try to make the light in others' eyes my sun, the music in others' ears my symphony, the smile on others' lips my happiness.*

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

ACROSTIC—"HAVE FAITH IN GOD."

Have Faith in God, although thy way be long,
And weary be thy feet, Faith makes thee strong.
Verily, Faith in God, through darkest night,
Even though stumbling, leads thee to the light.

For, where God's light is darkness cannot reign,
And faithful hearts all must God's light contain.
In all this world stanch Faith alone imparts
The strength to conquer to weak human hearts.
Have Faith in God, for true Faith is the charm,

In human life, that keeps the soul from harm.
No matter in what dangers man may fall,

Give him but Faith and he surmounts them all.
O till they lay thee under fragrant sod,
Do never waver, but "Have Faith in God."

IS IT I ?

THE question is often asked why so little effect results from all the sermons which are preached in Christian churches. The reason often given is that those who preach are not enough in earnest, or fail to make the truth seem sufficiently real. There is a well-known story told of a minister who asked a famous actor why actors affect their listeners so much more profoundly than preachers do? The reply was, "You ministers tell the truth as though it were fiction, while we actors tell fiction as though it were the truth." There is possibly some truth in this reply. But it does not give the real reason why persons are so stirred in theaters and so little affected in religious meetings. The actor has a very easy task. He does not undertake to move the will at all. He is not concerned to change the lives and deeds of his hearers. He reproduces some dramatic scene to stir up an emotion, and there his work ends. He does not set himself to raise men up to vaster issues of life. It is one thing to make a person weep or laugh over a scene which is set before the eyes, and it is quite another thing to make men see truth in such a light that it shall readjust life for them through and through, and drive them to a complete "turn about" in thought and word and deed.

Our own belief is that where preaching fails to produce actual effect, the trouble frequently lies with those who sit in the seats rather than with the person who, as we Friends say, "has had the burden of the meeting." Preaching seldom does any good when it is only passively listened to. It begins to be

"quick and powerful" as soon as the listeners begin to co-operate with the speaker, and enter into sympathy and travail with him. We all remember how as children we learned words which meant nothing to us, and carried them about with us in our heads for years, when all of a sudden some day the meaning flashed upon us, and we saw in our own souls what before we had only been saying with our lips. Now most persons listen to ministers' words. They hear the sentences all right, but they do not sense the meaning, and feel the truth which the words convey. Their hearts do not witness back to the truth as their ears hear the words, and therefore they are like the man who sees his natural face in a glass—they go their way with no permanent effect wrought upon them. Then, again, many persons persistently apply what they hear to somebody else. "I wish John could hear that," or, "It is too bad Susan isn't here. It is just what she needs," or, "I hope William will take that to himself." It is always for somebody else—never for the individual himself. A change would come over our religious meetings if we would form the habit of personal application. The disciples' question is one which we ought to ask at least once a week: "Is it I?" "What is there here that fits my case and that calls for action at my hands?" As long as preaching floats off into the air as something vague and impersonal, of course it will "hurt" nobody, but just so long as it is listened to with no personal application it will help nobody. Let those of us who want preaching to be more effective see how much we can do to make it so.

TWO GREAT INTERPRETERS OF QUAKERISM.*

THE two greatest contributions which Friends have made to the world are (1) a new conception of worship, and (2) a new estimate of the worth of man. They undertook at the very beginning to be absolutely sincere in their attitude toward God and in their dealings with men. That meant that there could be nothing in their meetings which was foreign to genuine heart-worship. Whatever was said or done must be the living outflow of a true appreciation of God. Those who wish to know the inwardness of Quakerism must seek for it rather in the way Friends worshiped than in any peculiar theology which they held, and in the way they treated their fellow men rather than in statements of creed.

* "John Greenleaf Whittier," by Thomas Wentworth Higginson. The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.00.

"The Journal of John Woolman." Pocket edition. Headley Bros., London. Friends' Book and Tract Committee, 51 Fifth Avenue, New York city.

No two Friends since the days of the founders have done more to make these two truths clear than have John G. Whittier and John Woolman—two Johns, both well-beloved disciples of the truth.

From the first day he took his pen in his hand until the day he laid it down to answer the great summons, Whittier was an apostle of the divine right of man.

A large faith in human kind he cherished
And in God's love for all.

He plead with burning passion for the true emancipation of black and white alike. He wanted every man to have a fair chance to be a man. He saw all men's worth writ large in the light of God's love for them, and that is a central note of Quakerism. Nobody else has sounded, with such clear insight, the real Quaker idea of worship as he has. It finds expression in scores of poems, and always he speaks with a wonderful revealing power. Take these lines in "Pennsylvania Pilgrim" as an illustration:

Lowly before the unseen Presence knelt
Each waiting heart, till haply some one felt
On his moved lips the seal of silence melt.

Or, without spoken words, low breathings stole
Of a diviner life from soul to soul,
Baptizing in one tender thought the whole.

Few men have ever lived who were more sensitive to suffering or pain or social disorder than saintly John Woolman. The spirit of love in him reached out to and included all animate things. "Where the love of God is verily perfected," he says, "a tenderness toward all creatures made subject to our will is experienced." Again he writes: "In the obedience of faith we die to self-love, and, our life being 'hid with Christ in God,' our hearts are enlarged toward mankind universally." "So far as true love influences our minds, so far we become interested in His workmanship, and feel a desire to make use of every opportunity to lessen the distresses of the afflicted and to increase the happiness of creation. Here we have a prospect of one common interest from which our own is inseparable, so that to turn all we possess into the channel of universal love becomes the business of our lives." That is the deepest word of practical Quakerism.

The two little books mentioned in the foot-note are most welcome. T. W. Higginson's Whittier will be appreciated by every lover of the poet. It is a valuable study both of the man and his work by one who knew him well and saw him truly. The chapter on Whittier's "Religious Side" is written with deep insight. The book does not take the place of Pickard's "Life of Whittier," but it will always have its own value for a thorough understanding and appreciation of this quiet but valiant soul, this man who, though missing the training of the schools, saw profoundly into the deepest meanings of human life, and "spoke to the age out of eternity."

The little edition of "John Woolman's Journal" is charming. It is just the thing for a pocket companion, and now we can all "learn John Woolman by heart," as Charles Lamb in his essay urges us to do.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE shall be ready to speak to Friends next week on the proposed memorial to our departed friend, Harriet Green. We have been anxious to hear from her own family, and from those who were most deeply interested before definitely going ahead with the proposal which was made in a recent editorial.

THE Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years' Meeting has undertaken the work of preparing a new "Book of Meetings." It is a piece of work which is greatly needed, and we trust that everything will be done to assist this Board in its labors. A notice from this Board is printed in another column.

THE Report of the Five Years' Meeting is now ready for its readers. There have been many unavoidable delays in the work of editing and publishing, but it is to be hoped that there will be many who will feel a keen interest in the proceedings as they now appear. Those who belong to yearly meetings which join in the Five Years' Meeting can secure copies through the officials of their yearly meetings. Other Friends who desire copies may buy them at the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. The paper-bound copies may be had postpaid for 50 cents, and the cloth-bound for 75 cents.

WE rejoiced with the trustees and friends of Earlham College over their success in raising the funds necessary to pay off all the indebtedness of the college. The gift of $25,000 was made to the college by Francis T. White, of New York city, on condition that enough money should be raised by Fifth month 1st to set the institution entirely free of debt. The call has been nobly responded to on all hands; but gratitude is especially due to Allen Jay and David Hadley, who have worked early and late since last autumn to reach this consummation. During the last hundred days Allen Jay has devoted practically all his time to this work, and now the dear, faithful man has the joy of complete success to reward him.

THE THREE PERIODS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF FRIENDS.

BY EDWARD GARDNER.

THE REVIVAL OF QUAKERISM.

The Separation of 1828 weakened the Society in numbers, and it lost the prestige which comes from a united front. On the other hand, the Separation marks the beginning of an awakening and a re-adjusting which continues to the present time. As has been said, it seems that during the middle period there was a neglect of the Bible and failure to read and study it systematically.

English Friends traveled over America urging the importance of Bible study and the establishment of Bible schools. About the time of the Separation we find Orthodox Friends who had seen the danger of neglect, agitating the question of a better knowledge of the Scriptures and dealing with the matter officially. It was stated by the Bible Association of Friends that in 1832 four hundred families of the Orthodox body were without a complete copy of the Scriptures, while one hundred and thirty-eight had not even a New Testament. This condition of affairs was discussed by Indiana Yearly Meeting in 1828, and in 1832 it was reported that within the limits of the membership of the Yearly Meeting there were forty-five families and parts of families that were not yet supplied with the Holy Scriptures.

Subordinate meetings were urged to see that all members were provided with Bibles, and in the course of a few years this result was brought about. Bible schools were soon established, and, though their growth was slow at first, yet they have now become universal under the name of the Sunday School.

The tendency towards giving an undue position and influence to the writings of the early Friends has consequently been on the wane, and the Friends, in common with Christians in general, go more to the Scriptures as a source of knowledge and guidance.

The Friends have always taken an active interest in education, so that in the days of private schools their educational standard was higher than that of the people around them. The Separation led them to increased activity in the line of education, which was a sign of better times. Before the day of the high school Friends' academies dotted the country and did important educational work. Under present conditions the influence of these academies has diminished, although some of them are still moderately prosperous.

The Friends were the first to advocate co-education, and most of their colleges have been established in accordance with this idea. There are eight colleges in America under control of the Friends, which are doing important work. The college for women at Bryn Mawr, Pa., is the most advanced of its kind in the country. The educational work of the Friends during the nineteenth century has greatly strengthened the Society, and from the colleges and schools have gone forth many men and women better equipped for promoting the gospel in their own and foreign lands.

Within the last two decades the conception of the ministry has been changing, especially in the Western and central part of the United States. It is felt that men and women who are ministers ought to give their whole time to their work, and ought to be set free for this by the Church. Congregations everywhere in these sections have been asking for settled ministry. This change is widespread, and is one of the signs of a new era in Quakerism.

If the Church is to prosper, Friends must not only hold firmly to the great essential principles of Christianity advocated by the founders of the Society, but their methods of work must change with every generation.

There has been a great change in regard to other questions. For a century or more Friends were known by their peculiar dress. At length it was discovered that simplicity of dress did not mean uniformity, and that the cut of the coat or the shape of the bonnet did not add to the spiritual life of the wearer. The Quaker of to-day is not known by his dress; if he dresses with taste, but not with extravagance, he is, no doubt, conforming more nearly to the spirit of early Quakerism than did his predecessor of an hundred years ago. George Fox himself, it is said, bought his wife a red mantle, and William Penn's dress did not at all conform to the Quaker ideal of a later period.

Music, painting and literature are now taking their rightful place among Friends. Congregational singing is recognized as being a part of true worship, and in many places instrumental music is also made a part of the devotional service.

In the Quaker home of a century ago the sweet influence of song was unknown. The Bible and the writings of early Friends were the only books; no pictures adorned the walls, and Puritan austerity was the rule of life. In the Quaker home of to-day we find music, paintings and an abundance of books; means of recreation abound, and a daily paper has become almost a necessity.

The home of 1800 lacked somewhat in grace, in kindly sympathy and in a broad view of life. Its sternness may have repelled some who ought to have been kept in the Christian fold. The home of 1900 has a multiplicity of interests and activities. Is there not danger of too close intercourse with the world? Is it not possible, in the hurry and stress of business and social life, to lose hold of the vital principles of religion?

The influence of the great evangelical movement begun by Wesley in the eighteenth century was hardly felt by Friends until the middle of the nineteenth century. Throughout all their history Friends have had great-souled men who have devoted their lives to the spread of the gospel, but from the close of the first period until less than half a century ago no general effort was made at either home or foreign missionary work.

As the result of an appeal made in 1859, by George Richardson, an aged Friend, as he lay on his death-bed, the Friends' Foreign Mission Association was formed in England. This event marked the beginning of the most important movement of the Society since the Separation, showing that the Friends were regaining that aggressiveness which was characteristic of their early history. The desire for the salvation of the world has again become the moving force of Quakerism, and in this lies its hope for future usefulness.

The women of the Church in America soon took up the work and missionary boards were formed in most of the yearly meetings. In 1890 these united in the "Woman's Foreign Missionary Union of Friends in America." Permanent missions have been established in India, Madagascar, Turkey, Syria, Mexico, Alaska, China, Japan, Cuba and Jamaica.

American Friends, in 1900, had twenty organized churches in the mission field, with a membership of nearly two thousand; forty-six Sabbath and Bible Schools, with a membership of two thousand three hundred and ninety-nine, and forty-one other schools, with one thousand four hundred and one pupils. In 1896 the Friends' Foreign Mission Association of Great Britain had sixty-four missionaries in the field, not including native helpers, and was spending about $65,000 annually. In 1901 American Friends had sixty-four missionaries, with one hundred and fifty-three native helpers, in the foreign fields, and were spending about $50,000 annually. Next year's reports will probably show a total of about one hundred and forty foreign missionaries, not including native helpers, and a total annual expenditure of about $125,000 in this work.

Home mission work has gone hand in hand with the work in foreign fields. At the present time Friends are doing a vigorous work in almost every important town in England. This has resulted in a marked increase in membership, chiefly from the wage-earning class. This is a fact of great significance, and the work of English Friends ought to be carefully studied by those in America.

In this country home mission work is carried on systematically and with good results. Interest in the Indians has been maintained ever since the Society was organized in America. During the first part of this century schools and missions were organized for the Indians which were moderately successful.

Through the influence of the Friends, President Grant adopted a new and more humane policy towards the Indians; for about fifteen years Friends were actively engaged in the care of the Indians on their reservations. In 1885, owing to a change in its policy, work in connection with the government ceased, but mission work among the Indians has continued till at this time more than four hundred of their number, with four monthly meetings, belong to the Orthodox Friends.

The great mission of the Friends for the negro was to secure his freedom from slavery; since that has been accomplished labor in his behalf has not been so vigorous. That interest in the negro still continues is shown by Southland College, Arkansas. It is a college for negroes conducted by the Society of Friends, and it has sent out many graduates able to help in elevating their race.

Closer inter-denominational fellowship has become very prominent within the last few years. It is very gratifying to know that the Friends have entered heartily into the spirit of it. This agreement on the essentials of Christianity and hearty co-operation in active work gives great encouragement for the future. The sharp contrast between the bitterness of the church members of one denomination toward those of other denominations in the time of George Fox and the kindly spirit shown at this time, is evidence that Christianity is doing more for the world now than it did then.

The total membership of Orthodox Friend in America at present is 93,204; in the world, 113,930. Notwithstanding there has been a slight decrease in membership during the last year, the Society seems to be on solid ground, with no serious dissensions likely to mar it.

It has a great past; its future may be equally great if it is prepared to meet the conditions which confront it. It will grow in power if it uses modern methods in spreading the gospel, which are consistent with its great mission, which is "to make manifest, in their fulness, the dominion and life of the Spirit of Christ in the world."

It will realize the importance of an earnest, educated, consecrated ministry. Rich Friends will endow the Biblical departments of all its colleges; when this has been done every young man or young woman who has felt the call to the ministry will have the opportunity to prepare for the work.

It will be an aggressive Church, not a passive one; its work will be constructive as well as preservative. It is a lamentable fact that the wage-earning class is drifting away from the Church. Friends, if they are wise, will reach out after this class. The corner-stone of Quakerism is that Christ is all in all, and came into the world that every man might have life, and have it more abundantly. Most of its early customs were a protest against class distinctions and against servility to man. With their early traditions and early history to inspire them, Friends ought to be the people's Church. In their Church the laboring man ought to find a welcome marred by no trace of class distinction which wealth and superior social position so easily beget.

The Church of the future will not only be successful in gaining converts, but it will have the wisdom to hold them. Church buildings are now opened for a few hours each week. In the future they will be opened every evening at least. Reading rooms will be established; the needs physical, mental and spiritual of each congregation will be fully met. The supreme importance of a single human soul will be realized anew, and the brotherhood of man as Christ taught it, labored for it, prayed for it and died for it, will be realized to a higher degree than has yet been known.

These things will be done. Is the Quaker Church ready to do them? It played a great part in gaining religious liberty and freedom of conscience. It has made a splendid record in its efforts for making the world better, by its labors on behalf of the slave and in its testimony against war. Will its future be worthy of this past?

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SELFISHNESS IN SORROW.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Severe trials have a very different effect on different persons. They either develop many graces, or else bring out some sad deformities of character. As the same fire that melts metals hardens clay, so afflictions that melt some hearts seem to harden others. Sharp affliction never leaves people as it found them; they become the better, or they become the worse; they draw closer to God or are driven farther from Him; they become stronger and sweeter, or else their faith gives way, and their dispositions tend to sullenness and sourness.

A long observation of a great number of people who have been in deep affliction has convinced me that sorrow often has a tendency to develop selfishness; or where it did not exist before, has a tendency to produce it. One reason is that a heartache like a sharp toothache, or a severe headache, makes us think of ourselves. It comes home to us. It gives us immediate pain—perhaps heart agony. Our thoughts do not go out towards others, but turn inward and concentrate. The first thought with a passenger on a sinking ship is to leap into a life boat, or grasp a floating plank; self is the one person to be cared for then, and if others can be helped also, all very well, but self must not go to the bottom. Affliction is a testing process; it brings out unsuspected graces or it brings out pitiable infirmities of character, and if they existed already, it tends to intensify them.

The tendency of grief to develop selfishness is manifested in a great many ways. Sometimes a person in deep bereavement will lock himself or herself up, and brood over his or her troubles until everybody and everything else ceases to be thought of. The "heart knoweth its own bitterness," and not much of any other person's bitterness, and so becomes more embittered before it is aware. A ministerial brother has told me of the different way in which two members of his church deported themselves after the death of their promising and beloved son. The mother was left to bear the burden of the grief for both, although it well nigh crushed her. The father drew into himself—did little or nothing to restrain himself or to sustain his agonized wife. In his case it seemed as if "sorrow was only a cloak for selfishness."

When bereavement befalls some persons, they seem to forget the interests, the comfort, or the claims of everyone outside of their own dwelling. Their loss is the one great event, and others must conform to it. The afflicted have a right to ask for and to expect sympathy, but they have no right to be unreasonable and to impose on the kindness of others. For example, I knew of a minister who was sent for at a great distance (although he was not then their pastor) to officiate at the funeral of one of a family. He made a long journey, at his own charges, bore the nervous strain of conducting a trying service, and not one of the family expressed even a syllable of gratitude! The reason was that those suffering hearts were so wrapped up in their own sufferings that they became oblivious of the feelings of everyone else.

Now, if the tendency of severe affliction is to turn us so exclusively in upon ourselves, then that tendency ought to be striven against, and prayed against, and resisted just like any other besetting sin. For a sin it actually is, and often an exceedingly hurtful one. It only increases the intensity of grief and makes the trial harder to be borne. It adds to the load. It refuses the relief it might obtain; and, worst of all, often locks up a grief in the heart that ought to be carried to a sympathizing, loving, and Almighty Saviour. Like every other sad mistake, it becomes its own punisher.

Afflictions, instead of working evil to us, may become a precious blessing if they draw us out of ourselves, and draw us close to God and to our fellow-creatures. I have often reminded suffering Christians that their sorrows might be turned to the benefit of others. They may relieve their own hearts by turning the flood of grief upon some wheel of practical benevolence. An eminent minister who was under a peculiarly severe trial once said to me, "If I could not study, and preach, and work for the salvation of souls, I should go crazy." Active occupation is both a tonic and a soothing sedative to a troubled spirit. Good friends, if you are in affliction, I entreat you not to let your sorrows stagnate; they will turn your heart into a fen of bitter waters, from which will sprout the rank weeds of selfishness and rebellion against a loving God. Turn your sorrows outward into currents of sympathy and deeds of kindness to others, and they will become a stream of blessings.

It is love that asks, that seeks, that knocks, that finds, and that is faithful to what it finds.—St. Augustine.

LESSON VIII.

FIFTH MONTH 24, 1903.

PAUL BEFORE AGRIPPA.

Acts 26: 19-29.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day.—Acts 26: 22.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Fifth mo. 18.—Statement by Festus. Acts 25: 13-23.

Third-day, Fifth mo. 19.—Paul's answer. Acts 26: 1-11.

Fourth-day, Fifth mo. 20.—The persecutor converted. Acts 26: 12-18.

Fifth-day, Fifth mo. 21.—Paul before Agrippa. Acts 26: 19-29.

Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 22.—Redemption and resurrection. Col. 1: 12-20.

Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 23.—Paul's ministry. Col. 1: 21-29.

First-day, Fifth mo. 24.—Boldness in bonds. Phil. 1: 12-21.

Our last lesson left Paul bound and in custody of the Romans at Cæsarea. In this condition he remained about two years. The Roman governor, Felix, who thus unjustly treated Paul, was himself recalled to Rome, deprived of his office and held to answer charges which the Jews brought against him. Felix was succeeded by Porcius Festus, a far better man than Felix and in every way a better governor. He, however, died before he had been in office two years. As soon as Festus was in his place the Jews took steps to get Paul into their hands. Their plan was to ask the governor to send Paul to Jerusalem, and, while he was on his way thither, to assassinate him. Festus declined to accede to this request, for the reason given in 25: 16, but insisted that whatever charges the Jews had to present should be preferred at Cæsarea. To this the Jews had to agree, and they "laid many and grievous complaints against Paul which they could not prove" (25: 7.) But Festus, willing to please the Jews, although Paul had denied the charges, asked him if he were willing to be tried at Jerusalem. This Paul refused. He knew it would mean that he would be tried before the Sanhedrin. Paul, being a Roman citizen, could not legally be forced to submit to such a trial. He therefore made use of his privileges as a Roman citizen and appealed to the emperor, who at this time was Nero. Cæsar was a general term, just as kaiser is the German for emperor, and which itself is the same word as Cæsar. This appeal was the right of every Roman citizen, and was only disregarded in perfectly clear and flagrant cases. Still Festus consulted with his council (v. 12). This action of Paul ended the persecution of the Jews in Syria. Their charges would have to be preferred at Rome. Agrippa (Herod Agrippa II.) the brother-in-law of Festus, with his sister, Bernice, who was the sister of the wife of Felix, came to congratulate Festus, and Paul was brought before them to explain his case as described in verses 14-27.

Agrippa II. was the son of the Herod who had beheaded James and imprisoned Peter (Acts 12: 1-3), and whose fate is described in Acts 12: 20-23. It was said that he lived in an unholy union with his sister Bernice, who was one of the most wicked women of her day. Both Agrippa and Bernice claimed to be Jews in religion, hence the personal appeal of Paul (26: 3, 27). Paul's address is a model speech, though we only have it in a condensed form. In this address we have the account of Paul's conversion given for the third time. (Compare 9: 3-18; 22: 4-11), and with the greatest fullness.

19. "I was not disobedient." He carried out the will of the Lord so far as it was revealed to him.

20. "Them of Damascus." Acts 9: 19, 20. "Jerusalem." Acts 9: 26-29; 22: 17-20. "Gentiles." Acts 13: 46. "Repent." Change the mind and attitude toward God and self. "Turn to God." Trust and follow Him. "Do works." Change of mind and faith must issue in actual service of some kind.

22. His support was from God. "Small and great." Men of all ranks. "None other things," etc. That is, he taught nothing but what was either foretold or implied in the Jewish scriptures.

23. "How that the Christ must suffer, and how that he first by the resurrection from the dead should proclaim light both to the people and the Gentiles." R. V., 2 Tim. 1: 10.

24. "Paul thou art mad; thy much learning doth turn thee to madness." R. V. So it seemed to the Roman who had no belief in a future life.

25. "Noble." Better "excellent." R. V. Note Paul's courteous manner.

26. He appeals to the king's knowledge of the events. He must have been familiar with the main facts. It was his father who had beheaded James and imprisoned Peter.

27. Paul may have asked this question to show that if Agrippa believed the prophets he could not regard the fulfillment of their prophecies as irrational; for, not only were these things not done in a corner, but they were indeed the fulfillment of prophecy.

28. "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." This familiar text is rendered in the Revised Version, "With but little persuasion thou wouldst fain make me a Christian." Scholars still differ as to which is to be preferred, though most incline to that of the Revised Version. This is to give the words an ironical meaning—"Do you think you are going to make me a Christian with such a speech as this?" In the Authorized Version the meaning is conveyed that Agrippa was really touched and was "almost" ready to become a follower of Christ. From what we know of Agrippa's character, the ironical interpretation seems most likely. It must also be borne in mind that the word "Christian" at this time was a word in ill-repute, and, so far as we know, not employed among the believers themselves. The word is only used in two other places in the New Testament, and in each case seems to be mentioned as a word of reproach. (Acts 11: 26; 1 Pet. 4: 16).

29. Note the beauty of Paul's reply. "And Paul said, I would to God that, whether with little or with much, not thou only, but also all that hear me this day, might become such as I am, except these bonds." R. V. Whether Agrippa spoke in earnest or in irony, Paul's heart yearned that all might have an experience like his of the power of the gospel to every one that believed it.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Obedience is the organ of spiritual life.
2. "Almost" is not saved.

TOPIC FOR FIFTH MONTH TWENTY-FOURTH.

POWER AND PRAYER.

Acts 1: 13, 14; 2: 1-4, 41.

Second-day, Fifth mo. 18.—The promise of the Father. Joel 2: 28-30.

Third-day, Fifth mo. 19.—Waiting on the Lord. Ps. 27: 8-14.

Fourth-day, Fifth mo. 20.—Prevailing prayer. Jas. 5: 13-16.

Fifth-day, Fifth mo. 21.—Of one accord. Gal. 5: 19-26.

Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 22.—The Spirit's mission. John 15: 26, 27.

Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 23.—Coveting power. Acts 8: 14-24.

The disciples had a number of opportunities of missing the blessing that came on the day of Pentecost. Christ had ascended, and social and business interests would soon scatter them without some restraining, unifying force, such as Christ's personal presence had been. The crucifixion had been followed by the speedy setting out of two of the disciples to Emmaus. Thomas was absent from the group to which the risen Lord first showed Himself. But they had received a commandment to wait at Jerusalem, and in this was the restraining force needed. It was obedience to this command, indefinite as to time, involving new expectations and an unaccustomed lack of the presence of the Master, that held them with unbroken ranks during the ten days following the Ascension in steadfastly continued prayer.

Obedience and prayer are closely correlated; each encourages and validates the other. Obedience attempted apart from prayer is blundering and powerless; communication with headquarters and the base of supplies is cut off. Prayer attempted without obedience is farcical, stultifying. One effect of prayer is to bring knowledge and ability, and unless these are put to practical use it is folly to pursue the forms of prayer.

Prayer harmonizes the soul with God. One of the marvels of wireless telegraphy is the "tuning" of receiver and transmitter so that the proper messages and they alone shall be taken by any given instrument. If they become discordant, a thousand messages may flash into the ether and nothing of them will reach the intended recipient. God has good news for all the world, but only those who are adjusted by prayerful expectancy to the "rate" of the divine communication can know what He would reveal.

Again, prayer is a recognition of our dependence upon God; it is a settling down upon the foundation that shall never be moved. The machinery that does the world's work to-day rests on massive substructures or runs on heavily-ballasted tracks; it must have a substantial working base. The efficient Christian is the one whose goings are established, and the prayer of faith is a deep anchorage.

These things brought the blessing at Pentecost. The will of God was the accepted will of the disciples, and the facts of the gospel were the base of a new and tremendously-operative transforming force. When the Church shall arrive at the place where the promised power is her real dependence and steadfast continuance in prayer is her mode of preparation, the harvest of Pentecost will be repeated and multiplied.

Missionary Department.

EXTRACTS FROM A MISSIONARY ADDRESS.

[This address was given by Harriet Green before Kansas Yearly Meeting in 1902. The extracts here given were compiled by Eva M. Carter.]

An old woman in China, who had become converted by a missionary not a Friend, objected to being baptized, "for," said she, "I can never be a Christian; I cannot keep Christ's last commands. He said, 'Go, disciple all nations,' and I cannot go. Therefore, I cannot be a Christian." While we know, of course, she was mistaken, for God does not require of us anything beyond our ability to perform, yet what about the many, many people who could go and do not? The people of Kansas Yearly Meeting are not doing half enough! Kansas people are peculiarly adapted to be missionaries—by their bringing up, by their quick perception and by their bright way of doing things. Each quarterly meeting in Kansas Yearly Meeting should have a missionary in the field, and then each monthly meeting and then each meeting.

What saved London Yearly Meeting? The foreign mission work. It all started from an invalid woman calling some children to her room and instructing them in sewing garments for the poor. This work spread to other meetings and attracted the attention of some of the prominent members of London Yearly Meeting. The yearly meeting organized a Board of Foreign Missions, and Rachel Metcalf was the first fruits of English Friends in India. The Missionary Helper's Union is scattered throughout London Yearly Meeting. It has been and is still one of the delights of the children. These children are taught that they may be, and most likely will be, called to foreign mission work; so they grow up with this end in view.

Some say: "Yes, O yes, I am interested in foreign missionary work, but I don't want my boy or my girl to go." God wants your best. You had better say "Yes" to God. A girl felt truly called of God to be a missionary, and in a meeting at Exeter Hall gave herself as a missionary to the foreign field. As she came out of the hall with her father she looked up at him and said: "I feel myself called to be a foreign missionary." And he said, "My daughter, I gladly give you to God for foreign missions." She was an orphan, having an adopted father near 80 years of age. And people said, "Why did Ada go away off there and leave her aged father?" God knew. As time went on her aged father was taken very ill, and people said, "O, if Ada were only there! How Ada is needed at home!" And Ada was there on the spot, ready to nurse her father back to health. She felt as truly called of God to return home as she did to go to the foreign field. It was a long voyage, and she started several weeks before he fell ill, feeling that she must return home; and so, when she was needed, she was there. Beloved, God is not a hard task-master. He who called Ada to the foreign mission field as truly called her home when she was needed there. Trust God with your best.

Pray for the missionaries so they will feel the force of your prayers. Pray so they will find perplexities and cares dispelled because of the united prayers at home. A lady missionary in the foreign field was in much distress of mind, discouraged and perplexed in her work; but suddenly her hopes began to brighten; she felt wonderfully cheered and refreshed and strengthened. She afterward learned that at the very hour when her heart took fresh courage and her faith looked up some Christian women in the home land had met for united prayer for her!

In my work I have often gathered poor women about me and taught them. We had a mothers' meeting once and one poor woman, a very hard-working woman, with a drinking husband, had two pair of blankets—very cheap they were, perhaps the two pair for a dollar, but the best she could procure. And, after hearing about the work in Madagascar, she said, "I want to send these blankets to those poor things in Madagascar." I hesitated, knowing how badly she needed them and that she would sleep cold without them, and I said, "Suppose you keep one and send the other." "No, no; I can do without. I want to send them both." So the blankets were sent as she desired. Not long afterward (I had been trying in my mind to plan some way to get this poor woman some blankets, which she so much needed), when at the meeting one day, I noticed a package, an interesting one, which I found to be blankets, heavy wool blankets—you do not have such blankets here—so thick, to keep out the cold, and those blankets were labeled, "For the poor woman who gave her blankets for those poor things in Madagascar." To this day I do not know who the donor was. God sent them.

We English Friends believe in making our foreign mission work self-supporting. We believe in teaching the natives how to do things for themselves and how to help others.

Let me tell you how we get our money for foreign missionary work—and the money comes from the poorer people, the hard-working people. It isn't the rich who give, though they do give, but it is of what they do not need. To really give I believe you have to give till you feel it.

Every member has to give $1.00 a year. In the Helpers' Union the children are to give weekly. If one fails for one week to pay his weekly apportionment, his name is called out as delinquent. If he fails the second week, his name is read up as not having paid his apportionment. The third week he is called to the front and given a seat on the floor, and is, of course, considered a very naughty boy.

Humility does not consist of thinking poorly of our nature, in thinking meanly of the spirit that God has given us, but in so lifting our eyes to God and to the heights of our nature that we think truly of ourselves.—John Hamilton Thom.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

EDITOR:—I thought I would address a few lines to thee to express my appreciation of the AMERICAN FRIEND. I am now over 78 years of age, but commenced when a boy to read the "Original Friend" of Philadelphia, by Enoch Lewis; then the "Friends Library," then "Friends Review," then "Christian Worker," and finally AMERICAN FRIEND. I have followed all of these up to the present time with much interest, and it seems to me that they have been on the line of improvement all the way as they should be, and I could wish that every family of Friends in our large country would take and read the AMERICAN FRIEND.

AQUILLA TIMBERLAKE.

Scotts Mills, Ore.

Sophia M. Fry had a comfortable voyage across the Atlantic and is now quietly resting at home.

Rufus M. Jones gave an address before the members of Friends' Institute on "Odd Sects in the Time of George Fox" Sixth-day evening of last week.

Isabelle Kenworthy, of San José, Cal., recently visited Berkeley Meeting, Cal., and Amos M. Kenworthy, the work in San Francisco. Both rendered service as the Lord was pleased to lead.

Sarah Caroline Hadley, who has a minute from her meetings in Wilmington, O., expects to attend New York Yearly Meeting. She has been visiting meetings in and about Philadelphia.

We have received an interesting report of the Boys' Orphanage at Seoni Malva, India. This beautiful work is now under the management of J. D. and A. Maynard, who visited America two years ago.

The success of the Boarding Home and School at Corinth, Va., for the past year has greatly exceeded expectations. Jane E. White and her son, Richard A. White, visited the place the 10th and 11th ult.

At the annual oratorical contest held at Friends' University, Fifth month 2d, Albert Young, of Haviland, Kan., won first place; Esther Chase, Wichita, second place, and La Rue Hornor, Wichita, third place.

Our friend Theodore L. Cuyler sends us good cheer in a recent letter, which contains also a new article from his pen. He hopes to attend the approaching conference at Lake Mohonk on Peace and Arbitration.

Josiah Butler, superintendent of evangelistic work for Kansas Yearly Meeting, has completed his visits to the various meetings in Sterling Quarterly Meeting. His words proved helpful and strengthening to all in many ways.

Professor Jay Edwin Jay has been appointed by the Board of Directors of Friends' University as college solicitor, and by his untiring enthusiasm and perseverance it is expected there will be an appreciable addition to the enrollment next year.

Mary S. Knowles's address is now Gansevoort, Saratoga County, N. Y. She is now serving in the meeting where Jonathan DeVol labored for many years.

The young people of Indianapolis, Ind., Meeting have organized a "Delitha B. Harney Foreign Missionary Circle." In their meetings they are reading a book, "The Dark Continent," by Willis Hotchkiss, and expect to take Africa as their field of work.

Friends' Meeting at Bangor, Iowa, has enjoyed an eight days' meeting, which closed the Third instant under the heart-searching preaching of Harry R. Keates, of Glens Falls, N. Y., assisted by R. Hayes Packett. A number testified to having been definitely blessed.

Vanwert Quarterly Meeting was held the 2d instant at Friends' Chapel, near Tama, Mercer County, O. Joseph O. Binford, yearly meeting superintendent; Levi Cox, of Vermilion, Ill., and B. J. Mills, of Newcastle, Ind., were the visiting ministers present. An excellent meeting is reported.

Joshua and Isabella Rowntree, being both somewhat tired out with their travels and exertions, found it necessary to take a complete rest for a few days before leaving Haverford. They are at present at Mount Kisco, N. Y., and expect to sail for England by the Ivernia on Seventh-day, the 16th.

"The British Weekly" has a leading editorial in the issue for Fourth month 23d on the "Future of Quakerism and the Salvation Army." The article sees much that is hopeful for Quakerism in the opening of the "Woodbrooke Settlement," and hopes that the Salvation Army will go and do likewise.

Yearly meeting of Friends for New England will be held at Portland, Me., commencing Fifth-day, Sixth month 11th, at 9 a.m., with meeting on ministry and oversight. Yearly meeting for discipline Sixth-day, the 12th, at 9 a.m. All expecting to attend or those wishing for board or room will please correspond with L. M. Douglas, Portland, Me.

Morton C. Pearson, who has been resident minister in the meeting at Knightstown, Ind., for about three years, is making arrangements to remove with his wife to Chicago for the summer, where he expects to pursue biblical studies in the University of Chicago. These faithful Christian workers will be greatly missed in the meeting at Knightstown.

Abbie Hobson, who, with a minute from Pasadena Monthly Meeting, Cal., has spent the past year in the Middle States in religious work with her husband, Tilman Hobson, will return to Pasadena, Cal., Fifth month 15th. He will remain to fill engagements in revivals, conventions and tent meetings. His address will be 195 East Logan Street, Noblesville, Ind.

A series of meetings began at Corinth, Va., on the 29th of Third month, and continued until the 9th of Fourth month. Meetings were conducted by George C. Wise, Jr., assisted by the home workers. The attendance was good throughout, except one or two evenings, when it was very stormy. Nearly all the students and teachers who were not already Christians took the desired step.

Friends at Corinth, Va., organized with some of the other denominations the first of this year for union temperance work. The object is to get all the different denominations united and interested in the temperance cause. Meetings are held once a month, and circulate among the different denominations. The meetings have thus far been largely attended, and seem to be a great and successful factor in the cause of temperance.

The meeting at San José, Cal., continues to prosper. At the last monthly meeting three persons were received by request; the month before one by request and four by letter. In all thirty-three have been added to the membership during the last fiscal year. The meeting recently enjoyed the presence and services of Rachel S. Taylor, a minister from England, and at present Nixon and Louisa Rush, ministers from Fairmont, Ind., are spending some time there. The company and labor of each of these Friends have been encouraging and helpful to all.

The ninth annual Lake Mohonk Conference on International Arbitration will meet on the invitation of Mr. Albert K. Smiley at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., Fifth month 27th to 29th. The Hon. John W. Foster, the veteran diplomatist, will preside, and the fact that an unusually large number of men of national reputation will attend proves that the subject of international arbitration is now before the world as never before.

Farmington Quarterly Meeting, held in Fourth month at Farmington, N. Y., was favored with the company and ministry of Luke Woodard, whose admonition and exposition of gospel truth were helpful. At the Christian Endeavor Union session the subject under consideration was the question, "Why is there not more aggressive evangelistic work when the need is so great?" The discussion was lively and earnest. The Bible School Conference was also an interesting meeting. There were reports of the different schools. These gave encouraging accounts of the "Home Department" work.

The records of Farmington Monthly Meeting, New York, reveal an interesting history. In the year 1790 a large number of Friends removed from North Adams, Mass., into what is now Farmington, N. Y. Among these were Abram Lapham and his son Ira. They were among the number that organized the first Friends' meeting, in which both were speakers, but not acknowledged ministers. Alexander Purdy married Esther, daughter of Ira Lapham. She, too, often offered prayer. Her son, Alexander M., was also a member and minister in that meeting, and his son, Ellison, has preached in the meeting. Thus we find five generations of one family, all members of the same monthly meeting and all active in the ministry of preaching. The record also shows that Ellison Purdy is the fourth in succession in another family who were ministers.

MARRIED.

FORSTER-BAILY.—At the residence of Hezekiah and Elizabeth B. Baily, of Covington, Ky., Fourth month 14th, 1903, Edith Baily and William Dickson Forster, of Norristown, Pa.

DIED.

BINFORD.—At New Castle, Ind., Fourth month 27th, 1903, Dora, daughter of Samuel and Hannah R. Binford, aged 42 years. She was a birthright Friend, was converted early in life and was a patient sufferer and loving Christian character.

HARVEY.—In Parke County, Ind., Third month 24th, 1903, Charles L., son of John and Martha E. Harvey, in his 38th year. He was a member of Rush Creek Monthly Meeting.

HAWKINS.—At Onaway, Mich., Fourth month 7th, 1903, Emma Chaney, wife of Josiah R. Hawkins, in her 41st year. She, with her husband, united with Friends by request in 1893. She remained faithful to her Christian vows until death.

NEGUS.—At Pasadena, Cal., Fourth month 27th, Martha B. Negus, wife of Albert Negus, in the 68th year of her age.

PEARSON.—At Colorado Springs, Col., First month 22d, Mary Fogg Pearson, daughter of Edmin and Eliza Fogg and wife of Albanus Pearson, in the 49th year of her age. The home of the deceased was at Springdale, Iowa, where she lived and labored a faithful Friend for many years.

PURDY.—At Palmyra, N. Y., Fourth month 28th, 1903, Ruth Lapham, youngest child of Alex. M. and Ruth J. Purdy, aged nearly 14 years. She was a sweet Christian girl.

SEARS.—At his home, near Chapel, Mo., Fourth month 23d, 1903, Thomas M. Sears, aged 47 years. He was a member of Chapel Monthly Meeting of Friends; also a member of Chapel Academy Board. His helpfulness in upbuilding society and in the neighborhood will cause him to be greatly missed.

WARING.—At Collins, N. Y., Fifth month 4th, 1903, Isabella Waring, sister of David Little. She was formerly a Presbyterian, but for the past few years had been a faithful member of Collins Monthly Meeting.

Events and Comments.

The Colombian Congress has been called for Sixth month 20th. Some think this means a speedy ratification of the Panama Canal treaty.

Russia continues to tighten her grip upon Manchuria and troops are being mobilized to hold her ground in this province against all comers.

The Irish Land bill passed its second reading by the enormous majority of 417, the vote being 443 to 26. It is announced that the Government is willing to consider reasonable amendments to the bill, which will insure its final passage.

It has been determined that small-pox is caused by a micro-organism representative of the lowest form of animal life. This fact serves to show a relation between small-pox and such diseases as malaria, and to distinguish it from many other infectious diseases caused by bacteria.

The representatives of the several powers concerned in the Venezuelan controversy have finally signed the last protocols, referring preferential treatment to The Hague tribunal. All of the three sets of The Hague protocols are in the English language. The conventions also provide for the settlement of the allies' claims by the several commissions which are to meet at Caracas this summer.

The British Government has issued a significant warning to the other powers to keep away from the Persian Gulf, a declaration which, in its form and purpose, is analogous to the Monroe Doctrine of the United States. Lord Lansdowne, Foreign Secretary, has practically notified the competing powers that any attempt on their part to establish a naval base or fortified post in those waters means war with Great Britain.

A railroad to connect Valparaiso with Buenos Ayres over the Andes is now assured and will be finished in a few years. The Argentine Government is building up to the mountains on its side, and the Chilean Congress has just provided for the construction of its share of the transcontinental line. This road will be the first to cross the South American Continent. It will shorten the distance from Europe to Chile by six to eight days.

During Fourth month the money circulation of this country increased $22,595,777. The total volume of money outstanding now amounts to $2,374,353,720, against $2,260,750,242 a year ago, and $1,540,007,082 on Fifth month 1st, 1896. The increase in seven years is over 54 per cent. Nothing like such an expansion of the money volume in a similar space of time has been known before since the inflation times of the Civil War and the wildcat banking days of the early republic.

The great flouring mills at Minneapolis, Minn., which have been closed on the refusal of the railroads to give favorable rates on flour going eastward, are expected soon to open; but the business of turning wheat into flour is moving east. Buffalo already has several great mills for grinding wheat, which two years ago would have been made into flour in Minnesota. This change is largely due to the greater ease with which wheat can be transferred from the elevators and the trains, thus making transportation cheaper.

The spirit of reform is spreading through the Eastern nations and taking a variety of forms, according to the local conditions. The Ameer of Afghanistan is the latest monarch who is reported as affected. He has commenced his reform by divorcing all but four of his wives. He also is suppressing evil-doers with an iron hand. In a recent proclamation he ordered that any one convicted of taunting another on account of his religion shall be blown from a cannon's mouth. Robbers are placed in cages which are hung prominently in the thoroughfares as a warning to others.

The most destructive flood in the history of the North swept down Bonanza Creek, in the Klondike, last week, flooding the cuts opened for summer work, inundating the road houses along the way, creeping into the piles of pay dirt heaped up from the winter's work and spreading devastation in its path for many miles. Expensive machinery and equipment, costing thousands of dollars, has been destroyed by the rush of waters, and dumps containing an aggregate of two millions in gold have been undermined and washed away, setting at naught the whole winter's work, and making recovery practically impossible.

The Japanese Cabinet has abandoned the land tax as a means for providing funds for the naval program. This move terminates a parliamentary deadlock, which has been in progress since last fall, and which resulted in Twelfth month last in the dissolution of the Parliament. All the political parties were outwardly agreed to the Government's shipbuilding program, but the majority in the House of Representatives insisted that the money should be found by reducing other schemes of expenditure, whereas the Cabinet insisted upon the continuance of the additional land tax imposed for five years in 1898, and expiring in 1903, amounting to about $4,500,000 annually. The contest was stubbornly fought.

The drastic legislation of the last Congress against the manufacture of oleomargarine is proving quite effective. It placed an almost prohibitive tax of ten cents a pound on the colored article, leaving uncolored "oleo" taxable at a fourth of a cent a pound. For the past nine months the government has collected $306,580 in revenue from this source, against $1,703,318 for the same time in the previous fiscal year, when a uniform tax of two cents was placed on the manufacture of all oleomargarine. This exhibit ought to satisfy the farm dairy interests, but it may not, for it is shown that a very considerable amount of "oleo" is being produced and sold even without the aid of coloring.

BOOK OF MEETINGS.

The Five Years Meeting having assigned the work of getting out a Book of Meetings to the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board, questions calling for necessary information have been sent out. First, to a member of the Board in each yearly meeting, who is asked to distribute them to the other member or members, and they to the quarterly meetings.

To facilitate the work, we recommend the appointment of a suitable person in each quarter to send out questions and to collect and forward replies from quarterly, monthly and meetings for worship. In this way we hope to obtain such information as will enable us to get out a truly reliable and helpful Book of Meetings.

The latest printed minutes, or documents, of the yearly meetings will be helpful, yet none of them give all that is desirable to know.

By request of the president of the Board, all information and matter collected is to be sent, for final preparation and arrangement to Levi Gregory, 200 Montgomery Street, San Jose, Cal.

That the committee may have the proper data for the work, please answer following questions, numbering the replies to correspond with the numbers that indicate desired information.

YEARLY MEETING.

1. What is the corporate name of your yearly meeting?
2. When was it established?
3. Of what yearly meeting or meetings was it formerly a part?
4. Has there been any separation in it since its establishment, other than the setting off of new yearly meetings?
5. Where and when are its sessions held? What dates govern?
6. Names and addresses of the correspondents.
7. Name and address of the clerk or clerks.
8. Do men and women hold separate sessions? If not, when did the change occur?
9. Place, day and hour when regular sessions of the Permanent Board occur.
10. Day and hour when yearly meeting on ministry and oversight convenes.
11. Total membership from latest information.
12. Names and addresses of ministers.
13. Number and names of quarterly meetings within your limits.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

1. Name of quarterly meeting.
2. When established.
3. Time and place of holding, how governed? Give day and hour.
4. Name and address of clerk or clerks.
5. Names and addresses of the correspondents.

6. Total membership from latest information.

7. Time and place of holding quarterly meeting on ministry and oversight.

8. Number and names of monthly meetings within the quarterly meeting limits.

MONTHLY MEETING.

1. Name of monthly meeting, and quarter.

2. Time and place of holding, how governed? Give day and hour.

3. Name and address of clerk or clerks.

4. Name and address of the monthly meeting correspondent.

5. Total membership from latest information.

6. When does the local meeting on ministry and oversight occur?

7. Number and names of meetings or congregations in each monthly meeting.

MEETINGS FOR WORSHIP.

1. Give name of each meeting and the hour of holding it, both on First-day and in the middle of the week.

2. If the name of the meeting does not correspond with the name of town where the meeting is located, or if the meeting be in a city or large village, please give such additional information as would enable a stranger to readily find the place. Name the line of railroad, the nearest station, and state how meeting can most easily be reached, whether by steam, trolley, stage, etc., and from what point or points.

3. Give total membership of each meeting.

4. Give any other information which you would deem valuable to introduce into a "Book of Meetings."

5. About how many copies of a "Book of Meetings" would be likely to be sold in each of your congregations provided the price did not exceed 25 cents?

A LAST RESORT.

Pure Food Should be the First.

When the human machine goes wrong it's ten to one that the trouble began with the stomach, and can therefore be removed by the use of proper food. A lady well known in Bristol, Ontario County, N. Y., tells of the experience she had curing her only child by the use of scientific food: "My little daughter, the only child, and for that reason doubly dear, inherited nervous dyspepsia. We tried all kinds of remedies and soft foods. At last, when patience was about exhausted, and the child's condition had grown so bad the whole family was aroused, we tried Grape-Nuts.

"A friend recommended the food as one which her own delicate children had grown strong upon, so I purchased a box—as a last resort. In a very short time a marked change in both health and disposition was seen. What made our case easy was that she liked it at once, and its crisp, nutty flavor has made it an immediate favorite with the most fastidious in our family.

"Its use seems to be thoroughly established in Western New York, where many friends use it regularly. I have noticed its fine effects upon the intellects as well as the bodies of those who use it. We owe it much." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE NEW JOURNALISM.

Forty years ago the journalist made his mark by thinking deeply. If he makes a mark to-day, it must be by thinking quickly, for we are whirling along so fast and events of importance and interest are flashing by us in such rapid succession and astonishing variety that the commentator must have his say at once, or his subject will have disappeared from view. One night I was seated in the office of one of the very ablest of the new-school journalists, when the managing editor entered and said to him: "That murder story is panning out quite well, and I thought perhaps you might like to put it on the front page, instead of with the rest of the local matter."

"What story was that?" asked the editor-in-chief.

"About that man who got on the car this afternoon and found his wife that he had been separated from riding with another man. He pulled his pistol out and shot her —"

At this point in the recital, the editor-in-chief interposed with a question which decided at once the importance as a piece of news of this intensely tragic story of love, hate and revenge. "What line was it on?" he asked, and the question seemed so absurd to me that I could not help laughing.

"What are you laughing at?" he asked. "Can't you see that if this thing happened on a Broadway car in front of the Hoffman House, with John Drew on the rear platform and William C. Whitney in the next seat, that it would be worth two columns on the front page; while if it happened on a cross-town line down by the water front, it wouldn't be worth more than half a column on an inside page? What line was it on?" he repeated.

"On the belt line," was the reply, and the tragedy was relegated to an obscure part of the paper.—James L. Ford, in "The Pilgrim" for May.

Conclusions so startling as those reached by Dr. Wallace's "Fortnightly" article on "Man's Place in the Universe" could not go long unchallenged, and the April number of the "Fortnightly" brings a prompt reply from no less an authority than the Savilian Professor of Astronomy at Oxford. Professor Turner's article is reprinted in "The Living Age" for May 9th.

Baron D'Estournelles, a high French authority, recently said: "The American Government has given Europe an important lesson. Only a year ago Europe sought to let The Hague Court die a silent death, but President Roosevelt saved the tribunal, first by submitting to it the question in dispute between Mexico and the United States; second, by obliging Germany, Great Britain and Italy to take their Venezuelan complications to The Hague Court. Finally, Andrew Carnegie enriches the court by the magnificent gift of $1,500,000. Thus, thanks to America and the Americans, the tribunal is not doomed to slow death, and even Europe has been awakened to its merits."

"To be at our best to-morrow we must be at our best to-day."

KIPLING'S NEW POEM—"THE SETTLER."

Four of the principal stanzas are as follows:

(Copyright, 1903, by Rudyard Kipling.)

Here where my fresh-turned furrows run and the deep soil glistens red,
I will repair the wrong that was done to the living and the dead;
Here where the senseless bullet fell, and the barren shrapnel burst,
I will plant a tree, I will dig a well against the heat and the thirst.

Here in a large and a sunlit land, where no wrong bites to the bone,
I will lay my hand in my neighbor's hand, and together we will atone
For the set folly and the red breach and the black waste of it all;
Giving and taking counsel each over the cattle-kraal.

Earth where we rode to slay or be slain
our love shall redeem unto life;
We will gather and lead to her lips again
the waters of ancient strife
From the far and the fiercely-guarded streams and the pools where we lay in wait,
Till the corn cover our evil dreams, and the young corn our hate.

Here in the wastes and the troughs of the plains where the healing stillness lies,
And the vast benignant sky restrains,
and the long days make wise—Bless to our use the rain and the sun and the blind seed in its bed,
That we may repair the wrong that was done to the living and the dead!

[The entire poem appears in "Collier's Weekly" under date of Third month 7th.]

PARTICULAR.

Little Dorothy had just begun to go to Sunday School, and had been much interested in the Story of the Creation, the Story of the Flood, etc., as her teacher had told them to the class.

One day Dorothy was taken by her uncle to see the menagerie. When she came home she told her mother all about the strange animals she had seen. She enjoyed the parrots and the funny monkeys; she called the tigers "big pussies," but the huge, homely hippopotamus had evidently made a most unfavorable impression on the youthful mind. She described it to her mamma as well as she could—the huge, ugly beast with its great red mouth.

Then she was silent a few minutes, thinking matters over in her small mind. Dorothy usually had quite decided opinions of her own.

Suddenly she asked, "Mamma, did God make everything? Did He make all the animals?"

"Yes, dear," replied her mother.

"Did He—did He make the—hippopotamus, mamma?"

"Yes, dear."

"Well!" said Dorothy, in a tone of great decision, giving her yellow curls a toss, "then I'm not going to Sunday School any more!"—"Woman's Home Companion."

VIOLETS FOR MOTHER.

She walked timidly into a florist's where the young proprietor was selling a society girl a big bunch of American Beauties. She was nine years old. An old shawl covered her head and shoulders, showing garments scrupulously clean beneath it.

"I want some violets to take to my mamma," said the little one, holding out a dime.

"I think some cheaper flowers would do, my girl," said the man.

"No, sir," came from the tot. "I want violets. Ain't that money 'nuff to pay for them? My mamma is sick an' my papa's dead. Mamma, she gets whiter and whiter every day, and jes' coughs off. This morning she felt so weak and bad I jes' thought she'd die. But she said if she could only live until the warm springtime came again, and she could smell violets once more, she jes' knew she'd get better, an' I had this dime, so I—"

But the florist was fumbling before a glass case marked "Violets, 75 cents per dozen," and there was moisture in his eyes and an ache in his throat.

In a little while he had a big bunch—more than a hundred—wrapped up. He gravely took the child's ten cents, gave her the precious blossoms and held the door open, bowing her out as gallantly as if she were some grand customer.

The dime he carefully wrapped up in a piece of paper and put in his purse.

"Dying for a breath of springtime and the sweet odor of violets," he muttered. That's all.

But that 10 cents! Why that dime would almost buy a sinner's ransom at the gates of heaven.—Exchange.

POOR DOMINIE

Between the Devil and the Deep Sea.

A clergyman of Gresham, Neb., who drank coffee for many years suffered from chronic insomnia and from terrific headaches when he quit coffee. He says: "I have been a very heavy user of coffee for so long and have seen its effects so clearly that there is now no doubt in my mind concerning its injurious effects upon the nervous system.

"While a coffee user I was unable to sleep for hours after retiring at night, and on the other hand terrific headaches resulted if the regular hour for drinking coffee passed, and I did not get it so I was in a miserable position.

"But I found a firm friend in Postum Cereal Coffee, and from the very time that I adopted Postum all these evil effects vanished. I now enjoy sound sleep and improved appetite and a decidedly clearer complexion, and I am convinced that better health and a longer life would be the result of its general use. I have a friend who has been a user of Postum for several years, and the story of her recovery from neuralgia of the stomach simply by using Postum in place of coffee seems almost too wonderful to be true. Many times she was near death's door, and the doctors had frequently given her case up as hopeless, but she was entirely healed by leaving off coffee and using Postum. It is a pleasure to say these good things about Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

FAIR SKIES.

Fair skies, O truest,
O deepest and bluest,
Of stars, or of sun in its joy,
Your message can sever,
No never! no never!
The years it can never destroy.

O love that traces
The fern frond, and graces
The rose and the lily so fair,
Is hovering over
The woodland and clover,
Imprinting the joy everywhere.

Fair skies of glory,
Repeat the glad story
Each day as you hover above:
The wonder of sages,
The theme of the ages—
The story of infinite love.
—B. F. M. Sours, in "World's Events."

The requests we make of God interpret our character. They show us as we are. God reads our character in our prayers. What we love best, what we covet most, that gives the key to our hearts.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

DON'T be confused by all this talk about White Lead chalking, for this is one of its most desirable properties. Pure White Lead properly applied will not crack, peel or scale, but when it fails will do so gradually from outside wear.

It will protect whatever it is applied to as long as a vestige of the paint remains, and does not require to be scraped or burned off when repainting becomes necessary.

THE BOY UNDERSTOOD.

An old schoolmaster said one day to a minister who had come to examine his school: "I believe the children know the catechism word for word."

"But do they understand it—that is the question?" said the minister.

The schoolmaster merely bowed respectfully in reply, and the examination began. A little boy repeated the fifth commandment, "Honor thy father and thy mother," and he was requested to explain it.

Instead of trying to do so, he said, almost in a whisper, his face covered with blushes:

"Yesterday I showed a strange gentleman over the hill. The sharp stones cut my feet, and the gentleman saw they were bleeding, and gave me some money to buy me shoes. I gave the money to my mother, for she had no shoes, either, and I thought I could go barefoot better than she could."—Exchange.

WOMEN'S PREACHING.

FOR centuries it was supposed that the authority of the Apostle Paul was unequivocally against public preaching by women, and the passages in First Corinthians have, until the present day, been valiantly quoted as the word of God to stop the exercise of spiritual gifts possessed by women. There are few things which more clearly show how stupidly the Bible has been studied and how thoroughly most persons have been in bondage to the letter. "I suffer not a woman to speak" has been held to be as much a revelation of God to men as has the announcement of the eternal truth that "the pure in heart shall see God." The early Friends knew that the real revelation was to be found in the words, "In Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female." They acted on this and failed to take much notice of the prohibitions on women's ministry. They saw that the spirit of the gospel and the practice of Paul were both in favor of the complete equality of the sexes in all spiritual matters, and they were not much concerned over the two or three difficult texts which seem to put up the bars.

Recent interpretations* of the Corinthian passages have not only shown the wisdom of the Friends' position, but they still further make clear that Paul was in no sense opposed to women's ministry. In the first place it is unmistakable that women did take part in the public exercises in the churches where Paul labored. In Corinth itself women both prayed and prophesied (i.e., preached) without restraint. They were merely requested to cover their heads in public, as the custom of that city required at the time—a command which is purely local, and has no significance for our day whatever. The apostle further had women associated with him in his Christian work at Philippi (Phil. 4: 2-3); he commends the public work of Phebe (Rom. 16: 1-2); he bestows much praise upon the religious labors of Tryphena, Tryphosa and Persis, and he gives again and again the glad hand of fellowship to Priscilla, who has the rare distinction of being named before Aquila. There is no ground for holding that Paul would shut out or actually did shut out a woman from the proper exercise of any divine spiritual gift. What does he mean, then, by Cor. 14: 34-35, "Let your women keep silence in the churches;" "It is not permitted unto them to speak;" "If they will learn anything let them ask their husbands at home"? The speaking which is here referred to cannot mean speaking in prayer or ministry, for as we have seen Paul freely allowed this to men and women alike. He is apparently dealing with the custom which prevailed in the apostolic churches of asking questions during the public teaching. Paul is jealous of anything which conflicted with the headship of the husband, and for the women to enter into this public questioning seemed to him a dangerous freedom to admit in the Greek cities. If they want to learn anything they are quietly to ask their husbands at home, instead of entering into a questioning contest in a public gathering. It has absolutely nothing whatever to do with the question of woman's ministry. Paul announces the truth for all ages that in Christ—i.e., in spiritual matters—there is no distinction of sex. He then lays down a local and temporal rule for dealing with a situation which existed in the Greek churches. We poor blind mortals have made the temporal regulation a universal principle, and have used it to close the mouths of spiritually-gifted women, for lo, these nineteen hundred years. Will Christians ever learn to distinguish between that which is spiritual and eternally true and that which was written for some local situation which has vanished away? The only question which need be asked about any kind of spiritual ministry of a woman is this: "Has she a gift for it?" If she has the gift, there is no line in Scripture which bars her from the exercise of it.

THE HARRIET GREEN ENDOWMENT.

WE now pass from the theory of woman's preaching to a practical illustration of it in the life of one who clearly had a divine anointing, and through whom the word came "quick and powerful." Under strange Southern wild flowers the mortal part of Harriet Green has been laid away in nature's keeping. We shall meet again in our yearly meetings, but she will not stand up to plead for fuller consecration, for completer devotion. For years to come in the remote country hamlets many will guard a precious memory of her visits, and her personal interest and her burning words, but she herself will not come again to call the slow of heart to their duty. She has finished what she had to do in the world, and has received the "well done."

* See especially Gilbert's "First Interpreters of Jesus," pp. 183-185.

The question which we wish now to press is whether we shall take up the fallen banner and carry on the work which was nearest her heart when she closed her eyes in death. There has been a widespread call for a memorial to mark our appreciation of her Christian service. The circumstances of her death and burial make Guilford pre-eminently the appropriate location for the memorial. Her most intimate friends and those with whom her life was most closely bound up unite in feeling that nothing would be so fitting to commemorate her work and to carry it to a further consummation as the endowment of a Biblical Department in Guilford College. This would be called "The Harriet Green Endowment for Bible Study," and for generations to come young men and women would thus be enabled to equip themselves to keep her work going on in the world. If the plan succeeds there must be some large sums given by those who are blessed with enough and to spare, but the endowment should in the main come from the small gifts of the many. Each interested Friend should have a hand in it. Contributions should be sent to George White, the treasurer of Guilford College, N. C. THE AMERICAN FRIEND will keep its readers informed of the progress of the fund, and it will do everything in its power to bring the undertaking to a successful issue.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

An item in the "Congregationalist" contains the statement that "there are churches in Boston that pay $2,000 a year to four persons to sing three times at one service on Sundays, while the same churches pay $250 a year for the religious education of 500 children and youth in their care." It is surely an indication of a loss of the real spiritual life and power. The members of such a congregation appear to be making their own entertainment their end and aim. What a perversion of the true spirit of Christianity it seems, and how the martyrs for the faith would cry out against such a religion of personal enjoyment. Our own meetings often seem bare and simple, and not very "attractive," but may we long be preserved from turning our meetings for worship into fashionable Sabbath entertainments.

HOW WE GOT THE BIBLE.

BY LYRA DALE TRUEBLOOD.

The canon of the Old Testament was begun by Ezra in the fifth century B. C. Nehemiah was the next to add to it the Prophets, but he did not complete it, for the Writings, or Psalms, began to be collected and added very soon after Nehemiah's time. Our only information must be gained from Jewish tradition and history, for the Bible itself does not tell us when or how the canon was completed. Christ, though He quotes from and refers to the Scriptures, does not tell us of what they consisted, and although some of the Old Testament books are mentioned by name in the New Testament, very many are not. Indeed, the book of Jude mentions the apocryphal book of Enoch, so we find that the New Testament does not aid us in determining what books are canonical. Many quotations of the apostles are evidently taken from these apocryphal books. The collection of Old Testament Scriptures used by Christ and His disciples was the Septuagint, which contained the Apocrypha, while the Hebrew collection omits them. All the old manuscripts in existence contain the apocryphal books, interspersed with the others.

From these facts we are led to conclude that the Old Testament canon as we have it was not yet fixed in the days of Christ. The Jews long entertained doubts as to the propriety of admitting into the canon the books of Ezekiel, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, Esther and Proverbs. Late in the first century A.D. we find the different schools of Rabbis discussing the canonicity of certain of these books. In 90 A.D. the question was settled for the Hebrew-speaking peoples by the Synod of Jamnia, which fixed the Palestinian or Hebrew canon, with which ours is identical. Still the Greek peoples continued to use the Alexandrian version, which contained the apocryphal books, and the Christian fathers continually quote from these books as being of an equal degree of sacredness with those which the Hebrews had made canonical. Thus we see that the canon was not fixed by prophets or men of great inspiration, but by certain Jewish Rabbis of the century after Christ had been crucified.

In St. Augustine's day some of the church councils agreed on these books as belonging in the Old Testament canon—Wisdom, Tobit, Judith, Ecclesiasticus and I and II Maccabees. Not until 1546 was the matter finally settled for the Roman Catholic Church, when the Council of Trent adopted the canon containing the apocryphal books, which has remained their Old Testament since. At this time occurred the separation between Protestants and Catholics, and the Protestants hesitated to accept the canon of their opponents. Luther translated ten of the apocryphal books in his German Bible, and spoke strongly against the claim of Esther to a place in the Holy Book. With this exception, however, he considered the Hebrew canon better than the Greek, and by degrees his opinion prevailed, until after the sixteenth century the present Old Testament books have been reckoned canonical by Protestants.

The New Testament canon was finally fixed for Catholic and Protestant alike at the Council of Trent in 1546, but during the early centuries much difference of opinion prevailed as to what books to admit. The early Christians soon began to realize the value of the apostolic writings, and in the second century a collection was made. Other early documents of a similar nature appealed to them as of value also, and worthy a place beside the writings of the apostles. The first canon of the New Testament appears to have been made about 170 A.D. It contained all our present books except Hebrews, 1 and 2 Peter and James.

Down to the fourth century there was disagreement, some of the church fathers admitting such writings as the Epistle of Barnabas, and the Shepherd of Hermas, but in the time of Augustine the Councils of Hippo and Carthage agreed upon the canon as we now have it, and though there was still some difference of opinion, there was never any real doubt after that time. In 1546 it was definitely fixed as it is in our New Testament.

With regard to the history of the text of the Old Testament, there are many hundreds of old manuscripts in existence, but the oldest is a copy of the Pentateuch, now in the British Museum, which is thought to belong to the ninth century A.D. The oldest Hebrew manuscript which bears a precise date is the Codex Petropolitanus, preserved in the Imperial Library at St. Petersburg, which is dated 916 A.D. This contains only the Later Prophets.

The many manuscripts of which these are representative contain practically the same text. The reason for this lies in the fact that the Jews have always observed the most minute and accurate rules in copying their Scriptures. Thus an almost absolute accuracy was secured, and the copy was equally as good as the original. This also accounts for the lateness of the manuscripts which are extant. Any imperfect or injured copies were not allowed to be used in the synagogue, but were destroyed. Hence as the old manuscripts became worn and mutilated they were put aside and soon lost, while new copies which were better preserved were substituted. While in secular documents later copies are usually inferior to the earlier and original ones, this is not the case with the Jewish Scriptures, owing to the scrupulous care they gave to having their copies absolutely perfect. The Rabbis even counted the words, verses and letters in the whole Bible and in its various sections. They held the tanning of the skin on which the copy was to be made as a sacred act. Even a Rabbi who knew the Bible by heart was not allowed to write one word or letter without having before him an authentic copy. While the manuscripts are of a late date, they compare favorably with those of the ancient Greek and Latin authors. There are no manuscripts of Herodotus nor of Plato before the ninth century; no complete copy of Homer before the thirteenth, though there is one of Virgil belonging to the fourth century.

Behind these manuscripts of the ninth century we have evidence in the writings of Rabbis, the Talmud, the Targums, etc., that they had the same text as we have. (The Talmud is the code of Jewish religious, political and social laws handed down from Moses and Ezra, and contains many quotations from Scripture. The Targums are the Chaldaic versions or interpretations of parts of the Old Testament, and give some light on the condition of the text.) There is no direct evidence, so we must turn to the translations of the Bible into other languages. These are the Samaritan version and the Greek version, the Septuagint.

The Samaritan version consists only of the Pentateuch. It is that part of the Bible adopted from their Jewish neighbors by the mixed population which the Assyrians established in Samaria, after the Ten Tribes had been conquered and carried away. At that time, of course, only the Pentateuch had been collected. This Samaritan version represents the Pentateuch as it was about the fifth century B.C. The variations are few in number and unimportant.

The greatest help to the textual criticism of the Old Testament is the Septuagint, because it contains the whole Bible, was translated before the Jews were divided over questions of interpretation, and was made before the advent of Christ. It took its name from the seventy scholars who, tradition says, translated it in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, in Egypt, from 284 to 247 B.C. Thus it belongs to the period of the Maccabean revolt. There are early manuscripts which date from the third or fourth century of our era. The difficulties in using the Septuagint as an aid to ascertaining the real text are that the manuscripts differ so that it is hard to tell what the original text was. There are two reasons for this divergence—the mistakes of the Greek translators, and the fact that they used different Hebrew texts.

These two versions, based on very ancient manuscripts, confirm us in the belief that the edition of the Hebrew text which the Massoretes, a class of scribes of the seventh to the tenth century, have handed down to us, is practically identical with the original manuscripts. The difficulty in getting an accurate translation of the original Hebrew lies in the fact that the language in the early days was written with no vowels. Hence it is almost impossible in some cases to be sure what words certain combinations of consonants stood for, though usually the context suggests what word was intended. In the time of the Massoretes vowel points were invented, when Hebrew had so largely ceased to be a spoken language that the traditional meanings of the words were likely to be forgotten.

The New Testament books were, on the contrary, not at first carefully preserved, as were those of the Old Testament. Christianity being a forbidden religion in the first centuries of the Empire, its sacred books were the objects of attack and destruction.

When Christianity was officially accepted as the state religion, in the early part of the fourth century, the Holy Scriptures began to be zealously cared for, copied and disseminated.

The oldest extant manuscripts of the Greek Bible are of the fourth century, the Codex Vaticanus and the Codex Sinaiticus, while the Codex Alexandrinus belongs to the fifth century. The Vatican manuscript is so called because it has been in the possession of the Vatican Library at Rome since 1475. It is not in the form of a roll, but is a large quarto volume, bound in red morocco, with leaves of fine vellum. It contains the apocryphal books with the others.

The Sinaitic Bible was discovered by Constantine Tischendorf in the monastery of St. Catherine on Mount Sinai. It is now in the imperial library at St. Petersburg. It was found in this way: Tischendorf was searching for old copies of the Bible, and in 1844, in a waste basket in the library of this convent, he discovered about one hundred and twenty leaves of an ancient Bible. The monks, who began to suspect the value of the leaves when they saw his eagerness to possess them, refused to give them all, and he succeeded in getting only forty-three. Ten years later he returned to find that the monks had hidden the rest of the book, and not until he obtained a letter from the Emperor of Russia did he get possession of the precious volume.

The third oldest manuscript is the Alexandrian, given to King Charles I. of England, in 1628, by the patriarch of Constantinople, and now in the British Museum. It is in four volumes, the first containing the Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, Kings and Chronicles. The second volume contains the twelve minor prophets—Isaiah, Jeremiah, Baruch, Lamentations; the Epistle of Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Esther, Tobit, Judith, Esdras I. and II., and the four books of the Maccabees. The third volume comprises an Epistle of Athanasius on the Psalms, the Hypothesis of Eusebius on the Psalms, Psalms, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Canticles, Wisdom of Solomon, and Ecclesiasticus or Sirach. In the fourth volume are the New Testament books, two Epistles of Clement to the Corinthians, and eight Psalms of Solomon.

CHARLEY'S DEBT.

BY ALIX.

"It is no use to talk about forgiving him, mother, He has acted hatefully to me, and I hate him with all my heart."

So said Charley, as, after a detailed account of the wrongs that one of his schoolmates had inflicted upon him, he turned to go upstairs to bed.

Mother looked sorrowfully after him. "Ah, Charley, Charley," she said, "remember, 'With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.'"

Charley shrugged his shoulders, and there was a "don't-care" expression on his face, which, by the way, is the very worst look a boy's or girl's face can wear. The words rested in his mind, however, as he was getting ready for bed, and when it was time for him to kneel down and say his prayers he paused for a moment. "I can't say the Lord's prayer to-night," he thought, "for there's that part in it that says 'forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us.' Now I don't mean to forgive Tom, and if I say that I will just be a hypocrite. I guess I will pray the prayer that mother taught me:

"Heavenly Father, please to bless me;
A good child I'll try to be,
And do what the Bible tells me.
Children must who do love Thee."

But no, I can't honestly pray that, either, for I know that the Bible tells us that we are to forgive those that trespass against us, not only seven times, but seventy times seven, and besides, I am not trying to be good, but am holding on with all my might to my hard feelings against Tom, and he deserves that I should, too. Oh! I know what I will say:

"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake"—

There he stopped. "Suppose I should die with these angry feelings in my heart—then God could never forgive me, for, as mother said, 'With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.'"

He walked about the room restlessly. "I won't pray at all," he said. "I will read a chapter instead."

The Bible opened at the parable of the servant that owed his lord ten thousand talents, and told how the lord forgave him his debt, and then how the forgiven man had gone out and taken a fellow servant, who owed him an hundred pence, by the throat and ordered him to pay him what he owed, and when he could not, had him cast into prison. And then he read how those who saw what he had done went and told his lord, and how he had said to him, "Oh thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt because thou desiredst me. Shouldst not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow servant, even as I had pity on thee?" As Charley read a new light seemed to break in upon his mind. "I never knew what this parable meant before," he said, softly; "we must forgive those who do wrong things against us, because God so freely forgives us the wrong things we do against Him—and oh, how many, many times He has forgiven me! How different it seems when I look at it in that way! Not forgiving because we are afraid He won't forgive us, but forgiving out of gratitude to Him who has forgiven us so often."

Charley knelt down. He had no difficulty in finding words to pray with now; when he arose it was with a peaceful heart, from which all angry feelings had departed.

This is the true secret, dear children, and may you also learn it. Thus only can our debt of gratitude to God be paid, and Jesus has said, "Whatsoever ye do unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Reprinted from "Olive Leaf."

TWENTIETH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE EARNEST WORKERS.

It has been well said by Frances Williard that "Life has but one problem to solve—how self shall be driven from the throne and love placed there in its stead." If, then, love is the motive power of our lives, and we realize the universal fatherhood of God, we cannot fail to believe in the brotherhood of man, and that we are in a very real sense "our brother's keepers." This giving of one's self for others has become a large part of the lives of Christians everywhere, and the band of Friends known as the Earnest Workers is one link in the chain of loving service which unites the hearts of all those who labor for humanity in need.

The present active membership of the Earnest Workers numbers 56, of whom 10 were added this year, largely through the efforts of a standing committee on membership. We have also a list of forty contributing members, many of whom were transferred from the other roll when, for various reasons, they were no longer able to attend our meetings.

Our Twelfth month meeting was enlivened by a talk from Nathan Kite on "The Industrial Problem and Its Relations to the Individual Religious Life."

As formerly, the main work of the society has been done by standing committees, seven of which have been active the past year. Of these, two have fields of labor entirely outside of Philadelphia, four work within the city limits, and one, the paper committee, spreads its beneficence far and wide. The last-named workers have distributed 72 bundles of miscellaneous reading matter to two institutions in Philadelphia—the Howard Home and a Home of Industry for Men; also to the Friends' Mission in Alaska, to a colored industrial school in Virginia, and to several invalid Friends and others in the South. Temperance leaflets have also been sent to the colored school just mentioned, at the request of its principal, and a subscription to the "Youths' Temperance Banner" has been given as formerly to the Schofield School at Aiken, South Carolina.

The committee which had for some years conducted a Boys' Club at 918 Locust Street moved their work this year because another club had been started in a settlement house next door and was patronized by the same boys. The managers of the Catherine Street House of Industry gladly gave our committee the use of two rooms for a club, and have helped and encouraged them in every way. The boys are all Italians between the ages of ten and fourteen, and the attendance varies from forty to sixty. The chairman writes: "At first many of them did not know how to play the simplest games. They are a very lively lot of children, so that to keep them in order and at the same time teach them the games was more than one small committee could do to our own satisfaction." A few boys read the periodicals which are provided for them, and three of them are learning to make hammocks. A short story is usually told them at the close of the evening. It is thought that more industrial class work would be a great addition.

Another one of our committees operates among the women of the Dorcas Society and the Catherine Street House of Industry, a branch of the Co-operative Coal Club. These needy women are urged to save even in very small amounts by means of the Starr Savings Fund. Since Twelfth month 9th, when the Dorcas Society opened for the winter, orders for coal have amounted to $101.35. Coal has been available to the club members at all times, even when many other people could not buy it at any price, and the price has been stationary—$6.65 per ton for stove and nut coal.

The kindergarten committee reports as follows:

From a roll of thirty-six in the kindergarten the average attendance has been twenty-two. Though there have been discouragements, we feel that there has come a change into the spirit of the lives of many of the homes, and frequent visits have brought about real personal contact with the mothers. When they were asked to come to the Christmas celebration one of them said: "It must cost a lot to do all that; I want to help a little"; and she gave a dollar. It seemed too much, but real joy went with the gift. She has a hard, bitter exterior, but her new action opened her heart, and many pleasant talks have been had with her since then. Another mother said: "I can't do much, but won't you let me help a little?" and she handed her mite of ten cents. Surely the Christmas spirit had entered the hearts of those women, and may it not have come through the door of the kindergarten?

For the Christmas entertainment a tree, filled with stockings and a truly Santa Claus made a happy day. The girls rejoiced over dolls, beautifully dressed by some Friends' Select School pupils.

Next in influence to the kindergarten are the clubs which meet weekly for five months. The Girls' Club has twenty-nine members. Besides playing games the girls have made scrap books with much pleasure. With some encouragement all the girls gave away their books at Christmas, mostly to sick children. Lately they have been taught to dress dolls, most of them knowing very little about sewing. Stories are told them while they work.

The older girls still have a club, under the leadership of Rachel C. Reeve, the kindergartner, in which we have no responsibility. In connection with this club we purchased a hand sewing machine by special donations, to encourage the girls to make their own clothing and to help the overworked mothers of the kindergarten children.

The Boys' Club has had a weekly attendance of from forty-five to fifty-five. The smallest boys are kept busy with kindergarten card sewing and raffia braiding, while a story is told them. Of the older boys some read and others make hammocks; but the majority play games. As the boys keep interested for a much longer time in the games than formerly, we have only had to have entertainments every other week, and though they thoroughly enjoy the magic lantern, music or story, they are satisfied to come without that being a regular part of the program. At the boys' request we have tried self-government again and it has proved a success. Our officers are called the worst boys in the neighborhood, but in the club their conduct is all that can be rationally demanded. With all the boys there has been less trouble about order than ever before.

The library is used by both girls and boys to the extent of about 432 books.

The Saving Fund is also a common good, and in two years the deposits have been doubled, in 1902 reaching the sum of $301.23.

During the Seventh and Eighth months 3,220 bunches of flowers were distributed through our weekly Flower Mission. Throngs of children came to the room for the flowers, and bunches were also given to some old people in the courts and alleys near by, as well as to the Italians in the neighborhood of Ninth and South Streets.

From month to month we feel we gain a firmer foothold, and though we cannot know, we trust that through our efforts many lives are cheered, and souls are given the needed impulse to reach out to the Highest.

Still another committee has corresponded occasionally with the Freedmen's Association's school at Christiansburg, Va., and we have made the school a gift of four pairs of blankets.

The chairman of the foreign mission committee reports that "the little mission at Tsuchiura, Japan, has been without a resident caretaker for more than a year."

Gurney Binford, or one of his co-laborers of the Friends' Missions at Tokyo and Mito, has gone to Tsuchiura each week to hold the First-day school and meeting for worship. The children are very regular in attendance at the school and much interested. Many of them have sincerely chosen to be followers of the Master.

The morning meetings have been small, but in the evening quite a large company is usually gathered to hear of Christ and His teachings.

Once a month Gurney Binford still conducts an English Bible Class for the High School boys and some of their teachers. As reported last year, this was asked for by some of the boys. About forty attend and seem thoroughly interested in the lessons.

Our last letter from Japan announces that it has been laid on the heart of B. Kida, a Japanese member of the Tokyo meeting, to go to Tsuchiura to reside in order to have more direct oversight of the work there. He seems especially qualified for the trust, and we feel confident that he will be enabled to establish and strengthen the good done there in a way that has been impossible heretofore. His wife is a Bible reader, and will gladly assist him in many ways.

Ours is the only Christian place of worship in the city, which, with the adjacent villages, contains 30,000 inhabitants, 600 of whom are students. If our society will fully occupy this rich field what a harvest may be gathered, and what blessings will follow to the society here!

This closes our glimpse of the efforts of a twelve-month and the twentieth annual report of the Earnest Workers. We feel the truth of the following lines:

"Tis justly wise to talk with our past hours,
And see what record they have borne to heaven,
And how they might have borne more welcome news."

FIFTH MONTH 31, 1903.

THE LIFE-GIVING SPIRIT.

Romans 8: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.—Rom. 8: 14.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Fifth mo. 25.—In bondage. Rom. 7: 14-25.
Third-day, Fifth mo. 26.—The Life-giving Spirit. Rom. 8: 1-14.
Fourth-day, Fifth mo. 27.—Works of the flesh. Gal. 5: 16-21.

Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 29.—The Spirit of life. 2 Cor. 3: 4-11.
Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 30.—Liberty. Gal. 5: 1-6.
First-day, Fifth mo. 31.—Excellencies of Christ. Heb. 7: 15-25.

The Epistle to the Romans, as was said in the notes on Lesson III., is one of the greatest theological treatises in the world. It was written by the apostle in the year 57 or 58, and composed at Corinth, dictated to Tertius, apparently at the house of Caius (Gaius). (Rom. 16: 22, 23.) Paul had never been to Rome, which accounts in large measure for the general treatment of doctrine and argument, and the absence of any special injunctions peculiarly fitted to a special church. The Epistle has three great divisions—Doctrinal, respecting the great thesis of the letter, Justification, or rather righteousness by faith (chaps. 1 to 12); the Practical and Hortatory (chaps. 12 to 15: 13); and the Valedictory (chaps. 15: 14 to 16: 27).

The present lesson is from the doctrinal portion, and from that part which treats of the "Christian scheme in its application to the individual."

The previous chapter (7), and the remaining verses of chapter 8, should be read. The concluding verses of the chapter are among the most eloquent and beautiful passages of the whole Bible.

1. "Therefore." To what does this word refer? Some say to the argument which concludes with the sixth verse of chapter 7. These commentators look upon verses 7-25 of chapter 7 as forming a parenthesis. Others, and most, refer the word to last verse of chapter 7. The deliverance is attained through Jesus Christ, and "therefore" the statements of chapter 8 follow. In either case it should be noted that Paul does not state that the deliverance puts an end to the conflict. It has, however, put an end to its hopelessness, and now the believer, though in the conflict, fights with an assurance of victory. Compare 1 Cor. 9: 26, 27. "No." The word in the original is very emphatic. It means that condemnation is out of the question. Paul does not mean that a man may not make mistakes, but that he who trusts in Christ will be trying to follow the law of God. The words "who walk," etc., are omitted in all the best manuscripts. They appear to have been brought in from verse 4.

2. "The law." The authority. The word has the same sense as when we speak of a "law of nature," a "law of our being," etc. "Spirit of life." The Spirit brings life, because it is itself life. "Free from the law of sin and of death." The authority, power, influence of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus is the strongest, and hence sets free from all other authority.

3. "For what the law," etc. The "law" here is evidently the moral law. The law pointed out what was wrong; it laid down rules of duty, and prescribed penalties, but it could not make men righteous. No law, however good, will ever make a people do what is right. True reformation must come by making men better. "Through the flesh." The inherent weakness of the lower part of our nature. "God," etc. Compare John 1: 1, 18; Col. 1: 13-20; Heb. 1: 1-4. "In the likeness of sinful flesh." Literally, "In the likeness of the flesh of sin." Christ was clothed in flesh like that in which sin dwells. Sin did not dwell necessarily in flesh; it invaded flesh. The incarnation of the Son of God proclaimed that the dominion of sin can and will be overthrown. "Condemned." Proclaimed the doom of.

4. "That the ordinance of the law." Revised Version. The requirements of the law. "Who walk not after the flesh." Those whose desires and purposes are not in accordance with the desires of the flesh.

5. A statement of the fact that a man's actions and life are determined by the motives which animate him. If he sets his mind on earthly things, he will do earthly things; if on heavenly, he will do heavenly things.

6. "Because the mind of the flesh is death; but the mind of the Spirit is life and peace." Revised Version. "Death" here means ultimate death of body and soul.

7. The "mind of the flesh" must be "enmity against God"; it is impossible that it should be otherwise. One cannot at the same time serve God and self.

8. "And they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Revised Version. "In the flesh" means live for the flesh.

9. "But ye." True believers. The "ye" is emphatic. "Are not in the flesh." Not under the control of the lower nature. "If so be the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." Note the "Spirit of God" and the "Spirit of Christ" are used synonymously. He is speaking of the presence of Christ in the soul by the Holy Spirit. Compare John 14: 16, 18, 20. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." This may be and often is read as meaning a spirit like that of Christ (Luke 9: 55); or it may mean the indwelling of the Holy Spirit (John 16: 17). The distinction is not important, as it is impossible to have a spirit truly like that of Christ, except by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

10. "The body is dead because of sin." There are many different opinions as to what these words mean. One of the interpretations is, "The doom entailed by sin still indeed attaches to the body, but only to the body. The body, indeed, must die, but the hold of sin upon the Christian ends." "Spirit" here seems to mean the human spirit.

11. "The present possession of the Spirit is an assurance that even in the body life shall at length triumph over death."

12. "So then brethren," etc. "We are under an obligation, not to the flesh, but to the Spirit."

13. "Ye must die." Revised Version. It is an inevitable conclusion. "Mortify." Literally, "put to death."

14. "For," etc. A repetition in a different form of verse 1. The relationship of the believer as a Son of God is more fully explained in the verses which follow.

TOPIC FOR FIFTH MONTH THIRTY-FIRST.

MISSIONS IN THE ISLAND WORLD.

Isa. 42: 10-17; 60: 8, 9.

Second-day, Fifth mo. 25.—The islands God's. Isa. 11: 11; 24: 15.
Third-day, Fifth mo. 26.—They show God's greatness. Isa. 40: 12-15.
Fourth-day, Fifth mo. 27.—They wait for God's law. Isa. 42: 1-4.
Fifth-day, Fifth mo. 28.—They shall trust Him. Isa. 51: 4-6.
Sixth-day, Fifth mo. 29.—They send missionaries. Isa. 66: 19-24.
Seventh-day, Fifth mo. 30.—Paul's island mission. Acts 13: 5-13.

The crowning glory of Israel is that out of her, came One who represented in unmistakable terms the purpose of God to save "whosoever believeth," and the prophet views the most distant regions of the earth as the objects of His grace and redemptive love. It is one of the puzzles of church history that there ever should have been a time when missionary effort could be disregarded and even opposed, yet we know that such was the prevailing condition in Christendom not many decades ago.

The islands of the Pacific presented peculiar conditions because of their smallness and their great numbers. Each little "pinhead" had its separate problem; scores of isolated and self-contained communities, with their varying customs and languages, had each to be reached. The work began before the close of the eighteenth century, and moved from point to point until it can now be said that the whole field has been covered. Yet results have varied; on one island stands a monument to a missionary with this inscription: "When he came to this island in 1848 there were no Christians; when he died in 1872 there were no heathen;" while sixty years of effort have given only a foothold on the coast of the large island of New Caledonia.

Fanciful pictures have been drawn of indolent but gentle and peacefully-disposed inhabitants whom it was a pity to disturb. Those who have lived among the islanders describe revolting cruelties and a degradation of which cannibalism is but a single feature. One missionary tells of how nearly his heart failed him as he saw the debased—almost hopeless—condition of those among whom he had gone to labor. But the triumphs of grace were but the more signal. Not only have their lives given clear proof of reformation, but “from the first the churches of the mission field accepted the responsibility of the local pastorate, and were mindful at the same time of their missionary obligation to provide pioneers for services abroad.”

Outside help, however, is still needed. The United States now controls the Philippine Islands and the Ladrões, with a population largely nominally Christian, but in as real need of missionary enlightenment as the ungospelized heathen of New Caledonia. In some respects the problems are even more difficult, as their errors have in them that modicum of truth that makes them the harder to combat. Superstition and abject fear of the friar orders hinder the work. On the other hand, it may be said that last year more than one hundred thousand copies of the New Testament or portions thereof found eager purchasers, and in various localities calls are heard for teachers and preachers of the Protestant faith.

What our own missionaries are doing and preparing in Cuba and Jamaica we know. Clearly, if the Church rises to her duty and her opportunity, the time will soon come when “the ends of the earth shall praise Him.”

A JEWISH DISCIPLE.

Never have I met any one so closely associated in my thought with the immediate disciples of our Lord as Isaac Aleuzer, of Jerusalem, who was introduced to my notice during the past winter. A young man of twenty-three belonging to a rabbinical family that has lived in the holy city since the days of the Jewish persecution in Spain, disinherited and counted as dead because of his Christian faith, and now seeking an academic and Biblical education preparatory to evangelistic work among his people in the home land, his history is one of pathetic and thrilling interest. Everything in his bearing, conversation, spirit and public service tends to inspire confidence in his sincerity and experimental knowledge of salvation through Jesus Christ.

He is at Winona Lake, Indiana, attending a Presbyterian school, and working his way, as best he can, by manual labor and lectures in adjacent towns. But he is in frail health and in need of a course of treatment. He greatly desires to go to Battle Creek Sanitarium, but their terms are quite beyond his means, the least expensive room being about $12 a week. I believe that a few weeks in this institution would be very beneficial, and also an education in hygienic living that would enable him to take better care of his health in the future. If any reader of THE AMERICAN FRIEND desires to render him assistance, and will entrust the donation to me, I will see that it is placed in his hands. “Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.”

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

There are nearly fourteen million scholars reported in the Protestant Evangelical Sabbath Schools of the United States and Canada, and there are more than six million members in the Young People's Societies of these countries.

It is the underlying aim of the Young People's Missionary Movement, which was organized by secretaries and official representatives of denominational missionary boards at Silver Bay on Lake George, last summer, to develop a deeper spiritual life and a stronger missionary spirit among these millions of Christian young people. The work of the movement is done, not independently, but through denominational missionary boards, whose representatives constitute its Executive Committee.

The Student Volunteer Movement has done a most important work in developing the missionary spirit among the 150,000 college students of the United States and Canada. It is believed that an equally important supplemental work must now be done with the vast army of young people outside of college halls.

Among the methods used in the development of this great field will be the conduct of summer conferences for leaders—a plan that has proven of inestimable value in the student work.

The first of these conferences was held last summer at Silver Bay on Lake George, attended by 168 representatives, from at least 16 different denominations. During the coming summer two conferences will be held, one on Lookout Mountain, Tennessee, Seventh month 1st to 8th, and another at Silver Bay, on Lake George, Seventh month 22d to 31st.

The purpose of these conferences is not, primarily, the incitement of missionary enthusiasm, but rather the deepening of spiritual life and missionary purpose, through Bible study and prayer, and practical training for effective leadership among young people. It is expected that the conference at Silver Bay will be attended this year by about 300 delegates, and the conference on Lookout Mountain by about 200.

Arrangements are made for combining exceptional vacation privileges with the more distinctively spiritual and missionary features of the conference. It is believed that these summer conferences will mark the beginning of a more comprehensive campaign conducted by the denominational boards during the fall and winter, and reaching the local churches throughout the United States and Canada.

In addition to the Young People's secretaries and other official representatives of Mission Boards who are expected to be present, an invitation is extended to leaders in local Sabbath School and Young People's organizations.

The forenoons of the conferences are devoted to devotional Bible study, and to consideration of methods of deepening missionary consecration among young people. The afternoons are given entirely to recreation. Vesper services are held in the evening, addressed by prominent speakers on spiritual themes.

Among the leading workers who are expected at Lookout Mountain are W. R. Dobyms, John Willis Baer, Chancellor William F. McDowell, Ira Landrith and others.

Among the speakers who are expected to be present at the Silver Bay conference are: Robert E. Speer, Chancellor Wm. F. McDowell, Messrs. John Willis Baer, S. H. Hadley, Harlan P. Beach, Luther D. Wishard, and others.

Reduced railroad and steamer rates and a combination of other favorable conditions make it possible to offer the benefits of this conference to representatives of Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies for but little more than half of what would ordinarily be the expense of such a trip.

Further information may be secured from Charles V. Vickrey, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Things of Interest Among Ourselves.

No one knows how to appreciate THE AMERICAN FRIEND more than we do, isolated, as we are, almost entirely from Christian association. Its Church news, its articles of merit, and soul-inspiring editorials combined, make it a most welcome weekly visitor.

MARTHA M. LINDLEY.

Friends' Mission, Va.

There are four Friends' Meetings in Columbus, Ohio, and each meeting owns its own property.

Margaret Willit, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, is located in Los Angeles, and is worshipping with Friends.

Anna May Pemberton, who has spent the past six months lecturing in Indiana and Ohio, is now in New York State.

Osborne B. Ong is laboring in two new meetings near Cleveland, Ohio, that have been built up largely through his ministry.

The Friends of Ohio Yearly Meeting are conducting a manual labor home for men and a rescue home for women in Cleveland.

Jesse and Cynthia Harkness are loved members and regular attenders of Alum Creek Meeting, Ohio. He is past 90 years of age and she 86.

Frederick J. Cope, who has been located at Salem, Ohio, for the past seven years, is expecting to enter the evangelistic field the coming winter.

The Universal Peace Union of Philadelphia commemorated the third anniversary of The Hague Court of Arbitration in the historic Mennonite Meeting House at Main and Herman Streets, Germantown, Philadelphia, on the afternoon and evening of the 17th inst.

Isaac Stratton has been doing faithful service the past two years in Alum Creek Meeting, Morrow County, Ohio. The meeting is growing.

Fred. Graff and wife, of Newberg, Oregon, are in Los Angeles for the latter's health. They attended the Friends' meeting at that place the 3d inst.

Sarah Caroline Hadley, of Wilmington, Ohio, attended the recent sessions of Philadelphia and Abington Quarterly Meetings, at which she had service.

A. C. Brown, superintendent of the Friends' Sabbath School in Los Angeles, has been appointed a member of the Executive Committee of the State Association for Los Angeles County.

Dr. Hodges, director of Lay Workers Courses at Union Theological Seminary, New York City, gave an address during Purchase Quarterly Meeting, New York, on "How to Study the Bible."

James Estes is located at Highland Avenue Meeting, Columbus, Ohio. Wallace Gill, a young man, who was recorded a minister a few months ago in this meeting, is laboring in the meeting at Camp Chase.

Sheik Joseph Audi, a Friend from Palestine, who has been lecturing for some weeks at Richmond and Fairmount, Ind., has gone to St. Louis, where he has charge of the Jerusalem exhibit at the World's Fair.

C. C. Hinshaw and wife, of Iowa, who were in Los Angeles the fore part of the winter, and then went to San Diego, returned to Los Angeles en route to Iowa. They expect to make Los Angeles their home in the near future.

Fred. T. Coppock and Oscar Myers, of Des Moines, Iowa, labored with excellent results in Springdale Quarterly Meeting, Kansas, during the closing weeks of Fourth month. They held meetings at Stanwood and Tonganoxie.

Both the Orthodox and Hicksite Friends at Waynesville, Ohio, are preparing to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the establishment of Miami Monthly Meeting, which occurred at Waynesville, Tenth month 13th, 1803.

Harry R. Keates, of Glens Falls, N. Y., closed a week's series of meetings at Bangor, Ia., on First-day the 3d inst. On the closing day a large and attentive audience assembled both morning and evening. The result of his labor was helpful and instructive. R. Hayes Prickett is doing excellent work at this place.

Yearly meeting of Friends for New England will be held at Portland, Me., commencing Fifth-day, Sixth month 11th, at 9 a.m., with meeting on ministry and oversight. Yearly meeting for discipline Sixth-day, the 12th, at 9 a.m. All expecting to attend or those wishing for board or room will please correspond with L. M. Douglas, Portland, Me.

M. C. Pearson, who has been laboring for some time in the meeting at Knightstown, Ind., has felt a need for a more scholarly preparation for religious service and is making preparations to take up work in the meeting at Union Springs and at the same time pursue a course of studies in the Moody Institute or the University of Chicago.

Anna M. Votaw, a minister of Richmond, Ind., has spent the winter with her invalid daughter near Mankato, Kan. On the 4th ultimo she attended Walnut Creek Monthly Meeting, held at Oak Creek. On the following day she was at the North Branch Meeting, and on Fourth-day held a meeting at Walnut Creek Particular Meeting. Her services were highly appreciated.

Stella Quarterly Meeting, Oklahoma, will be held Sixth month 5th, 6th and 7th at New Hope Meeting. Friends coming from a distance should correspond with Ernest Howard, Manchester, Okla., and buy tickets to Camchester, Okla., as that is the name of the railroad station. The members of the New Hope Meeting wish to extend an invitation to Friends to come and enjoy this season of worship and business with them, especially since it is their first privilege of having the quarterly meeting in their midst.

Hannah H. Leggett, now in her seventy-first year, is the oldest woman minister in pastoral work in New York Yearly Meeting. She and her daughter, Annie Sands Leggett, are associated together in work in Batavia Meeting, where they have been located for eight years. Hannah H. Leggett is the daughter of Lindley Murray Hoag, a well-known minister among Friends.

Joseph W. Elder, of Emporia, Kan., expects to hold meetings during the summer at different points in Kansas Yearly Meeting. These services are to be conducted in a tabernacle. All meetings desiring such labor should correspond with him in the near future, as he can arrange the circuit to better advantage if all "calls" are in early. No charges are made for services or tabernacle.

Buffalo Quarterly Meeting will be held at La Harpe, Kansas, the 22d, 23d and 24th inst. If Friends who are planning to attend will notify Samuel A. Johnson, La Harpe, Kansas, they will be met at the station. They should be careful to mention the railroad by which they expect to come, since La Harpe has two roads, the Missouri-Pacific and the Missouri-Kansas and Texas. All are gladly welcomed.

Allen Jay writes: "The proposition to establish a Biblical department at Guilford College, to be known as the Harriet Green Endowment Fund for Biblical Study, meets with my full endorsement, and I hope it will be set on foot at once. It is far better than any memorial building. It would appeal more to English Friends than any other monument. It would be more in accordance with Harriet Green's wishes also. Let the move be made."

Fourth month 19th was observed as Children's Day at Whittier, Cal. The little folks led in the singing, while the sermon was beautifully suited to them. Fifth month 3d was College Day. The decorations, including gold and purple pansies, suited the occasion. President Charles Tebbets preached the sermon. He pleaded for the college for the sake of the community, the home and the church. Over seven thousand dollars were raised on the endowment fund.

Commencement at Guilford College will be held on the 26th. Professor D. W. Dennis, of Earlham College, will make the closing address on that day. The year has been successful in many respects. The attendance has reached 218. A department for Bible study has been arranged for next year. It is believed that this will meet a need deeply felt in North Carolina Yearly Meeting. Several thousand dollars have been subscribed during the year for the increase of the endowment.

The seventeenth annual Christian Endeavor Convention of Muncie District, Ind., will be held at Portland, Sixth month 11th and 12th. Friend Endeavorers of the district will be glad to learn that Robert L. Kelly, president of Earlham College, will deliver the principal address on Sixth-day evening, the 12th. His subject is, "The Christian Endeavor Habit: Its Use and Abuse." Prof. P. P. Bilhorn, of Chicago, will direct the music. There are seven Friends' societies in the district. Every Friend will be welcomed.

The Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. in Whittier College, Cal., have been doing good work since the revival in Second month. The girls recently enjoyed a visit from Esther Hiatt, who led their meeting, and spoke on "True Womanliness." The last meeting on "Sins of Our Tongues" was very helpful. Edith Tebbets and Marjorie Little have been chosen delegates to attend the State Y. W. C. A. Conference at Capitola this month. The college students greatly enjoy the chapel talks given each week by Levi Mills.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Raisin Center, Mich., the 2d instant. George W. Willis, of Cleveland, O., who recently held a series of meetings at Newport, Ky., was present. As he has not fully recovered from a serious illness which he had while laboring in the West, he was obliged to return home soon after quarterly meeting. James Cooley, of Cleveland, O., was also in attendance, and presented the cause of the recently-established mission for men, and the Rescue Home for women. A subscription was taken for the work.

The opening for Friends in San Diego, Cal., seems clearly to be the will of the Lord, yet the means for paying for their meeting house is not yet entirely secured. A prayerful thought for this work is due from Friends, and should any be led to contribute to the cause the offering will thankfully be received by S. L. Ward, San Diego, Cal.

A unique wedding took place in the Mission Home in Gibara, Cuba, Fifth month 4th. The contracting parties had lived together as husband and wife for twenty years until several months ago, when the woman, through attending the mission services, became convinced of their sin, and refused to live thus longer without marriage. The man became very angry, refusing to comply and threatening to kill her some night. In the face of persecution and ridicule, she remained loyal to Christ and her duty and won the victory. Neither they nor the two witnesses could write. The truth searches hearts.

We have been brought to feel the seriousness of the illness of our friend, John Henry Douglas, by a personal letter written by his wife, in which she says: "He came home sick the 15th (Fourth month), and has not been out since. For several days we have had but little hope of his recovery. No one comes inside the house but the doctor. He is encouraged this morning (Fourth month 30th) for the first. For nearly two weeks he got up, dressed and came downstairs, but sat up only a little through the day. Last Seventh-day pneumonia set in. Since that there has been but little hope until this morning."

Edgar J. Sanders, of Le Grand, Iowa, and John Waldo Woody, of Guilford, College, N. C., both graduates of Friends' colleges and Student Volunteers, are expecting to spend the summer in the limits of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings in the interest of missions. They represent no special field, but in every community will endeavor to bring about greater interest in the particular missions to which the meetings are contributing. They will work to promote the knowledge of the field, and thereby bring about more efficient service. The need of such work is apparent. We feel sure Christian Endeavor Societies and missionary organizations will be glad to co-operate with these young people in the fulfillment of their concern.

BOOK REVIEW.

"The Religion of a Mature Mind," by George Albert Coe. Fleming H. Revell Company, 1902.

We have received a most helpful and valuable contribution to the literature on practical religion in a recent book by Prof. Coe, in which he discusses some of the difficulties that arise in passing out of the religion of childhood and youth into that of maturity, difficulties which are also felt by the church at large in its present stage of development.

He claims that the inertia of habit and of institution is so great as to retard progress even more than the inertia of thought systems. Yet the world movements are now such that it is impossible to stand still, and it is in helping its readers to understand and co-operate with these movements that this book has its greatest value.

He shows that the Christian life is being simplified: its ideals are being socialized; its motives are being intensified. The treatment of the right attitude toward authority in religion, and of the theological doctrines concerning the chief end of man, the right to be called a child of God and the consciousness of sin, is most illuminating, and immediately one finds a vital meaning and power for to-day.

Throughout the book there is profound sympathy for the honest doubter, and an attempt to suggest facts and motives that will appeal to such, and that, if sincerely faced and obeyed, will lead into an ever-widening vision of truth.

The two chapters on Conversion and Prayer go straight to the heart of the difficulties felt by many, and meet them in a straightforward way, pointing out that what may seem to have been lost is more than made up for in the new revelation of Christ and the Christian life. In fact, one feels throughout the whole book the strong, hopeful, living

FROM THE BENCH.

A Judge Commends Pure Food.

A Judge of a Colorado Court said: "Nearly one year ago I began the use of Grape-Nuts as a food. Constant confinement indoors and the monotonous grind of office duties had so weakened and impaired my mental powers that I felt the imperative need of something which neither doctors nor food specialists seemed able to supply.

"A week's use of Grape-Nuts twice each day convinced me that some unusual and marvelous virtue was contained therein. My mental vigor returned with astonishing rapidity; brain weariness (from which I had constantly suffered) quickly disappeared; clearness of thought and intellectual health and activity which I had never previously known were to me the plain results of a few months' use of this food.

"Unhesitatingly I commend Grape-Nuts as the most remarkable food preparation which science has ever produced so far as my knowledge and experience extends." Name and address furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Judge is right. Grape-Nuts food is a certain and remarkable brain builder, and can be relied upon. There's a reason.

faith of the author in the eternal reality of things. To him the Christian life, though it may begin with very simple act or weak motive, is to develop into an experience of God within, the eternal in the temporal. The Christ is the vital principle of everything that makes life worth living. In every duty, in every impulse to the good, in every approving voice of conscience, in everything that tends upward in our nature, we must realize that we are face to face with the kingdom of God. Its life and its law is the Christ. Because He is formed within us our very consciousness of self must come, as did His, to be habitually interfused with a sense of the presence of the Father.

"The Missionary Review of the World" for May contains a very timely article on "The Macedonian Caldron," by Dr. Henry Otis Dwight, who lived many years in Constantinople. This scene of disturbance is the "Storm Center of Europe," and an important missionary field. Dr. Dwight's clear-cut article throws much light on the situation. An important contribution to this number of the "Review" is on "The Women of India and Intellectual, Social, and Religious Reforms," by Mrs. J. T. Gracey. It shows that much progress has been made, but the evils to be remedied are still legion.

THE LAND OF MAKE BELIEVE.

Let us let the little children have their legends and their plays;
Let them keep the glad illusions of those long and happy days;
Let them know the joyous fancies of the mystic fairyland,
And the wonderful enchantments only they can understand—
For the years are coming to them when they'll sigh, and softly grieve
That they left the realm of childhood in the Land of Make Believe.

In the Land of Make Believe we used to ramble up and down
To the playing of the piper in the streets of Hamelintown;
And we saw the fairy mother make the horses rear and prance
When we rode with Cinderella to the palace for the dance;
And of evenings, you remember how we saw some one go by,
And we knew it was the Sandman, come to shut each blinking eye!

All the others—how we loved them!
How they used to come and play
Till at last they sent a message that they'd come no more, one day,
For they had to leave us lonely with our broken dreams and toys
While they staid behind in childhood with the little girls and boys,
Let us let the children have them, ere the years come when they grieve
That they ever found the highway from the Land of Make Believe!
—W. D. Nesbit, in "Chicago Tribune."

The death of Judge A. E. Maxwell, of Shipley, Fla., who has just passed away in his 83d year, is said to leave Senator Vest, of Missouri, the last survivor of the Senate of the Confederate States.

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE

He didn't have a dollar; he didn't have a dime. His clothes and shoes were looking just as though they'd served their time. He didn't try to kill himself to dodge misfortunes whacks. Instead, he got some ashes and he filled five dozen sacks. Then, next he begged a dollar. In the paper in the morn he advertised the polish that would put the sun to scorn. He kept on advertising, and, just now, suffice to say, he's out in California at his cottage on the bay.—"The Lyre."

GETTYSBURG AND WASHINGTON.

Personally-Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The battlefield of Gettysburg and the National Capital in all the glory of its spring freshness are attractions so alluring that few would feel like refusing to visit them. It is to place these two attractions within easy reach of every one that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company announces a tour over the interesting battlefield, through the picturesque valleys of Maryland, and an entertaining stay at Washington.

The tour will leave New York 8.00 a.m., and Philadelphia 12.20 p.m., Saturday, May 23d, in charge of one of the Company's tourist agents, and will cover a period of six days. An experienced chaperon, whose especial charge will be unescorted ladies, will accompany the party throughout. Round-trip tickets, covering transportation, carriage drives, and hotel accommodations, will be sold at the extremely low rate of $22 from New York, $21 from Trenton, $19 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.
